Recently we have been visited by another menace, namely, a new consul general, who was sent by Hitler to the State of California. This is the same gentleman I mentioned in the beginning of my speech. I do not want to take up too much time on that score.

However, his name is Von Killinger, and he was the man who brought about what is known as the united front between the German Nazis and the Italian Fascists. Other people helping Von Killinger are Colonel Archer, a former organizer of the K. K. K., and the German Consul at Los Angeles, George Gyssling. The swastika is being fired almost every Sunday night around Los Angeles, just like the fiery cross of the K. K. K.

Gentlemen, these are facts, and you cannot evade facts. Someone has said, "Why does not the Department of Justice do something about these things?" I have heard so much of this talk. Today almost anyone can write a letter to the Department of Justice regarding anything he sees. However, the Department of Justice is powerless when dealing with subversive activities in the United States. All the Department can do is to investigate what is going on. I do not want to criticize the Department of Justice. I think the Director of the Department and his men typify the finest and very best of our Americans. They are doing a great job. But after they find what is going on, have they the power to subpena? Have they the power to determine who is paying for all the movements in this country? Have they the power to determine how much money has been coming in and where it has been coming from? If I had a subpena I could go to certain banks and bring you evidence of millions of dollars which were sent in here for the purpose of helping these movements. The German Government and other countries refuse to pay the interest on their bonds. There are almost 700,000 American suckers, I am sorry to say, who bought bonds and have not received even the interest. Still, there are millions of dollars coming in here and money is being spent all over the world to propagandize the whole of America and the whole of Europe. I attribute the condition in Poland, where 3,500,000 people are suffering and on the slaughter block today, to the fact that Mr. Hitler got busy propagating in Poland, which is on the border of Germany. You are going to see lots of trouble over there, and you may see a nice little war, but for Heaven's sake, let us stop this condition in this country.

I do not care how much war they have, although I am against war—but let us stop the foreign agitation in this country which threatens our democracy and our people.

I am very thankful to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and each and every member of the committee for being so patient with me and so fair when they voted out my resolution. However, maybe the Members of the House doubted some of the statements I have made, or maybe my resolution was too broad, or maybe something else, because the House voted down the resolution. But what is bygone is bygone. I am not the sponsor of this resolution. The sponsor is a Member of Congress from Texas, who has given the matter study. I appeal to the Member of Congress for your help to support House Resolution 282 introduced by Congressman DIES, of Texas.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not just now.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I do not think there is a quorum here. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will not yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. This is just a friendly question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have answered so many friendly questions in this House. Some people have said many things against what I am telling you, but in their hearts they knew what was going on.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. This is a friendly statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. A friendly statement? If it is very friendly, go on and state it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I absolutely agree with many of the remarks made by the gentleman from New York this afternoon. I think there should be an investigation, not only of nazi-ism but also of communism, and every other "ism." However, the gentleman said something about politics in his preliminary remarks and mentioned the Governor of the State of New Jersey. May I say that this Nazi organization was invited to Sussex County, N. J., which happens to be in my district, by State Senator William Dolan, a Democrat. In addition to this, they got their license to sell liquor at the camp from the township committee of Andover Township. The majority of this township committee is Democratic. My statement is that while I am wholeheartedly in accord and in sympathy with the idea of the gentleman that there should be an investigation, I do say that these people were invited to the district and to that county by Democratic office holders.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I wish the gentleman had made that statement the last time I addressed the House. If you will look at the RECORD, the statement of the gentleman today and his statement the last time I spoke are not consistent. However, I am going to forgive the gentleman for what he said about my district and the Communists, and his statement that there were more Communists in my district than there were Nazis in the country. I judge that there are over 300,000 Nazis. I believe in my district in the last election there were a little over 200 votes cast for the Communists. I have no more use for the Communists than has the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman will have to admit that practically all the Communists in the last election voted for the New Deal.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not agree with the gentleman from New Jersey.

All the Communists of New York State are off of the ballot, as I stated to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS] when I made my last speech. They did not even have enough votes to get on the ballot.

Now, I want to answer the gentleman's question, and I want to be kind to Senator Dolan, but if I were a citizen of the State of New Jersey, I would demand the impeachment of Senator William Dolan and Township Committee Chairman William Curran, of Andover, N. J., and I would not care if either one of them was my best friend. If these men who claim to be Americans, in the face of the propaganda that has been going on for 4 long years, had taken any precautions, they would know that these Nazis who are penetrating into the State of New Jersey are doing so with a platform that is inimical to our form of government and contrary to our Constitution.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will yield in just a moment.

Why, one of these men said, "Who is President Roosevelt—he is just a President—he comes and goes, but unser Hitler—our Hitler in German—we have waited for him for 2,000 years to save the world."

Yes; we have waited for 2,000 years for Hitler to destroy the world.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I would like to say one more thing, if I may.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. This organization had the lease drawn up in the office of Dolan & Dolan.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I believe that is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. And I think if the gentleman can get more support for his resolution and, perhaps, get other people to get up and talk for the resolution, he will get it through, and then the citizens of the State of New Jersey will not have to ask for the impeachment of Senator Dolan.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We may do that, but I consider myself a Member of this House. I have been here for 16 years. I have tried to be courteous and fair and have tried not to make a nuisance of myself. It makes me sick to see the new United States Senator from New Jersey, who happens to be of my political faith, come out in a statement and say, "Oh, it is just a little group, and they just want a little publicity. I do not think we ought to bother them", or words to that effect. I am not quoting the exact language, but stating it in substance. He states they are looking for publicity. That Senator is asleep. He ought to wake up.

Why, only about 2 years ago there was another camp in New Jersey, in Gregorstown, N. J. The gentleman from New Jersey may know where that is. This was at a time when my good chairman the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] headed the committee. They had about 600 little children there between the ages of 4 and 12. They had been goose-stepping these children there for days, and at 2 o'clock in the morning—listen to this, as you may get a laugh out of it—they had a leader by the name of Hugo Haas, a spy and a no-good bum—at 2 o'clock in the morning he woke up these kids and said, "Dress yourselves, we have to go out on a defensive drill." They passed a cemetery and marched until early in the morning, and then the German press issued a statement through the German spy system in this country stating, "They have their children so well trained that the leader called them up at 2 o'clock in the morning and marched them by the cemetery, and they were not a bit afraid of all the tombstones in the cemetery. They were brave Nazis." The exact testimony appears at the beginning of my speech, but I call it to your attention again because of its importance.

You are inculcating that very spirit in Yankee children and the protests are coming from your district and from every district in the country.

Mr. Speaker, I have no resolution, but I will support the Dies resolution. I will support any similar resolution, and you do not have to put me on the committee. But I appeal to you in the name of your flag, in the name of your country, let us stop kissing some of these birds and do the things we talk about doing, and that goes for communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and all the other isms, whether they are in my district or in yours.

Yes, Mr. THOMAS; I appreciate your calling my attention to Mr. Dolan. As it happens, I have the certificate of incorporation of this so-called Nazi Bund, which is as follows:

GERMAN-AMERICAN BUND AUXILIARY

Purposes: Further and promote social intercourse amongst members and others who may be admitted subject to rules and limitations; to rent, purchase, or acquire by lease, deed or otherwise suitable grounds, lands, etc., and improve same by erection of buildings and construction and maintenance of proper and lawful facilities thereon or by the embellishment or betterment of same in any proper and lawful manner or by rendering them more fit for or adaptable to the purposes of recreation, entertainment, and social intercourse aforesaid. Also to said end, to let or license the use of any property, land, etc., it being understood that enumeration of subordinate purposes for accomplishment of major purpose shall not be held or taken to diminish any right or power given to corporation by legislature.

Principal office, 925 Danielson Street, North Bergen.

Registered agent, August Klapproth.

Number of trustees is eight.

Names of trustees for first year are: Matthias Kohler, 130 Linden Avenue, Irvington, N. J.; August Klapproth, 925 Danielson Street, North Bergen, N. J.; Herman V. Busch, 881 South Seventeenth Street, Newark, N. J.; George Reupert, 233 Washington Place, Cliffside Park, N. J.; Willy Ludtee, 52 Barbour Street, Haledon, N. J.; Edward Mattias, 695 Midland Avenue, Garfield, N. J.; Henry Siebert, Cloverdale Avenue, Paramus, N. J.; Fritz Kuhn, 178 East Eighty-fifth Street, New York City.

No one can become a member unless he shall be an officer of the volunteer organization k1/a German-American Bund, or some local division thereof in good standing, and board of trustees may limit membership by prescribing that to become or remain a member, the member must hold office of some designation or specified degree or kind in said German-American Bund, and that when said member shall cease to hold such office he shall cease to be a member of this corporation. The trustees shall have the right and power to determine qualifications of the members and whether one has ceased to be a member.

Signed 3/22/37 Filed 3/25/37.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. CITRON]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Nazis told the American people they were American citizens and had a right to have a camp. I do not blame them. They do have a right to have a camp.

They can have their fun, they can do what they please within the law, but every one of the 21 camps in this country is based on the philosophy of a government that is not in the interest of our Government. The smuggling in of arms, propaganda, and uniforms, which have been coming in by the thousands, and all of this goose-stepping and parading with the swastika, the black flag, and the red flag must stop; and it will, if I have to stand on this floor every day in the week. My friends, we cannot get away from it. We are facing a too serious problem. I suppose some of you have read the book It Can't Happen Here, but it can happen here. I have heard Congressmen say that it cannot happen here, but it is here. It reminds me of the story of the lawyer who told his client that he could not be arrested for doing a certain thing. The client finally called him from the jail and said to him, "You told me that I could not be arrested if I did that", and the lawyer said, "Certainly not", only to be answered by his client, "But I am in jail now." Let us have a complete investigation. Every decent, law-abiding American who loves his country and his Constitution wants this investigation. There is not a single word in the charter of the "German-American Bund Auxiliary" about America or its principles. You have to be a Nazi; you have to be a Hitler-100 percent Nazi; you have to be a Fascist in order to belong to any one of their 21 camps.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on, and I ask you in the name of America to support any resolution that will bring about a cleaning of house, which is needed at this time so that proper laws may be passed to protect us from this evil. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CITRON). Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] for 15 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AS RELATED TO SCRAP IRON AND NEUTRALITY

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, for two decades the world has whetted its appetite for peace only to have the pangs of hunger increase before a barren table onto which are shoved international incidents, armament races, and preparations for war. In the Sermon on the Mount the people were asked if they would give their sons a stone when they cried for bread, and today this Congress may draw a parallel by searching the activities of this Nation to determine the part we are playing in contributing to war at a time when the world is crying for peace.

Battleships, cannons, rifles, tanks, shot, and shell are prohibited under our neutrality regulations from being shipped to countries where a state of war is declared to exist. But there is nothing to prevent us shipping materials for the manufacture of these and other implements of war to the European countries over which the red laughter of the war gods may be heard to reverberate.

I refer specifically to our exports of scrap iron and scrap steel. I call to your attention the fact that in the month of May of this year as much scrap iron and steel was exported as is equal to the annual average of the past 11 years.

A few weeks ago I placed before this House a bill which would place the export of these scraps under the control of the Secretary of Commerce and providing a ban on their shipment to warring nations.

A few days ago there was introduced in both Houses of Congress a joint resolution asking for the appointment of a joint committee to study this growing problem of exports of scrap iron and steel exports. I hope this body will realize fully the need of some serious study on this question both from the standpoint of peace and from the standpoint of conservation of our own scrap-iron resources and agree to the appointment of such a committee.

BLACKSMITHS OF MARS BUSY

The Nations of Europe are beating paths to every junk yard in America and the countryside is again being combed as the blacksmiths of Mars work overtime hammering the plowshares into swords and the pruning hooks into spears. But today's version of the Scriptural reference is not confined to plowshares and pruning hooks. Railroad iron, car wheels, ship plates, automobile frames, broken stoves, old iron beds, and a thousand and one things commonly called "junk" are being siphoned from American back yards into the roaring furnaces of Europe and Japan.

You have merely to stand on the corner outside of this Capitol building late some afternoon to witness a rumbling cargo of junk bound for Europe by way of American junk yards.

Across the street from our own Washington Navy Yard you will see a large sign bearing the words "Scrap iron wanted—Highest prices paid." This sign is only a stone's throw distance from our navy yard which may someday have great need for this metal in preparing for the defense of our own shores. We have no way of knowing what percentage of these scrap exports are melted and poured into the cannon and shell molds of the munitions factories of Europe. It is no secret among the scrap-iron men that much of this junk finds its way into implements of war. Neither do we have any assurance that this junk discarded by Americans will not someday be sent back to us in a cloud of black smoke from a roaring gun to wreak destruction on our own shores.

The time is ripe to consider these things.

Since the 1st of January of this year our scrap-iron exports to foreign nations have increased by hundreds of percent. Over 630,000 tons of scrap iron and scrap steel were exported in the month of May alone. If this drain continues on our natural resources there will be need for alarm.

So large has this enterprise of shipping scraps to foreign nations become, that one group has seen fit to take advantage of the Webb-Pomerene Act which grants exemption from the antitrust laws under certain conditions to an association engaging solely in export trade. A few weeks ago there was organized the Scrap Export Associates of America, which has complied with the regulations of the Federal Trade Commission to commence exporting scrap iron and steel. Hiram Winternitz, Jr., of New York, is president and governor of this association, and the other members are Charles Dreifus Co., of Philadelphia, and Robert Joseph and the Schiavone-Bonomo Corporation, both of New York City. I am advised this group will deal in American scrap with the European cartels.

JAPAN BIGGEST BUYER OF UNITED STATES SCRAP

All through the depression, one nation in particular has been a good customer at American junk yards. I refer to Japan, whose cheap-labor products may be found on the counters of practically every city, town, and hamlet of this Nation. She has purchased our scraps, melted them into her own products, and then shipped them here to compete with the efforts of American workmen—and all at a nice profit to herself.

In one week alone recently 6,800 tons of scrap iron and scrap steel left the port of Boston bound for Japan.

A recent Minerals Yearbook, a publication of the Bureau of Mines, contains this statement:

> By far the most conspicuous among iron and steel products exported in 1934 was scrap, which totaled 1,835,564 gross tons, of which 1,168,496 tons went to Japan.

In 1933, the previous year, Japan took 547,537 tons of our total scrap exports of 773,406 tons.

Japan alone has taken away from this country in the first 4 months of this year as much scrap iron as the entire world did in 1933.

Purchases of American scrap by the United Kingdom jumped from 3,585 tons in January of this year to 32,441 in April; Japan jumped from 33,246 in January to 278,580 in April; Germany's purchases jumped from 1,719 in January to 6,856 in April; and Italy bought 9,175 tons in January and 21,691 tons in April.

The export scrap tonnage of the United States by months for the first 5 months of the year follows: January, 68,884 tons; February, 143,197 tons; March, 355,979 tons; April, 421,383 tons; and May, 630,671 tons.

CONSERVATION AN ISSUE

The effect of these export shipments on world peace is only one of three phases of this great question about which we should concern ourselves.

The second is the question of our own natural resource of this particular type. In event we must some day defend our own shores, in the face of these continuing exports, will there be sufficient scrap iron left for our own needs?

Several groups of the steel industry have expressed alarm at these mounting exports. Earlier this year, when several bills were introduced seeking to control scrap exports, an interdepartmental committee was appointed to investigate the question.

Secretary Hull at that time expressed the belief that—

> The export movement of scrap has created no emergency situation, and there is no actual or prospective shortage of scrap.

Oddly enough, the two departments most vitally interested—the War Department and the Navy Department—were not members of the Secretary's interdepartmental committee.

OLIVE BRANCHES AND SCRAP IRON

Ten days ago, when a new emergency appeared in the Sino-Japanese relations, Secretary of State Hull heralded to the world the proclamation that—

> This country constantly and consistently advocates maintenance of peace.

As this statement was being prepared, thousands of tons of American scrap iron were being loaded at American ports for shipment to Japan, and other ships loaded with similar cargoes were headed for Japan from our shores.

The Secretary of State waves the olive branch to the world in one hand and with the other hand he holds back restrictive action that would prevent American scrap metal being molded into implements of war for use in such skirmishes as the Sino-Japanese incidents which so upset the world.

During the month of May Japan increased her purchases of American scrap metal by 1,300 percent compared to January of this year. During May export scrap shipments amounted to 443,251 tons and in January 33,246 tons.

Recently the Associated Press reported that the Japanese war ministry had submitted a 5-year defense program involving the expenditure of over two and a half billion dollars and that much of this would be spent in developing aviation and shipbuilding.

In the face of these ever-mounting scrap-iron exports how long will the balance of the world recognize the United States as an advocate of peace?

Replying to congressional demands for a curb on scrap-iron exports the Secretary of State says "the disadvantage of direct and indirect restrictive action would outweigh possible advantages."

In the face of existing wars and pending wars this statement of the Secretary's is not consistent with his advocacy of world peace.

I fully realize the Secretary is not only an ambitious man but a jealous man when the trade policies of the Nation are involved, and he could be expected to frown upon an export policy for scrap iron which might bring objection from one of our trade nations. One wonders whether he had that in mind when he stated in his report on one of the pending scrap-iron bills "its analysis, furthermore, indicates that the disadvantages of direct and indirect restrictive action would outweigh the possible advantages."

SCRAP FOR TRADING

The Secretary naturally wears his trading clothes at all times, and it is possible he had in mind something similar to the thought expressed in a recent issue of a steel magazine that "scrap has been assuming an increasingly important position in the world markets, not only for domestic use but as an article of international trade."

Perhaps scrap iron and steel will be traded off in the next trade agreement the Secretary negotiates.

With all respect to the Secretary of State and his statement, I find there is disagreement to his opinion as to shortage of scrap. I have been unable to learn upon what the interdepartmental committee based its opinion that there is no shortage and no prospective shortage.

NO STATISTICS AVAILABLE

The Central Statistical Board, which was created by action of this Congress to coordinate Federal, public, and private statistical services, has advised me that "as far as we have been able to determine, there are no data on the total supply of scrap available. The supply of scrap offered to users is highly elastic, varying directly with changes in price and with changes in business conditions, particularly in heavy industries. There is no way of telling, however, how much will come out onto the market with changes in price and business."

If the Government's own clearing house for statistics has been unable to produce data on the total supply of scrap available, it would be interesting to learn the formula followed by the interdepartmental committee in reaching its conclusion that there is no threatened shortage of scrap.

The third phase of this question that is extremely important in my mind is the effect these enormous export shipments have on American labor conditions. When this Congress is asked to spend millions of dollars in an attempt to relieve unemployment we should also take some steps to prevent man-hours being shipped abroad. Millions of man-hours are lost in the United States every year through exportation of scrap iron instead of steel.

PROTECT AMERICAN LABOR

We should give consideration to the protection of the American workingman to the point that we make it possible for him to wring out every last man-hour dollar in a piece of goods before it leaves our shores. Under present export conditions American labor derives little labor from scrap-iron shipments to foreign countries. Melting the scraps is done in the furnaces of Europe while many American steel workers are idle. Enough man-hours of labor are tied up in our annual scrap-iron exports to supply 50,000 persons work for 1 year if the scraps were melted into steel and steel products in this country.

The United States Department of Labor has estimated that there are 53 man-hours in the production of a ton of finished steel products. Based on a nominal wage, the scraps exported last year could have been melted and finished in this country and added $53,000,000 to American pay rolls.

Mr. Speaker, this matter is entitled to most serious study. We should determine whether we desire to continue to dump American scraps into the bloody scraps of Europe; whether we desire to provide American workers, in this hour of low production and unemployment, with every hour of employment possible; and whether we desire to conserve this natural resource.

OUR COMPLEX ECONOMIC ORGANISM

From day to day we on this floor discuss more or less the factors, forces, and institutions as they affect the level of individual possessions of our people, or, as some term it, the standard of living of the mass of our citizens. A brief definition of the New Deal was that it would be a program in which Government would proceed to convert itself into an instrument or mechanism or tool for social control and social progress. The complex economic and political machine of our limited constitutional democracy has been and is undergoing profound changes. Static thought or fixed doctrines or eternal principles will give little relief these days when the human institutions which we are creating throughout the world, and at such a rapid rate, bring to us from minute to minute and hour to hour such startling changes in the world of both economics and political science. In this House and on this floor it is our duty to consider the operation of the political and economic system of the United States as a whole and as it relates to the welfare of all our people, irrespective of what work or walk of life in which they may be engaged. Group pressure here is very great. Powerful demands are being made upon Government. The measure of our statesmanship depends upon our ability to rise above "locale" when sweeping measures and developments are taking form and when we must discuss and act upon broad measures the consequence of which will in no wise be localized.

TRAGIC NEED FOR PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND GOODS FOR OUR PEOPLE

Now, Mr. Speaker, for many years prior to 1929 the peoples of the earth devoted great effort to the production of raw material, to manufacturing, and to exchange of goods among the nations of the world. During the last 3 or 4 years we have had occasion to see what happened between 1929 and 1937. Even since January 1 of the current year we have seen startling developments in our own country, and in what might be termed a labor revolution. Our thought has been diverted away from the extremely low production of goods to the battle going on between certain elements for a greater share of that small amount which is produced.

The decline in the production of raw material, manufacturing, and volume of world trade is positively startling. Even without considering the increase in population the situation would be most discouraging to those interested in a high standard of living. There can be no high standard of living for our people in the United States until we get back into the "production of those goods which are consumed in the enjoyment of modern life." For that production we must have modern and efficiently operated machinery. Without this there can be no effective wage increase, giving our people the power to buy more of the consumption goods they so much desire. If wages are to be increased, then technological advancement and production must go along with the greater wage, otherwise prices will continue to advance as rapidly as wages, and the worker will have no greater buying power. To have the modern machinery, it must be produced. We must go into the factories built years ago, remodel them, remove the obsolete machinery contained therein, and install machinery designed in keeping with discoveries made by modern science in laboratory and other fields of research and application. Not stopping there, we must proceed to place in operation—and it must first be manufactured in the form of lumber, brick, cement, machinery, pipe, tile, wire, steel, roofing, plumbing, and so forth, and then brought together into a completed whole—additional productive capital sufficient to conform to the needs of the increased population. Then, after having repaired the 1929 plant—which has since depreciated and deteriorated—and having built new plants for production in keeping with the needs of the increased population, it will be necessary for us to operate those factories, machines, and equipment on a level as great as production was being turned out prior to the crash in 1929—in order to provide the standard of living then enjoyed. God knows it was then far below what our people deserve and expect.

Following the 1929 debacle and after our people had to such a staggering extent lost confidence in our business management, in our banks, and in our industrial system generally, they still retained confidence in the Federal Government. In the spring of 1933, in response to the voice of the people, the Federal Government began its program for social reform and economic change. Since that date the Federal debt has been increased by the billions of dollars. Most every kind of a Federal credit agency conceivable has been placed in operation. Far-reaching social reforms have been attempted. But the fact remains that in spite of all of this Government debt increase, the social reforms that have been enacted and the immeasurable activity on the part of Government generally, production is still far below what it was in 1929, and for that reason a low standard of living prevails throughout the land with millions ill-nourished, ill-housed, ill-clothed. This will continue to be the case until production of consumption goods far exceeds that of 1929—and that seems to be far away under the present program.

Wages have been increased in some units of industry and to certain definite groups. But prices have had to advance. I repeat, that if technological advances and production remain behind the wage increases, then effective purchasing power of wages will be less than at present, and that means disappointment for those involved in the wage structure.

LOSS OF CONFIDENCE IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WILL MEAN WHAT?

Mr. Speaker, confidence once lost is most difficult to regain whether it involves an individual, banking, a political party, or the form of Government under which a people live. Our people want more of the comforts of life, capable of production in this country under and through modern means. For more than 4 years they have been taught to believe these comforts were "just around the corner and that the New Deal would bring them forth." The agencies of Government have been multiplied, billions have been spent, taxes will have been increased, overhead costs will have been greatly expanded. I ask, where is the production? Where are the goods? Where is the productive capital to make the production possible?

MILLIONS OF WORKERS AND BILLIONS OF WORK HOURS NEEDED

Mr. Speaker, the productive capital cannot be brought into operation without the assistance of armies of creative workers. Russia knows this, so does Italy and Germany. Industrial America knows it as well as anyone. Members of this House know it but at times it appears we forget it. Does any man here dare take this floor and say we can produce the goods our people expect today with the limited plants, machinery, and workers we have in operation today? If any man dare take such a position, let him submit proof. Can wage dollars be brought forth from any kind of a hat filled with rabbits other than the hat of production and the rabbits of consumption goods and durable goods? If effective wage dollars can be otherwise created, let them begin to flow now before it is too late. If with less machinery, less men employed and less hours of creative work we can produce more goods now with an increased population than we did in 1929 and have it all result in a greater quantity of consumers goods for our people, a higher living standard, the formula has not yet been expounded or made known.

The philosophy that we should put more people to work by further reducing the number of creative hours of work per day in order to make more jobs available is rampant today. Most of those who advocate this philosophy contend that workers should not be engaged in industry more than, say, 30 hours per week. The big fight is to cut the weekly work hours from around 44 or 48 down to 30 in "order to make more jobs." Seldom do you hear anything said about "producing more goods in order to make more jobs available and to provide a higher standard of living for our people through the supply of more finished goods for consumption."

I certainly have no quarrel with short hours. The fact I am trying to drive home is that "goods are not being produced." And furthermore, we do not have, at this hour, sufficient machinery, buildings, and other productive capital which together with the available man power working, say, 48 hours per week to produce the amount in quantity of finished goods required to furnish our present population with a decent standard of living.

CHOOSE ONE OF THREE ROADS

Mr. Speaker, let us now go back to scrap. I repeat that it presents a three-way problem which involves (1) the relation of export scrap to world peace, (2) the preservation of the natural resource for use in our own processing and manufacture of finished goods, and (3) utilizing our own man power to convert the scrap into finished raw material such as pig iron or other semi-finished or finished goods "before" export takes place.

If scrap is to be exported for use by foreign countries in the prosecution of war against some other country—even the United States if they choose—then let us convert it before export. If it is to be conserved here for home use in the production of consumer goods for our own people, then let us stop the export. Having acted to prevent the export, then let us proceed to remove millions of men from relief rolls, where they are engaged in nonproductive enterprise, and divert their energy to the job of rebuilding, repairing, and remodeling that portion of the 1929 industrial plant which has not been brought into use; and with that step out of the way, then let those same millions of men take their places in those rejuvenated industrial plants and proceed with the production of finished goods for our people. We should not stop there. Without further delay we should proceed with the building of new and modern plants equipped with the most efficient machinery possible for engineers to design. Those new plants can, in turn, be placed in production for the benefit of our people.

Proceeding on such a program would, within a very few months consume millions of tons of scrap. Men would be absorbed away from relief rolls. Government relief would rapidly decline, and we would have some chance of placing the Federal Budget on a sound basis and, following that, our people could get a conception of what their burden is to be from the standpoint of taxation.

ILL-CLAD, ILL-NOURISHED, ILL-HOUSED

Ill-timed, ill-conceived, and ill-informed legislation and economic procedure in the absence of increased production of consumer goods will not remove the low living standard of our people. Only goods that can be consumed by our people in the form of clothing, bedding, meats, fiber, milk and products, lumber, cement, plumbing, and the other thousand and one things which our modern life demands and expects in America will remove the physical and material poverty about which the President has so bitterly complained.

The 840,000 Government employees—the largest number since the last year of the last war—engaged in running the emergency and permanent agencies of the Federal set-up will not provide the consumption goods for our people. A Federal deficit of more than $14,000,000,000 during the past 4 years has not produced the goods for our people. Increased Federal taxes in the form of indirect assessments of billions of dollars has not brought forth the goods.

Congress continues to create Government agencies of most every kind and description, but poverty still governs. Every day we are supplied with absolute proof that the Government is not able to care for the people and that the people must support what Government there is. In this land of privately owned farms, shops, factories, stores, and livestock, where men work, save, accumulate, and manage privately owned property, we will soon learn that our Government was primarily created for and in a form that encourages such procedure. We will also learn that unless our Government continues to protect private individuals in their daily pursuits and in a manner which encourages the production and distribution of goods for the benefit of the people, the people will lose faith in the Federal Government and seek some other type of control. It is the duty and the responsibility of Congress to prevent such a collapse. The surest way to preserve the faith of our people and to have their support for our form of government is to let them have homes, farms, factories, livestock, and goods they can call their own and manage in their own way. Then, Mr. Speaker, our people so situated will be willing to fight for the preservation of the limited constitutional form of government which we have enjoyed in years gone by. [Applause.]

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. What effect is this exporting of scrap having on the market here at home?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The price has increased. I believe last Friday it was $20.50 a ton. Of course it has gone up by leaps and bounds.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with the extension of my remarks I may incorporate certain short memoranda dealing with the corporation names, propaganda agencies, stool pigeons, and spies working in the United States.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 27, 1937

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 22, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, July 26, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CONDOLENCE ON DEATH OF SENATOR ROBINSON

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Tulsa City and County (Okla.) Democratic Precinct Organization expressing its deepest sympathy and regret upon the occasion of the death of Hon. Joseph T. Robinson, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas, which was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate nos. 93 and 95 to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6906) to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 4543. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to exempt vessels arriving for the purpose of taking on ship's stores and certain sea stores from the requirement of formal entry; and

H. R. 7642. An act to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2067. An act to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer; to establish the National Cancer Institute; and for other purposes; and

H. R. 2093. An act for the relief of Marion Shober Phillips.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, in view of the importance of the bill that is to come before the Senate this morning, I ask for a roll call, in order to secure the presence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], who are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is detained in New York in attendance upon the funeral of an intimate friend, Mr. Anning S. Prall.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CONSTRUCTION OF AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, after consideration the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs feel that it would be better to concur in the amendments of the House to the bill. Therefore, I ask that the amendments of the House be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, which were, on page 1, line 8, after "follows", to insert "at a total cost for all vessels of not more than $50,000,000", and on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 2. Not less than 50 percent of the vessels herein authorized, allocated on an approximate tonnage basis, including such portions thereof as are customarily manufactured in Government plants, shall be constructed or manufactured in Government navy yards, naval stations, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States: Provided, That the President may, however, should the public interests in his judgment so require, have the vessels built in Government or private yards notwithstanding the allocation otherwise imposed: Provided further, That the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 496), as amended, are hereby made applicable to contracts for the construction of the vessels or any portion thereof herein authorized.

SEC. 3. Any bid for the construction on the Pacific coast of any of the vessels authorized by this act shall have a differential of 6 percent in its favor which shall be considered by the Secretary of the Navy in awarding contracts for the construction of said vessels.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITION AND MEMORIALS

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by Branch 116 of the Workmen's Circle, of New Rochelle, N. Y., endorsing the so-called Schwellenbach resolution, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) favoring employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Tonawanda, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation to establish seven regional planning boards and seven regional conservation authorities, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Tonawanda, N. Y., protesting against ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 4543. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to exempt vessels arriving for the purpose of taking on ship's stores and certain sea stores from the requirement of formal entry; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 7645. An act to authorize appropriations for construction and rehabilitation at military posts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6338) to fulfill certain treaty obligations with respect to water levels of the Lake of the Woods, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 960) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 7387. A bill for the relief of Cecile C. Cameron (Rept. No. 961); and

H. R. 7512. A bill to amend the act approved March 26, 1934 (Rept. No. 962).

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which were referred the following resolutions, reported them each without amendment:

S. Res. 137. Resolution to investigate certain activities of the American Cotton Cooperative Association in connection with the marketing of cotton financed by the Federal Government; and

S. Res. 158. Resolution to provide for an investigation of agricultural commodity prices, of an ever-normal granary for major agricultural commodities, and of the conservation of national soil resources.

FEES IN RECEIVERSHIP, BANKRUPTCY, ETC., PROCEEDINGS

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (S. 2849) to prohibit certain agreements fixing fees or compensation in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceedings, which was read twice by its title and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 26, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 534. An act granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River;

S. 1067. An act for the relief of Asa J. Hunter;

S. 1143. An act for the relief of G. L. Tarlton;

S. 1144. An act for the relief of the Frazier-Davis Construction Co.; and

S. 2521. An act to authorize the assignment of officers of the line of the Marine Corps to assistant quartermaster and assistant paymenter duty only, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2847) for the relief of the Columbia Boat & Barge System, Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 2848) creating the Owensboro Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, Ky.; to the Committee on Commerce.

(Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported original Senate bill 2849, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2850) for the relief of Charles B. Chrystal; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 2851) to authorize the reservation of minerals in future sales of lands of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(Mr. DUFFY introduced Senate bill 2852, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. McADOO:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) providing for the participation of the United States in the continuing international exposition to be known as Pacific Mercado, to be held in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., commencing in the year 1940, and in the year 1942 commemorating the landing of Cabrillo, and for other reasons; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 187) authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate in the continuing international exposition, to be known as Pacific Mercado, to be held in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., commencing in the year 1940, and in the world's fair to be held in connection therewith in the year 1942, commemorating the landing of Cabrillo; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—AMENDMENT

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ACTIVITIES OF AMERICAN COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution (S. Res. 137) to investigate certain activities of the American Cotton Cooperative Association in connection with the marketing of cotton financed by the Federal Government, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION

Mr. RUSSELL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 159), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 57, Seventy-fifth Congress, agreed to February 10, 1937, authorizing the Committee on Immigration to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,400 per annum during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

CREATION OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present to the Senate a study prepared by Dr. George J. Schulz, Director of the Legislative Reference Service, on the Creation of the Judiciary. This study is based partly on the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of 1787, and contains in an appendix material collected from other sources. I think it most appropriate that it be printed as a Senate document, and I submit it to the Senate for reference to the Committee on Printing for that purpose.

In submitting this study prepared by Dr. Schulz, I cannot refrain from a commendation of his industry and his devotion to duty. Most Senators know him either personally or in his capacity as Director of the Legislative Reference Service, the efficiency of that Service having materially increased since he became its Director 2 years ago. I am informed that during the past year he has responded to almost 4,800 inquiries from Members of the Congress, in contrast to the 2,300 inquiries which were responded to in 1935, the year prior to his administration.

I think the Congress is most fortunate in having him at the head of the Legislative Reference Service, and I think that by virtue of his sincerity, his loyalty, his honesty, and his efficiency he has merited the good will of all Members of the Congress.

I request that this study be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to its being printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REHABILITATION OF AGRICULTURE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR M'GILL

[Mr. NEELY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of farm-surplus legislation, delivered by Senator MCGILL on Monday, July 26, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a portion of a statement made by James H. Patten on May 26, 1937, before the Committee on Immigration of the House of Representative, on the subject of further restriction of immigration, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRANSPOLAR AVIATION FLIGHTS

[Mr. SCHWELLENBACH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Sidney Olson, published in the Washington Post of Sunday, July 25, 1937, relative to recent transpolar aviation flights, which appears in the Appendix.]

MONOPOLY AND WEALTH CONCENTRATION—ARTICLE BY HON. CHARLES H. MARCH

[Mr. SHIPSTEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Monopoly and Wealth Concentration World Problem", by Hon. Charles H. March, member of the Federal Trade Commission, published in the Washington Star, July 11, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

BONNEVILLE PROJECT, OREGON—RECOMMITTAL OF BILL

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I am suffering from some embarrassment in connection with a bill reported by me a few days ago from the Committee on Commerce and now on the Senate Calendar, being Senate bill 2092, to provide machinery for the administration of the Bonneville Dam located on the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington.

The bill as reported contains a wholly unrelated amendment affecting the Boulder Canyon project, which is between the Nevada and Arizona line on the Colorado River. I am not at all concerned about the amendment so far as it affects the Colorado River, though the original bill which was introduced by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], my colleague the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], and myself, related entirely to the Bonneville project. The amendment, comprising the last section of the bill as reported, relates to and has some concern with the modification of contracts now existing between the users of water and power at Boulder Canyon.

When I reported the bill from the committee it was my understanding, from discussions with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that the Senators representing the seven States whose waters flow into and make up the Colorado River were in entire agreement on this amendment. At the hearing last week the Committee on Commerce, of which the able Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is chairman, after considering the matter, authorized me to report the bill. I did so with section 14 in the bill, believing it to be the product of a general agreement among the Senators representing the States of the Colorado River Basin.

Now, I am told it was the understanding of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] that hearings were to be held on the proposed amendment. I do not want to be in the attitude of reporting a bill as to which promises were made that hearings were to be had, especially when the proposed amendment does not concern the subject matter of the bill in which I am interested.

The only way out of the dilemma, if it be one, of course, would be to ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce in order that Senators interested may have an opportunity to file their objections or state them orally before the committee.

I address these remarks to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who have been actively interested in the particular amendment, either favoring it or opposing it. I want to have the bill in such shape that when the calendar is called it may be passed. A bill similar to the Senate bill passed the House yesterday. The particular amendment in question was brought up in the House and after debate was defeated. I have played the part of a big brother in trying to carry this load, only upon the theory that it would expedite legislation on an entirely unrelated project. I do not want the amendment to embarrass the enactment of legislation relating to a project in which I am so deeply interested.

With that statement I should like to have a determination reached as to what course we should pursue. It is my opinion that to meet the situation it would be fair to all concerned that the bill be recommitted to the Commerce Committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MCNARY. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Oregon has made a statement expressing certain views. I did not hear all of his statement. However, I was informed that Representative SCRUGHAM, of Nevada, and Representative LEWIS of Colorado, who are quite active in the matter, made the statement that they did not intend to make any fight upon the so-called Boulder Dam amendment.

I wish to say further that I do not agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon that the amendment deals with an unrelated subject. I think it is vitally connected with the subject matter of the bill. The bill relating to the project in Oregon is most drastic in that it provides for the lowest power rates of which I know. Practically one-third of the cost of that project——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not yield for a speech on the Boulder Canyon project. I insist that it is an unrelated subject, and I stand on that proposition. I wish to know what are the views of Senators concerning immediate action to be taken.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Oregon having cut off the Senator from Nevada from any further statement, I may say there will not be any immediate action taken.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senators interested from the Boulder Dam standpoint whether the bill as it comes from the House meets rather satisfactorily the wishes of the Senator from Oregon regarding the Bonneville Dam?

Mr. McNARY. I think so, with possibly one or two qualifying amendments. In substance it is exactly the same as the Senate bill, except that it does not contain the amendment relating to Boulder Canyon, which was defeated yesterday in the House.

I think we can settle the matter. There is a perfect understanding at the present time between the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and myself. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2092) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Commerce Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Is it the desire that the similar House bill, being House bill 7642, be referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. McNARY. No; I think it should go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well. If there is no objection, the House bill will be placed on the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I submit an inquiry, because it is necessary for me to have a meeting of my committee to take up the matter? Which bill is to be left on the calendar, the bill as it came from the Committee on Commerce or the House bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The House bill will remain on the calendar. The Senate bill has been recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the similar bill which has just come from the House remain on the calendar or will it be referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. McNARY. I asked that it remain on the calendar to await decision of the committee on the Senate bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

THE FOREIGN DEBT SITUATION—THE QUESTION OF THE UNITED STATES ACCEPTING 50 PERCENT OF THE DEBT AS PAYMENT ANSWERED

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, were it not for the colloquy which has just taken place, I should feel very reluctant to inject some views into the parliamentary situation, and thus disturb what might be called the harmony of the situation. The opportunity presenting itself, however, I am enabled to express in a few words some views upon a subject not unfamiliar to the Senate.

We are all conscious that the great bard has put in the mouth of the philosopher the statement that—

> More than a little is by much too much.

It may be I have dwelt on the subject I now take up "much too much." Still I venture further.

Mr. President, we are attracted by the public announcement that there is pending a proposal, either from the Government of England to the United States or here in the State Department as having been received from the debtors of the United States, suggesting a further reduction of their indebtedness to America by 50 percent. When it is recalled that oftentimes reductions have been had, and that the final net results to America have been zero, I am unable to understand upon what basis the suggestion is now made to repeat that confusing farce upon the American public.

I take the liberty, in the time I am now to occupy, of inviting attention to the fact that there is now a move afoot in America to obtain a loan in behalf of the large interests of our friendly Government of England, who are likewise our debtors. Out of that loan it is assumed that a small percentage of it is to be paid upon the interest due to the United States.

With that amount of interest being paid, it is assumed it will be at least the basis for the assumption of a further cancelation of the debt to our country. That there is foundation for this is evidenced by the fact that the chief paper of Mussolini, Il Popolo, publicly declared that there would be more chatter about this debt, something more with respect to payment, but, as usual, it would end with nothing done and nothing paid.

I am exceedingly interested to know, my brother Senators, how down at Rome they should have had the knowledge of what was transpiring either in action or in suggestion from England if it had not been communicated. I am more interested to ask myself how it would have been communicated if it had not had foundation in fact.

Mr. President, there is before us some history to which we are compelled to allude at this moment. England has allowed France a billion dollars ostensibly for stabilizing the franc. In the meantime, France transfers part of this money to allies, a portion to Poland for the sustenance of her military strength, a sum to Syria to enable Syria to maintain the government which entered into what may be stated to be a suzerainty under France, yielding itself to obedience of any orders which may come from France.

In the meantime, Mr. President, we are interested to note that both countries—England and France—have received from Germany certain forms of payment, in addition England being favored with payments from Canada, and all if not in cash in forms of security which are to be transferred for the uses of the treasuries both of France and of England. I respectfully assert, from the amount that is suggested from sources which can be relied upon, that if these two debtors will pay the United States 10 percent of what they are receiving from their debtors, it will pay 1 percent of the interest that is now due the United States. I respectfully say to these distinguished debtors and to their representatives that so far as my limited voice may veto, there will be no cancelation of this debt; and from this honorable body I am sure there will be no approval of the reduction further of another 50 percent after we have had seven different meetings and seven different reductions. The time has come when we should assert our position as demanding our rights. America has been yielding too far to maintain the respect of the nations of the world.

I thank the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] for allowing me to interject my remarks at this moment; but I must insist that on this subject the hour has arrived when this our America must be American.

OPERATIONS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, last Friday, July 23, I asked unanimous consent to submit a resolution requesting certain information from the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in regard to the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The resolution was read and is printed on page 7798 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. My colleague [Mr. GUFFEY] objected to the consideration of the resolution at that time on the ground that it would take some time to assemble the information which was requested and would involve great expense to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Yesterday my colleague notified me that he withdrew his objection. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania for the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 157) submitted by Mr. DAVIS on July 23, 1937, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board is directed to transmit to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the following information: (1) The total number of home mortgages and other obligations and liens secured by real estate acquired by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania during the fiscal years ending 1934, 1935, and 1936; (2) the total value of such mortgages, obligations, and liens; (3) the total number of defaults in such Commonwealth in each such fiscal year; (4) the total number of foreclosures in such Commonwealth by such Corporation during each such fiscal year and the amount of money involved; (5) the total number of homes in such Commonwealth acquired by the Corporation during each such fiscal year, the total amount of the loans made thereon, and the amount paid by the Corporation in acquiring such homes; (6) the total number of such homes resold by the Corporation each such fiscal year and the amount realized therefor; (7) the number of agencies or offices maintained by the Corporation in such Commonwealth and their addresses; (8) the name, address, position, and salary of all officers and employees (including permanent and part-time attorneys) employed by the Corporation in such Commonwealth during each such fiscal year, grouping together all said persons employed in each such agency or office.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is my intention at this time to discuss Senate bill 2475. I shall not go into any great detail in the discussion of the measure. If, however, I fail to discuss any features which any Senator thinks should be presented, I shall be glad to answer any inquiries in connection with them.

The general purpose of the bill, legislatively speaking, is a threefold one:

It provides a method of obtaining the objective of minimum wages and maximum working hours in industries throughout the Nation which engage in the transportation of their goods in interstate commerce. It is not intended to, and does not, attempt to provide by Federal legislation the fixing of minimum wages and maximum hours of employment in all the varied peculiarly local business units of the Nation.

There is one provision of the bill which not only would authorize action with reference to the production of goods which actually move in interstate commerce but, under the doctrine of the Shreveport decision—with which, I am sure, every lawyer in this body is familiar—would authorize action in connection with those businesses and industries that are seriously competing with and having a substantial effect upon the flow of interstate commerce.

The third objective of the bill is to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of goods which are produced by the work of children.

The bill specifically and unequivocally excludes certain industries and certain types of business from its scope and effect. It specifically excludes workers in agriculture of all kinds and of all types. There is contained in the measure, perhaps, the most comprehensive definition of agriculture which has been included in any one legislative proposal.

We have placed together in the bill definitions of agricultural work which have been fixed from time to time in other legislative enactments, and in addition to that we have drawn liberally from Mr. Webster's definition of agriculture.

So the bill, insofar as it relates to maximum hours of employment and minimum wages, is limited, except to the small extent I have heretofore indicated, to goods which are actually manufactured for transportation and are transported in interstate commerce. We therefore eliminate in the beginning any idea that this is an effort to regulate wages and hours in the various service employments throughout the Nation.

That is done for two reasons. In the first place, the bill rests squarely upon the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. In the second place, I believe it was the prevailing sentiment of the committee, if not the unanimous sentiment of the committee, that businesses of a purely local type which serve a particular local community, and which do not send their products into the streams of interstate commerce, can be better regulated by the laws of the communities and of the States in which the business units operate.

With reference, however, to the regulations covering business units that ship their goods in interstate commerce, the bill is offered with the belief that it is impossible today to expect that any one local community can tend to bring about the proper regulation of the business of producing such goods to be scattered throughout the entire 48 States.

The bill is built upon the principle that we cannot depend, if I may paraphrase the expression which appeared in the Democratic platform of 1936, upon the diverse laws of 48 different States, enacted by the legislatures of all those States, and approved by the Governors of all those States. We cannot, if we are to obtain any action, fail to recognize the fact that, as was stated in that platform, the establishment of minimum wages and the regulation of working hours, insofar as they relate to goods shipped in interstate commerce, are matters for legislation by the Federal Government.

I know of no better way to call attention to this problem than by reading a letter which came to me this morning from a sawmill operator in the State of Alabama. In spite of the fact that, stimulated by certain Washington representatives, certain policies enunciated by the National Chamber of Commerce and others, meetings have been held in all the Southern States from town to town in an effort to defeat this measure, there are some who have not been deluded and have not been deceived. I know of no better way to point this out than to read at this time a letter from a sawmill operator in Alabama and to read in a moment a letter from an operator in the State of Mississippi.

The letter I shall now read is dated July 24, 1937. Since I have not been given permission to give the name, although there is nothing secret in the letter, and I shall be glad to have any Senator see it if he desires, I do not wish to state the name of the operator for the RECORD:

> There have been a good many meetings of lumber manufacturers in the South within the last few weeks, called ostensibly for the purpose of discussion of the Black-Connery wage and hour bill. I attended two of these meetings, which seemed to me to be called only for the purpose of arousing opposition and not for a fair discussion of the merits of the bill. You no doubt have heard from them by letter, wire, and a few personal visits.

Perhaps some of the other Senators have also.

> I want to assure you that not all the lumber industry in the South is opposed to this legislation, and my observation is that not a small percent but a fair percent is in favor of a reasonable hour and wage law.
> Industry that is now paying a fair wage and observing reasonable hours are not opposed to an hour and wage measure, and, as I believe, most of them favor it.
> There is prevailing in the lumber industry in the South today a variance in wages of common labor in sawmills and the lumber industry of 10 cents per hour to 27½ cents per hour and weekly hours of 40 to 60 per week.

I interpolate here to say that I have numerous other letters, which show that, unfortunately, the 60-hour week is not the maximum week. I have one here on my desk from a gentleman in Mississippi, a father, who is unable to work because he is an invalid, and his son is working in a sawmill in the State of Mississippi 12 hours per day, 6 days per week, for 15 cents per hour.

I continue reading from the letter of the Alabama sawmill operator:

> This difference in wages and hours make a very unfair competition between producers and has a tendency to lower wages and increase hours per week. It makes hard competition for the mill that wants to shorten hours and pay good wages.
> No lumber organization has ever been set up, and I doubt if it can be, within the industry itself, and to function, with the objective of control of production, stabilizing of values, and providing for regular and continuous employment of labor at a fair wage.
> For the past 20 years the lumber business has been sporadic, with a skyrocketing of prices, overproduction, and then a slumping of prices, with low wages and idle labor, and each operator trying as best he can to extricate his plant from the abyss. This condition not only affects the mills but makes a very ugly condition for the consumers of lumber.

From September 1, 1936, to March 1, 1937, hardwood-lumber prices advanced an average of 50 percent, mill value, and in the last 5 months they have receded 25 percent, mill value.

These severe fluctuations in so short a time, when the consumption of lumber has been fairly regular, disrupts the industry, and is unfair and disrupting to the consuming plants.

A variation of 50 percent in the cost of raw products in so short a time will disorganize most any consuming plant. The plant that has a large working capital and can buy its raw product to cover 12 months' operation, usually buying at the low price, has too much advantage over a lot of our crippled industries that are trying to come back and have only sufficient working capital to buy from month to month.

I believe that an hour and wage law, properly applied, will tend to stabilize the value of products and wages, and do more to place crippled industry on its feet again than any legislation that can be made now.

There is a lot of lumber-using industries throughout the country, with fine plants and good organization, that are being financed largely by their bank creditor that can and will come back if given an equal opportunity. Some of them have been and are now our good customers.

I do not know the gentleman who wrote this letter, but he is familiar with the business in which he is engaged, and he has given a very clear picture of the situation.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. The Senator stated that the bill, in its definitions, exempts agriculture from its operations. Will the Senator tell me in what part of the bill I may find the definitions?

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will look at the beginning, under "Definitions", he will find the definition of the word "employee."

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 51.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; on page 51. I read now a letter from another company, a very large lumber company, located in the State of Alabama. This writer says:

I have been very much interested in your hour and wage bill now before your committee. I believe it is what the country needs.

I will not read all the letter, because it does not all apply to the exact point I am discussing at this time.

I am enclosing a letter and circular from a lumberman in Mississippi, which, I think, are pertinent to the subject and shows how others feel about the pauper wages paid in the South. Nothing but a wage and hour law will ever correct this.

I digress here to say that the evidence before the committee demonstrates that so-called pauper wages are not limited to any one section of the United States. They are widespread throughout the entire Nation. They are found in every State in the Union. I have picked up at random a few letters from various States I may use later to illustrate that fact.

Without either approving or disapproving the letter of the lumber manufacturer from the State of Mississippi, which I shall now read, I quote from it as follows:

In this connection I have long been an advocate of higher wages in the South. I do not see how the South can ever become prosperous when we give our principal resources away, namely, cotton, lumber, and labor. Our cotton, lumber, and labor is based on 10 cents and 15 cents an hour wages. Whereas everything we buy from the North is based on 75 cents to $2 labor. The prices we pay for mill supplies and machinery parts is based on labor which is paid 5 to 10 times more than our labor. There can be no real prosperity in the South until there is a leveling of wage differential. And the unfortunate part of the whole thing is that most of us in the South have an inferiority complex and do not believe our labor is worth any more.

I may state parenthetically that the pending bill recognizes that it would be wholly and completely impossible at this time, without a complete disarrangement and dislocation of industry and business, to bring about overnight a complete leveling of the wage scale throughout the Nation. It also recognizes the fact, however, that wherever a man may live, whether it be in the South, the North, the East, or the West, when he is compelled to work in order to obtain food and clothing for himself and his family, he is entitled to receive a minimum wage sufficient to prevent him from dying from slow undernourishment and slow starvation.

Perhaps the gentleman from Mississippi who wrote this letter was somewhat familiar with the history of the lumber business in Mississippi. Perhaps he had traveled over that great State. Perhaps he had seen the stumpage that was left, and how the winds would come and blow the dust about from place to place. Perhaps he had read the article in last week's Saturday Evening Post about unknown multimillionaires. Perhaps he read about one of those who had taken the timber from the State of Mississippi, not, however, to enrich the State of Mississippi, not to enrich the laborers who worked in his mill from 10 to 14 hours per day. If Senators will read the article in the last week's Saturday Evening Post, they will find where Mississippi's virgin forests went, and in whose pocket the proceeds from them were finally found.

I do not mean to indicate by what I have just stated that all those engaged in the lumber business have been guilty of such practices. Such is not the case. Some of those engaged in that business are as honest and patriotic as any other men in the world. Many, like the man whose letter I just read, do not want to continue to pay wages which are too low to afford a man a decent livelihood. The man from Mississippi whose letter I read, and who himself is today engaged in the lumber business in the State of Mississippi, states the wages which are paid in the lumber business; but he does not desire to continue to operate upon such a wage schedule. His hands are tied, however. What can he do, when he desires to pay a decent wage, and finds that others with whom he comes in competition can take his business away from him because they work their labor such long hours and at such low wages? He finds it impossible to sell a foot of lumber unless he produces his lumber upon the same scale of hours and wages as his competitors.

I shall not read many other letters, but I desire to read one which came to me this morning from the State of Tennessee. It is from a hosiery mill located in Nashville, Tenn.:

We wish to take this opportunity to endorse your attitude on the matter of wage and hour legislation. We are hopeful that something could be done to secure the enactment of a law during this session of Congress. Our plant has remained on the basis of the N. R. A. and we hope to continue indefinitely. The pressure, however, from chiselers is getting stronger all the times and makes the position of mills anxious to maintain a high standard more difficult. We believe that wage and hour legislation is necessary if we are to preserve a decent standard of living for the masses of workers in the South, particularly, and feel mighty proud of your leadership in this.

I hold in my hand quite a number of pay vouchers of workers engaged in making shirts in a sister State to the State of Alabama. Let us examine one or two of them. These are the originals. Here is one dated July 3, 1937, 4½ days, wages $3.57. Another, July 3, 1937, 4½ days, wages $4.48. Another, July 3, 1937, 4½ days, wages $3.38. As I recall, the voucher for $4.48 represents the highest wage paid. I will look through the vouchers and see. I find that my recollection is correct.

Here is another voucher, 4 days, wages $2.68. That figures up, as I recall, to about 8 cents an hour.

Mr. President, these people are engaged in the manufacture of shirts. Other people are engaged in the manufacture of shirts. Are we to drive down to 8 cents an hour the wages of all those who make shirts? Low wages control the wage scale, not high wages. What is the standard that is proper?

I hold in my hand a letter from Mobile, Ala., from a worker in that city. I shall quote from it, but I do not give the names of the companies. I shall refrain from doing that, as I have heretofore.

As the sawmill laborer has not had any consideration, I want to give you some first-hand information as to hours and wages. We are supposed to work 10 hours a day on the pay of 10 cents to 15 cents per hour for common labor and 70 cents per hour for high skilled labor. We are forced to work with poor equipment, and lose more or less time every day, which time has to be made up in addition to the 10 hours regular time without any added compensation.

A great deal of timber has been taken from the virgin forests of the South and of the West, but originally in the main it was not taken out for the benefit of those who lived in that section. The dividends went North. The wages stayed South. The wages were very small indeed. All over that section one may find ghost villages. Some of those who lived there had worked for wages so low that they were helpless to take care of themselves for a week after the trees were gone and the plants were closed. The dividends went North. The people stayed South.

Mr. President, this bill in the matter of its regulation of hours and wages, as I stated, follows the recommendation which was given by the President in his message.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. When it is convenient, in the course of the Senator's speech, I should like to ask him a series of questions, the answers to which I think will bring to the attention of the Senate the vital features of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to have the Senator ask them now.

Mr. WALSH. First of all, does the bill give the labor standards board, which is to be set up under its provisions, any jurisdiction whatever over hours of employment below 40 hours per week?

Mr. BLACK. The bill does not give the labor standards board jurisdiction under any circumstances or conditions to fix hours below 40 per week.

Mr. WALSH. So that any industry that is working its employees now 36 or 30 hours per week would be in no way affected by this proposed legislation, and the labor standards board would have no jurisdiction over it?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Next, does the bill give the labor standards board any jurisdiction over wages in excess of 40 cents per hour?

Mr. BLACK. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. So that any employer who has in his employ no one receiving less than 40 cents per hour would be in no way within the jurisdiction of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct insofar as the minimum-wage feature is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Next, does the bill affect collective-bargaining agreements already made or hereafter to be made between employers and employees?

Mr. BLACK. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. There is one exception to that, is there not? The bill does not affect collective-bargaining agreements where the hours are less than 40 per week, or where the wages are more than 40 cents per hour?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. But if a collective-bargaining agreement has been entered into at 36 cents per hour wages, the board would have jurisdiction to set that agreement aside and to fix, if the facts warrant it, a minimum wage of 40 cents?

Mr. BLACK. The board would have jurisdiction to do it, but under the provisions of the law it would be my judgment that the board would be very reluctant, indeed, to attempt to interfere with a bona-fide agreement made between employer and employee.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator is correct; but the situation might well exist that the board, in fixing a minimum wage in a case where the wage of the employees was less than 40 cents, after a survey and study of the question, and taking into consideration some factors that it must take into consideration in fixing the wage, might decide, let us say, upon 38 cents per hour. If it is found that in some other industry of like character and nature there was a collective-bargaining agreement providing for the payment of 36 cents an hour it would, would it not, take jurisdiction and set aside that collective-bargaining agreement insofar as the facts showed that 38 cents was a fair rate?

Mr. BLACK. It would.

Mr. WALSH. The next question——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me understand the Senator from Massachusetts. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts as to the jurisdiction of the board. Did I understand correctly the Senator to say that the board would have no jurisdiction over the question of minimum wages in cases where the employer was paying 40 cents an hour?

Mr. WALSH. According to my interpretation of the bill, wherever and whenever there are employees working in an industry which is engaged in business of an interstate character any employee, or any group of employees, receiving less than 40 cents an hour can petition the board to have a minimum-wage standard fixed, or any group of employees who are now working 56 or 48 hours can petition the board to have a weekly hour standard fixed by the board. So the jurisdiction is entire and complete over every employee who is receiving less than 40 cents an hour and over every employee who is working over 40 hours per week. Does the Senator agree with my interpretation?

Mr. BORAH. I think I do. The board may fix any minimum wage that it sees fit below 40 cents?

Mr. WALSH. Absolutely. As the Senator from Alabama knows, the first proposal was that the bill should incorporate a definite minimum wage. It was recommended by the head of the American Federation of Labor, and by the Secretary of Labor, that the bill incorporate a definite minimum wage of 40 cents per hour for all employees or, rather, $16 per week for all employees. The committee did not accept that recommendation. Another recommendation was made that the committee fix definitely, so as to limit the jurisdiction of the board, a graduated wage of not less than $12 and not more than $16. That was objected to. So the committee finally recommended a bill which makes the objective, the end sought and desired the fixing of a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour, but leaves the board absolute freedom to fix it at any amount it chooses less than that sum. Are the Senator from Alabama and I in accord on that interpretation?

Mr. BLACK. We are, with a supplementary statement that, in my judgment, the board would certainly have no jurisdiction to go below the prevailing wage in the community or in the locality of the industry. In other words, while there is no money limitation below which the board could not go, there is an actual limitation, because they could not, under the terms of the bill, fix a minimum wage below the prevailing wage in the industry or business.

Mr. WALSH. I take it the Senator will agree with me there is an invitation, an urge, through the language used in the bill to have the board reach as soon as possible a minimum wage of $16?

Mr. BLACK. A minimum of 40 cents per hour, but the point I was making was that while we do not say in the bill that the jurisdiction of the board should not be above 40 cents and should not be below a certain number of cents, there is a limitation below which they could not go, even though it is not expressly stipulated in cents per hour.

Mr. WALSH. From my experience with such boards—and I think the Senator will agree with me in this statement—the tendency will be to go in the direction of $16 rather than reducing the rate below the prevailing wage.

Mr. BLACK. Of course the entire bill is written upon the theory that the board should not go below the prevailing wage, and it would be wholly contrary to the entire philosophy and principle of the bill if such a step should be taken.

Mr. WALSH. Now, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. To what language does the Senator refer when he says the board may not fix a wage rate below the prevailing wage?

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will look at the standard to be used in fixing the minimum wage, he will find a provision that the board must take into consideration the action of a court of law. What would be the action of a court of law in fixing what the lawyers call the quantum meruit? If a civil action is brought for wages in a court of law on what is known as the quantum meruit, where no fixed agreement has been made, certainly no court would ever go below the prevailing wage rate. That would be the standard which the court would most likely follow in fixing the wage. Therefore, it seems to me that that particular standard is one of the best that could be provided in order to assure that the board would not go below the prevailing wage in the community.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any language to that effect?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Where is it?

Mr. BLACK. It is in section 4.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly, I do not believe that there is any danger of the board fixing any wages below the prevailing wage.

Mr. BLACK. There is no provision in which the words "prevailing wage" are used.

Mr. WALSH. Has the Senator in mind all the circumstances that should be taken into consideration in fixing the minimum wage?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. And it is assumed that the board would take them into consideration?

Mr. BLACK. They would have to do so if they took into consideration the evidence which would be admissible in a court of law on a quantum-meruit suit for wages.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator further does the bill make any provision for differential treatment in relation to minimum wages and hours of employment in the different sections of the country?

Mr. BLACK. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. WALSH. Does the bill make any provision for a differential treatment of employers or employees in relation to minimum wages and hours of employment?

Mr. BLACK. The bill does contemplate that the diversities of location and the diversities of industries shall be considered; also the cost of living. A suit on a quantum meruit, to which I have referred, would require that such matters be taken into consideration.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand the bill, the board is to have in mind at all times in fixing minimum wages not so much the fact that an industry is located North, South, East, or West, but that the goods produced by an industry located north, south, east, or west are to move in interstate commerce and that one industry is in competition with another, and therefore the factor of differentials is practically a minimum consideration. Does the Senator agree with me in that respect?

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand that the factor of a differential would be a minimum consideration by the board under the circumstances to be considered in fixing the minimum wage.

Mr. WALSH. We are dealing with goods in interstate commerce. The theory of the bill is that it will lower hours of employment and raise wages, so far as possible, and that the high-standard employer or the progressive employer who requires fewer working hours of his employees and pays them high wages shall not be subjected in the markets of the country to the competition of goods produced in a location or environment or place where lower wages are paid and the employees are worked a greater number of hours than in the case of the employer who has a higher standard.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct insofar as other circumstances and conditions do not offset the wage-and-hour conditions. For instance, there might be conditions under which, in order to get to a market, one particular business would be required to pay from two to three times as much freight transportation as another. The board, in my judgment, would be compelled to take that into consideration until that matter was adjusted. There might be conditions where general expenses of operation such as the interest rate, which frequently is a very important consideration, would require that that be taken into consideration in order to reach a fair conclusion.

Mr. WALSH. Let me interrupt the Senator a moment at that point. Is there a provision in the bill that the board shall take into consideration the value of the lodgings or the housing that some employers, in addition to paying a definite wage, provide for their employees?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct; and also the cost of living in the various places would be taken into consideration. Furthermore, with reference to the cost of housing, the employees might be renting houses in a place where the rent would be four times what it was in another.

Mr. WALSH. One of the objectives of the bill is to give a degree of protection, a degree of security against ruthless competition to the employer, no matter where he is located, who is paying high wages and requiring his employees to work fewer hours than is the case with his competitors.

Mr. BLACK. The bill is intended to prevent, so far as wages are concerned, the payment of wages which are below a necessary subsistence level. The bill is written upon the principle that the Congress should not attempt to make itself a wage-fixing body. We believe that wages should be fixed by agreement between employer and employee, except that the bill has as its objective withdrawing from competitive conditions the wage level necessary for a person to live on, wherever he may be.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, one of the objectives of the bill is that the progressive employers in good standing will not be subjected in the public market to competition with chiselers and sweatshop operators. Therefore, the board will seek to correct such a condition by compelling competitive employers to reach the same or better labor standards.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. I think I can show that better by an illustration. I received a letter from a manufacturer stating that the passage of this bill would close his plant. Of course, it has always been stated with respect to every bill of this character that its passage would close up many businesses. I am going to read into the record a little later what Charles Dickens said about that matter.

The writer of this letter told me it would close up his business and absolutely destroy it. I wrote back and asked, "What wages are you paying and what hours are you working your employees?" He did not give me his hours, but he wrote that he was paying $6 a week to young ladies who were working in his factory; that they could get board for from $3 to $5 per week, which was ample, and therefore the wages were ample to take care of them. It will be noted that those young ladies were receiving $52 net per year with which to buy their clothes, go to moving-picture shows, and to do everything else in the world necessary for young ladies to live in comfort. He said that if we should pass the bill and he was required to pay the young ladies more than $6 per week to make silk clothing for other people in the country to wear, it would close up his silk-manufacturing plant.

Mr. WALSH. May I proceed to a further inquiry?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. What limitation, if any, is fixed in the bill with reference to the number of employees in an industry engaged in interstate commerce over which the board will have jurisdiction?

Mr. BLACK. There is none. There was a belief on the part of some members of the committee that there should be a limitation. There was a belief on the part of some members of the committee that it should be three or five or eight or some other number. However, the committee, after consideration, included all businesses engaged in interstate commerce without exempting employers who had less than a certain number of employees.

Mr. WALSH. I agree that is a wise provision. The Senator will recall evidence before the committee to the effect that a large number of lumber mills scattered throughout the country employ only five or six or seven persons, and that if all industries employing less than eight employees were exempted, they could go into the market in large numbers and compete with lumber mills which would be subject to the provisions of the bill.

There is another question which I think very important, and I should like to have the Senator give his views upon it. Are there any provisions in the bill which will tend to bring about with rapidity the limitation of the hours of labor as fixed in the bill to 40 per week and the minimum payment of wage of 40 cents per hour?

I have asked these questions more for the RECORD than anything else, because I want the board to proceed in orderly fashion, with wisdom, with care, and not through hasty action destroy many small industries which are not now meeting the standards fixed in the bill.

I should like to have the Senator's views or a statement pointing out the provisions in the bill which may impress upon the board, so far as we can, that this movement toward a 40-hour week and a wage of 40 cents per hour is not to be accomplished immediately, next week, or next month, or next year, but is to be developed gradually without injury to any existing industry and without creating additional unemployment.

Mr. BLACK. On page 58 of the bill is a very clear expression with reference to the manner in which the provisions shall be carried out. It is there provided as follows:

> Whereas it is impossible to achieve such results arbitrarily by an abrupt change so drastic that it might do serious injury to American industry and American workers, and it is therefore necessary to achieve such results cautiously, carefully, and without disturbance and dislocation of business and industry: Now, therefore,
> It is declared to be the policy of this act to maintain—

And so forth. In other words, the board is admonished clearly in the bill that it is the object and purpose to proceed with care and caution in approaching a condition which I believe the overwhelming majority of people are favoring.

Mr. WALSH. I also call attention to another provision which I had incorporated in the bill suggesting to the board what the policy of the Congress is. On page 59 of the bill it is provided:

> That the board's jurisdiction in declaring minimum wages shall not include the power to declare minimum wages in excess of 40 cents per hour, but higher minimum wages fixed by collective bargaining or otherwise shall be encouraged, it being the objective of this act to raise the existing wages in the lower-wage groups so as to attain as rapidly as practicable a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour without curtailing opportunities for employment and without disturbance and dislocation of business and industry.

It seems to me that that, together with the provision read by the Senator, is very helpful in presenting the matter clearly to the board.

My questions are directed simply to answering the inquiries of many people who have made objections, many of them through misinformation, to the provisions of the bill. May I ask the Senator a further question? Is not the Senator in accord with me in the belief that the chief merit the bill possesses is based upon the assumption that there are millions of employees or wage earners in the country who have no facilities for collective bargaining? They are small in number, working in small industries. We think too often, in speaking of the wage earners, of those who are organized in unions and employed in the great units of industry. As a matter of fact, a very large percentage of all the wage earners of the country are working in industries where fewer than 200 people are employed. Only a comparatively small percentage of them are employed in the large units of industry.

The thing about the bill which impressed me as being of particular value is that the Government is attempting to set up machinery which, if administered wisely and prudently, ought to be helpful in providing collective bargaining through a Government agency for the men and women who are not organized, who are working in small industries, who are subject to the tyranny and oppression of sweatshops and chiselers. One of the benefits of the bill is that the board, in the absence of unions, in the absence of organizations of employees, shall be this collective-bargaining agency and fix for the lowest wage groups a decent, reasonable minimum wage and the number of hours per week such employees should be required to work. I believe the Senator will agree that that is one of the distinctive merits of the bill and represents the philosophy behind it.

I fear, as many other Senators do, the manner of administering the power which we are creating. I can see the possibility of it operating to great disadvantage and harm, but we cannot fix, here on the floor of the Senate, what ought to be the minimum wage in each and every industry in the country. The alternative is no action, and leaving these many millions of wage earners to a continuance of past exploitation. As one of the Senators favoring legislation of this kind, I want to say that I pray that the bill may be administered with the care and caution, as one of the witnesses said before our committee, "of a physician and not with the club of a policeman." If it is so administered, I believe it will be helpful in providing agencies for collective bargaining for many employees who do not now have the advantage of such agencies.

I thank the Senator from Alabama, and hope our colloquy has been enlightening.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator two or three questions in order to set myself right.

I read the bill last night; and, as I understand, agricultural products—that is, products of the farm and labor in connection therewith—are not included in the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the limitation affecting hours does not apply to the canning or packing of perishable agricultural or fishery products; is that correct?

Mr. BLACK. I will explain that to the Senator by referring him to page 63 of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I read that page of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I call attention to the fact that there are some occupations which are of a peculiarly seasonal nature, as the Senator has said. For instance, in the case of tomatoes it is necessary that the work of canning or packing them be done quickly and rapidly or else they will spoil. There is another type of canning, however, which is not seasonal. It is a matter of practical impossibility to define legislatively the line of demarcation between the two types of canning. For that reason the bill specifically gives to the board the right to exempt from the labor-standards provision seasonal activities of that type.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would include fishing?

Mr. BLACK. That would include any seasonal activity as to which it is necessary to have quick, speedy work and where it is impractical, if not impossible, to secure labor in the community in large quantities without providing for some exemption of that type.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that the bill exempts the fishing industry as such. In other words, fishermen who go out to sea and who are employed by others for the purpose of fishing, are exempt; but when the fish come ashore, and are packed and canned and prepared for market, the bill applies.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, my question was directed to one of several situations upon which the Senator has touched. For example, we all know that the tomato crop ripens perhaps at one particular time and frequently comes into the market all at once. So men go out to catch fish, and sometimes there is a large run of fish on a particular day, due to a flood or a freshet or what not, and the fish have to be canned. My reading of the bill leads me to believe that it is the intention of the bill that where a bona-fide case is made out for putting up perishable goods, whether they be products of the orchard or the farm or the fishery or what not, the maximum-hours provision shall not apply where food otherwise would be lost if it should apply. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is absolutely correct in his assumption that, in cases of that kind and type, the board would have the right to exempt such activities from the operation of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I suppose it would be impossible to make application and get permission to put up a pack within a short enough space of time to keep the pack from spoiling.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that it is not contemplated that exemptions shall be of a personal nature for a particular unit of work, because that would be an impossible task. It is contemplated, however, that that shall be done by a general regulation or rule, after a study of the situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. I suppose there would have to be inspectors to go around and see whether or not a particular industry was violating the hours limitation.

Mr. BLACK. I should assume so.

Mr. TYDINGS. So, I should imagine that if an inspector came to a canning house and saw the physical evidence that a large pack had been produced there at a certain time, and that it was necessary for the employees to work overtime to prevent its spoiling, in that case the inspector would not report it; whereas if it were a normal pack which could be handled otherwise and overtime hours were used to put up the pack, in that case the inspector would report it. Is that the Senator's conception of the matter?

Mr. BLACK. That would be a reasonable and commonsense action to be anticipated in the enforcement and administration of the act.

Mr. TYDINGS. The threshing of wheat and similar crops on the farm would be classed as coming within the agricultural exemption; would it not?

Mr. BLACK. I so understand.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I am thinking of is that quite often the threshing crew is not a part of the farmer's organization. There are men who make a business of going around with threshing and baling machines with enough help to come upon a farm and make a contract with the farmer to thresh his wheat. I should like to know if in such a case it is the Senator's opinion that the threshing crew would be exempt, or whether they would be under the operation of the hours provision of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the Senator that I should not wish to attempt to draw the lines in the shadowy regions that might divide one condition from another.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me clear up my question. As I understand the bill, its purpose is to exempt agriculture from its provisions, both as to hours and as to wages.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am asking this question because I believe, inadvertently, a loophole has been left which I am sure the proponents of the bill do not mean to leave.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has just been kind enough to put in my hand the exact language of the bill at the appropriate place. The exemption, found on page 51, is as follows:

> Or any other agricultural or horticultural commodity, and any practices ordinarily performed by a farmer as an incident to such farming operations.

In the case of threshing wheat, which would apply particularly to the wheat fields of Kansas, there, as a general rule, the farmers do not do their own threshing, as I am advised. They hire threshers who go about and come on the farm and make a contract to thresh the wheat. I suppose the thresher would be classed as a farmer within the spirit of the bill, but under the wording of the bill it is my opinion that he would be under the wage and hour provision.

I wanted to bring this matter to the attention of the Senator from Alabama simply because as I understand, farming in all its operations, from the time the grain is put into the ground until it leaves the farm, is to be exempted from the provisions of the measure; but under the bill such a man as I have indicated is not exempt.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment upon that matter?

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to get an answer from the Senator. Probably the Senator from Oregon can give it to me.

Mr. McNARY. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, the bill says:

> or any other agricultural or horticultural commodity, and any practices ordinarily performed by a farmer as an incident to such farming operations.

Would a thresher be under the provisions of this bill, threshing wheat on another man's farm? That is the question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say so, I think threshers clearly would come within this language.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I think.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, they are a part of the agricultural program. Wheat is not worth very much unless it is threshed.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, along that line, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me——

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to point out to the Senator from Idaho that I rather like the philosophy of the bill, and I am not attacking it, but I am trying to clarify what it means in my own mind, and for the sake of those who have written it.

The language of the bill, on page 51, is:

> or any other agricultural or horticultural commodity, and any practices ordinarily performed by a farmer as an incident to such farming operations.

Those things are exempted. In the case I visualize, however, the farmer is not performing the service. The man to whom I refer makes a business of doing nothing but threshing. He owns his own machine, and hauls it from farm to farm, and enters into contracts with farmers to thresh their crops; the point being that while he is dealing with an agricultural commodity, he is not necessarily a farmer, and he is not doing work ordinarily done by a farmer.

Mr. BORAH. He is doing the exact work which the farmer did before he took it up.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true; but I do not think the bill is drawn in sufficient detail to bring the man to whom I refer under its provisions of exemption. Does the Senator from Alabama think it is?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if a case of that kind should develop, that would clearly be a seasonal activity.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BLACK. It would be nothing but a seasonal activity.

Mr. TYDINGS. As to hours.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. How about as to wages?

Mr. BLACK. If it is a seasonal activity, both apply, because with reference to seasonable activities the board is given power to exempt both wages and hours.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; the board may do that. On the other hand, if the flow of wheat or the contracts for threshing wheat come to the thresher in a normal quantity, there would be no seasonal condition present. It would be normal work for him, and, in my opinion, not being a farmer, but being a thresher, he would be under the wage and hour provisions of the bill. Perhaps he should be, but as I see the matter, I think definitely he is.

Mr. BLACK. That would raise for consideration the question of what is ordinarily farming, as some one would raise the question of a cotton gin. I recall that we had that question up at great length when we had another bill before us. I cannot imagine that any board with common sense, such as it is anticipated boards of this kind would have, would ever handicap the operation of a law by attempting to bring within its scope activities that are purely and wholly seasonal.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is not my question.

Mr. BLACK. I know; but I am raising the point with reference to that entire type of operation where the action of the board would actually do an injury instead of doing good. For instance, in the case of a cotton gin it might be necessary to go for some distance to get half a dozen persons to come in and work, and they might have to work very long hours for a few days, and then quit and not work again for weeks, and perhaps when their work was over they might not work again for 9 or 10 months. Those would be seasonal activities; and even if there should be border-line cases, I may say to my friend from Maryland, insofar as definition is concerned, they would not be border-line cases insofar as the application of the seasonal provision is concerned.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I do not want to draw the able Senator away from the thread of his remarks.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to discuss any feature of the bill in which the Senator from Oregon is interested.

Mr. McNARY. Inasmuch as the question has been raised in regard to the processing and canning of fruits, vegetables, and fish, I have an amendment which I desire to offer. Of course, I appreciate it is not appropriate at this time, but I ask unanimous consent that I may have the privilege of offering the amendment and that it may be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 3, after the word "agriculture", it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

or any person employed in connection with the canning or other packing or packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges, fruits, or vegetables, when the services of said employee are of a seasonal nature and do not extend over total periods of more than 6 months in any 1 year.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator be willing to include maple sugar in the amendment?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; at the proper time I shall be delighted to add that. I was challenged to bring this matter up at this time, not for the purpose of getting the Senator from Alabama to decide whether he would accept the amendment or not; but there are two kinds of exemptions, one is statutory, to be written into the law, and the other is discretionary, left to the board. I desire that these matters not be left to the discretion of the board but to have them in the act so that there will be no mistake about the exemption of seasonal work in connection with perishables of the nature described and defined in the amendment. That covers to a large extent the canning and the processing of fruits, vegetables and sea foods.

I have prescribed in the amendment that the "season" shall not be more than 6 months, so that no advantage could be taken of even the definition of "season." This would reach all the products of the soil and of the water which are necessary to be processed immediately so that no deterioration will take place in their flavor or in their physical condition. At the proper time I shall discuss the amendment more at length. I merely desired to apprise the Senator at this time of my view as expressed in the amendment, before the matter was brought to his attention by others.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Alabama has made a splendid exposition of his bill, and one in which I am greatly interested; and I have great sympathy with the bill. The Senator stated a while ago that in declaring minimum wages the board might consider among other things such questions as freight rates. There are parts of our country which are very greatly discriminated against in freight rates, for instance, the territory in which the Senator lives and the territory in which I live; the freight rates are nearly double one way what they are the other. Did the Senator say that the question of freight rates was to be taken into consideration?

Mr. BLACK. I said that, in my judgment, it would be necessary to take into consideration the cost of transportation to the market, which, of course, would include freight rates.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it is not stated specifically in the bill. Would the Senator object to an amendment in which that was stated?

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that it is my judgment that the inclusion of definite elements of a broad subject might and could result, in the long run, in a limitation instead of an expansion.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, and I am quite sure the Senator is correct about it. On the other hand, I think the Senator is exactly right in his statement that transportation rates should be taken into consideration by the board.

Mr. BLACK. I may say, in addition to what I have stated, however—and I am sure the Senator will agree with me—that we do not want to give any legislative recognition to any unfair freight-rate system.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BLACK. It would be too bad, in my judgment, if, where freight rates are unfair and unjust, we should write into law something which might permanently require that that burden be borne by the men who do the work. We want to bring about a change in the freight-rate system.

Mr. McKELLAR. We certainly do.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Tennessee has been very active for a long time in aiding an effort to accomplish that purpose, and a fight is now being made by representatives of my State in an attempt to prevent unjust freight rates. There was evidence before the committee, given by Mr. Aldrich, of the Tennessee Valley Association, in which the Senator will be greatly interested, illustrating the unfairness of the freight-rate structure. That appears in the printed hearings. Until that situation is corrected, however, it is necessary, in my judgment, that every element be taken into consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it would aid tremendously in securing from the Interstate Commerce Commission an adjustment of freight rates so as to make them absolutely fair to all sections and areas of the country if the board should take into consideration that fact in fixing a minimum wage. It was for that reason that I desired to call the special attention of the Senator from Alabama, who is making such an able argument, to that particular factor which we must consider. It is very important to his State and to my State and to others in that locality.

Mr. BLACK. I appreciate very much the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the question of raising cotton and employing people in the cotton-raising industry is not covered in the pending bill at all. The only reason why freight rates would have any consideration would be in determining the minimum wage in an industry where cotton was used, for the purpose of determining the cost of production.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not talking about cotton at all; I was speaking of the general subject of transportation.

Mr. WALSH. If the industry were far away from the cotton field, it would be expected, I assume, that the Board would take into consideration the cost of the raw materials to the industry and the cost of transportation when the finished product was far away from the central market. That is part of the cost of production. It would be an element to consider in fixing the minimum wages.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct, in my judgment. I might call his attention to a very interesting piece of evidence which came from a cotton-textile man who operates mills both in the South and in New England.

Mr. WALSH. Which many of them do.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct. Many of them come south with a mill which has sometimes been considered unfit for human use in New England, and when the get down into the South they seem to consider that a southerner is worth only about one-fourth of what a man is worth who lives in New England. I myself never fully subscribed to that doctrine. I rather subscribe to the gospel that a man who is born in Alabama, and who can do as much work as a man born in any State in New England, or in any country across the water who emigrates to New England, is entitled to the same pay if he does the work.

Mr. WALSH. I also subscribe to the views expressed by the Senator. I have had much evidence presented to me by industrialists in the North to the effect that the wage earners of the South are efficient and competent and their producing capacity equals that found among workers in the North. I say this because of the feeling some people seem to have that a southern wage earner does not produce as much as is produced by a northern wage earner.

Mr. BLACK. There are elements which enter into the question, such as length of service, skill, and the opportunities for training, wherever a man is born. The manufacturer to whom I have referred has a mill in Georgia which is the largest cotton textile mill in that State, as I was told, and as I believe, Representative RAMSPECK having made the statement. The manufacturer in answer to a question as to the cost of cotton in the South and the cost of cotton in New England, stated, as I recall, that he found he could transport cotton from Texas to New England cheaper than he could transport it from Texas to Georgia. That is the type of freight rate to which the Senator from Tennessee was referring.

Mr. McKELLAR. Exactly.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Senator will permit me I should like to return to the provision of the bill as to seasonal operations, such as the canning business. Do I understand correctly the Senator to say that in the pending bill there is no provision other than that giving broad powers to the board to deal with that class of industries?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to make a remark along that line. I have considerable acquaintance with that line of business. The State of Delaware, in fact, the whole Delmarva Peninsula, is very greatly interested in the canning business and seasonal canning. I do not recall that there are any canneries which do other canning business than that. Some of those canneries are very good ones, very large ones, and I think they treat their labor very well.

I have been somewhat troubled as to whether the bill should be amended so as to make provision, beyond leaving it to the discretion of the board, that those canneries should be treated as we hope the board would treat them; in other words, to lay down a definite provision that they should be exempted because of the seasonal nature of their business.

We also know that a number of the canneries, both in my State and in other States, do not pay a living wage. We are therefore confronted with two propositions. We should like to have seasonal canneries exempted from the provisions of the bill, but if that is done a number of them, I am sure, will go on paying less than a living wage. That would be the result in some of the smaller canneries. It seems to me the situation should not be left in that condition.

A great number of canneries would not come under the regulation of the board, and would go on with the same practice, which would result in the same evil that the Senator was talking about earlier in the day when he spoke of the sawmill business. They would cause unfair competition by reason of the fact that they would not only work their employees long hours, but they would also pay a wage lower than should be paid. In fact, they would not provide their employees with a decent wage sufficient for them to live upon.

I ask the Senator from Alabama, and I ask other Senators the same question, whether the bill, which provides for leaving that matter in the hands of the board, should not be amended so that we could be assured that the board would deal with that question fairly. But is not the board the best place in which to leave it?

I have received many communications from almost all the larger canneries in my State, and from other persons who are interested in this subject, demanding that an amendment be placed in the bill which would provide that this matter should not be left to the board, but that seasonal canneries should be entirely exempted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if he is speaking exclusively of seasonal canneries?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; I am speaking entirely of seasonal canneries, which in our State can corn, beans, and tomatoes.

Mr. WALSH. There are a number of canneries in my State which produce and operate the year around. The Senate would not wish to exempt them?

Mr. HUGHES. I should not want them exempted.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that if any preference is to be given to the seasonal canneries, it ought to be in eliminating the provision in the bill which may require them to pay more wages after employing workers more than 40 hours a week. I am sure the Senator agrees that 40 cents an hour is not too large a wage.

Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps in some cases it is.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me the difficulty these canneries have can be removed by not requiring the penalty of paying more wages if they work their employees more than 40 hours a week.

Mr. HUGHES. I should have no objection to paying even less than 40 cents an hour, but I certainly do object to leaving the canneries at liberty to pay 10 cents an hour, and that is what some of them will do. Some will continue to pay 10 cents, 12 cents, and 15 cents an hour.

Mr. WALSH. If they are put under this bill, they cannot do so.

Mr. HUGHES. No; but if they are taken out of the bill by exempting them, they are left at liberty to pay these low wages.

Mr. WALSH. It is difficult to distinguish, in the matter of wages, between the temporary cannery concern that is seasonal and the all-year-round cannery.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Delaware that I greatly appreciate his viewpoint.

I have been interested to some extent in laws of this type for several years. I very soon discovered, from what numerous persons told me, that the canners were the most active, the most energetic, the most alert, perhaps, of any group in America when it came to trying to secure exemption from a law. I am fully sympathetic with the canner who is engaged in a seasonal business, and who does not take advantage of the seasonal situation by gross abuse of the conditions so as to drive people down by employing them for hours that are beyond the capacity of a human being to serve, and for wages that are inexcusably low. I recognize the fact that industries engaged in seasonal activity should not be included in a law of this kind. However, the Senator from Delaware has placed his finger exactly on the distinction between the two lines of thought. There are other canners, as is well known, who should not be exempt from this proposed law.

About 2 years ago, when we had a hearing before the Committee on Finance on matters related to this subject, testimony was adduced as to the profits of some of the canners. They were engaged in a large business throughout the entire Nation. The profit they made was absolutely phenomenal in proportion to the amount of their investment. On investigation it developed that it was largely because, as usual, the laborers were being paid too low a wage. Monopolies existed in certain types of products. The profits, also, were too high.

So it developed that from both ends, labor wages being entirely too low and prices being entirely too high, this group was making profits which were entirely out of line with proper business operations under our system, thereby placing an unfair burden both on those who produce and on those who consume the commodity.

If there is an attempt to put in this bill an exemption for canners, then they are out from under its provisions. I am opposed to their being left out. I want them to stay in.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to permit me to add that we have canners in our State and in our peninsula who are most excellent men, and who do not drive down their labor, who pay fair wages, treat their employees fairly, and have excellent health conditions and regulations in their canneries. However, there is an entirely different class of canners. I am interested in the canners of the first class I mentioned. They are excellent citizens. Because I myself am a farmer to some extent, I am vitally interested in farmers having their products canned in the producing season. However, I am more deeply interested in the persons who labor not only in my State but everywhere. I am deeply interested in seeing that in some way the canners, as well as other persons who employ labor, pay fair wages. When I view the subject I am convinced that it is not well to exempt seasonal industries and leave entirely to the discretion of those engaged in seasonal industries the determination of what hours their employees shall work and what wages they shall pay them. That does not meet with my views of what is right and fair to the great number of persons who work in those industries.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's view. I stated in the beginning that I thanked him for his contribution because it was a real contribution, and called attention to the inadvisability of particularly eliminating the canners from the provisions of the measure within the terms of the bill itself. What we do is to leave to the board charged with this responsibility the power to distinguish between the two types. In other words, the bill authorizes the protection of employees who should be protected. It also authorizes the protection of employers who are genuinely entitled to protection. Protection should be afforded to each equally as each equally deserves it.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. POPE. In the definition of agriculture, which appears on page 51, there will be found in line 6 the word "dairying." Will the Senator generally define the word "dairying"? It would not include a cheese factory, I take it?

Mr. BLACK. I should hope not.

Mr. POPE. Would it include the bottling of milk by a concern whose business it was to produce milk? In my neighborhood many farmers bottle milk and cream and distribute it and sell it.

Mr. BLACK. No; I should not call such a person a farmer. I should call him a processor.

Mr. POPE. Would the definition include the farmer who bottles his own milk and cream and sells it?

Mr. BLACK. Unquestionably.

Mr. POPE. In other words, what he did would be included in the definition "dairying"?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. POPE. But it would not include the company or concern whose business it is to bottle the milk, but which does not produce it?

Mr. BLACK. It would not include a processor who is not a dairyman. He is a processor.

Mr. POPE. Would processing include the bottling of milk and cream and selling it when the one who did it did not produce the milk?

We have a number of very small farms in my State which employ a few people to bottle milk or cream and dispose of it. They may produce a part of the milk themselves, but often they do not; they simply purchase the milk from the farmers; then put it up in bottles and distribute it. I was just wondering what "dairying" would include in that situation?

Mr. BLACK. I myself would construe dairying to include the handling or processing of milk after it left the dairy farmer. There are a great many who indulge in that business who are not employers of small numbers, but who are employers of quite a large number of people.

Mr. POPE. Of course, there are a number of farmers who are engaged in dairying, who produce their own milk, and who also have equipment to bottle it and distribute it right on the farm. I am wondering if it would include those farmers who have such equipment and bottle their own milk on their farms and sell it?

Mr. BLACK. I have no doubt that a dairy farmer who bottles his own milk is still a dairy farmer. The fact that he bottles it would not change his characteristics from that of a farmer.

Mr. POPE. Even though he might do it in considerable quantity? The line I suppose would be drawn as between the one who did not produce the milk but who engaged, practically, at any rate, in bottling milk and distributing it as a business?

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will bear with me for a moment, I have just received a telegram from the secretary of the International Apple Association from Rochester in my State.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask what is his name?

Mr. COPELAND. His name is Phillips.

Mr. BLACK. It is not Mr. Fraser?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. Fraser is of the same group. Does the Senator have any comment to make upon Mr. Fraser?

Mr. BLACK. I have no comment. He testified, as I recall, before the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. I regard Mr. Fraser as a very capable, sensible man, as I have no doubt the Senator from Alabama does. But, anyway, this is the suggestion made——

Mr. DAVIS. I am sure the Senator from Alabama regards Mr. Fraser very highly.

Mr. COPELAND. I think he said so.

Mr. BLACK. I think he is a very capable man. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Very good. He is capable, as well as having all the other fine qualities which I mentioned. At any rate, it is the desire of the International Apple Association to provide an exemption by inserting on page 51, line 14, after the word "operations", the words:

Or by an employee in connection with preparing for market, in their raw or natural state within the area of production, fresh fruits and vegetables, including packing, packaging, storing, transporting, and marketing of said commodities.

That is the proposed amendment. The argument is this:

This amendment applies only to fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw and natural state within the area of production and does not extend to canning or processing or any operations which change them from their raw or natural state. The amendment would then make paragraph 7 the same in principle as recognized by N. R. A. and A. A. A. and under which the fresh fruit and vegetable industry operated. Under modern conditions, developed by necessity, it is of utmost importance to multitudes of small growers from coast to coast that packing-house operations and storing within the area of production be exempted; otherwise, community packing and uniformity of grade will be disrupted and, moreover, small individual growers are not in position to equip themselves with highly expensive washing and grading machinery. All of these costs come out of growers' pockets. Bear in mind we are asking that the amendment apply only to fresh fruits and vegetables which are highly perishable and in their raw and natural state only, and within the area of their production. There is well-established precedent for this under the carefully considered position taken by N. R. A. and A. A. A.

May I ask the Senator from Alabama for his comments upon this proposed amendment?

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator from New York that representatives of the organization referred to appeared before the committee. The committee, after careful consideration, reached the conclusion that the definition of employee as given in paragraph (7), of section 2, and which is the broadest definition that has ever been included in any one act, was sufficient to include every genuine, bona-fide farming activity.

So far as I recall, no member of the committee favored exempting, for instance, meat-packing houses. I use that as an illustration and not that it is connected with the suggestion made by the Senator from New York. The committee was not in favor of exempting the packing business as it related to many agricultural products. I refer to packing as a business. The farmer or the apple grower has a perfect right, of course, to pack his own apples either alone or in cooperation with his farming neighbors, I should say.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, in that connection, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. If a farmer gins his own cotton is the ginning process exempt from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly, if he gins his own cotton.

Mr. OVERTON. It is his own cotton; he has it on his farm or plantation and gins it.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that until the board shall act no one can say that cotton ginning as a business will be included in the law as it may operate.

Mr. OVERTON. May I interrupt the Senator further?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. OVERTON. I am not talking about it as a business; I am not talking now about the man who engages in the business of ginning cotton and gins the cotton of others; I am talking about the farmer who gins and bales his own cotton that he produces upon his own farm.

Mr. BLACK. I just started to say to the Senator that so far as cotton ginning at large is concerned, it comes within that broad class of peculiarly seasonal occupations, which, doubtless, would be considered by the board in the application of the law relating to hours and wages in its entirety.

Mr. OVERTON. It will be a question for the board to determine what is a seasonal occupation and what is not. The question I am propounding to the Senator is whether or not, as this bill now reads, the farmer who gins his own cotton will be exempt from the provisions of the measure?

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that I do not want to place myself in the attitude of responding directly to that question, because until the board acts, after the bill shall have become a law, cotton ginning as cotton ginning is neither under the law or out of the law; but the bill does provide that those things done with reference to commodities produced on the farm by the farmer on the farm are not included in the possible application of the act by the board.

Mr. OVERTON. I assume after the cotton is matured and is being picked the picking would be considered a part of an agricultural pursuit, would it not?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly, it would be so considered.

Mr. OVERTON. I am going just one step further. After the cotton is picked it has to be ginned. Suppose a farmer has a gin on his own farm and gins his own cotton—not the cotton of others—is that a process in the agricultural handling of cotton?

Mr. BLACK. As defined by this bill, yes; unquestionably.

Mr. OVERTON. So that he will be exempt from the provisions of this bill if he gins his own cotton?

Mr. BLACK. On his own farm.

Mr. OVERTON. On his own farm. The smaller farmer who does not have the benefit of a gin, who has to take his cotton to a public gin, would have to pay for the ginning of his cotton, would he not?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; just as he does now.

Mr. OVERTON. That ginning would not be exempt, would it? The owner who has a large cotton plantation would be exempt, because he would have his own cotton gin on his own plantation, but the cotton of the small farmer who has not a large enough farm to come within the exemption has to take his cotton to a public ginnery, and that public ginnery would be subject to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLACK. The cotton-ginning business might or might not be considered by the board as of a nature to justify it being brought under the proposed act. As I said in the beginning, it is my judgment that the business is seasonal. I will also say that the big compressing business, which is the one that has been sending many telegrams to me and others, will come under it. I do not know in how many instances the farmers in Louisiana own their own gins. There may be some in Alabama at the present time. If so, I am not familiar with them. Cotton ginning in my State is generally done by ginners who gin for the public. If there happen to be any farmers there who own their own gins, certainly their number is so small as to constitute probably less than one-half of 1 percent, which is the old familiar percentage we remember away back in the days of sometime ago.

Mr. OVERTON. Let me invite the attention of the Senator to another agricultural industry in connection with which the processing, if it may be so called, by the farmer of his own product is much more general than in the case of the farmer ginning his own cotton. I refer to the sirup-cane producer who processes his own cane, grinds it, and makes it into sirup. Does he come within the provisions of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. I am not sufficiently familiar with that particular business to say.

Mr. OVERTON. As a rule they process their own sirup.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator can read the definition in the bill and note that those things ordinarily done by farmers on the farm do not come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wonder if the following language would not answer the question of the Senator from Louisiana. It is found on page 51 of the bill, lines 13 and 14, being a part of the agricultural definition:

> And any practices ordinarily performed by a farmer as an incident to such farming operations.

Mr. OVERTON. It may and it may not. I was asking the Senator from Alabama because he is the author of the bill, and I was giving a concrete case. I think we would have a better understanding of the terms of the bill if we should take up a few such cases. I have taken the case of a farmer who plants his sugarcane, gathers it, and who on his own farm has a sirup mill and converts the juice of the cane into sirup. Does he come within the provisions of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. The definition provides that those things done by the farmer ordinarily on his farm constitute a part of his farming business. It would depend upon whether or not that was an ordinary incident to that type of farming business in the State where sirup is made. If so, that would be agriculture under the definition of the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not want to occupy too much of the Senator's time, but I should like to ask a further question.

Mr. BLACK. I am delighted to have the Senator ask questions.

Mr. OVERTON. It would not be considered an ordinary practice performed by a farmer as an incident to his farming operations for the reason that we also have large sirup mills. Such sirup mills gather in the cane produced by the different farmers and process it into sirup. But it is of frequent occurrence that a farmer has a mill on his own farm and converts his own cane juice into sirup. With that explanation, would the Senator say the practice of such a farmer is one ordinarily performed by a farmer as an incident to his farming operations?

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator says it is a practice not ordinarily performed by a farmer as incident to his farming operations, I would necessarily say it was a practice not ordinarily performed by a farmer as incident to his farming operations, and therefore would not come under the definition. I am assuming it is a practice which is not ordinarily engaged in, by farmers.

Mr. OVERTON. Not altogether engaged in, but frequently engaged in by farmers.

Mr. BLACK. For instance, a farmer might build on his farm a factory for the purpose of manufacturing shirts and sending them throughout the United States. Since that is a practice not ordinarily engaged in by farmers on their farms, naturally that would not be considered a farming activity.

Mr. OVERTON. Let us take the sugar manufacturer. On some plantations there are mills in which the planters may manufacture their own cane into sugar. Would they come within the provisions of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. As I said, it would depend upon whether or not that comes within the definition under the facts of operation, whether it is a necessary incident to that type of cane farming. I am not sufficiently familiar with it as it exists in the Senator's State of Louisiana to be able even to venture an opinion.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand the Senator, in cases where some farmers process their own products and other farmers carry their products to some processor to be processed, then by reason of the fact that some farmers carry their products to a processor to be processed, the farmers who process their own products would not be considered as engaging in a practice which is ordinarily incident to farming operations.

Mr. BLACK. I could not say as to that. It depends altogether on the facts as to what is a necessary incident to farming. As I said, there are some things so far removed from farming that all of us would know instantly they did not constitute a farming operation. The illustration I gave was of a farmer erecting on his farm a factory and manufacturing anything you please, whether something he grows or not, who employs many people to manufacture it, and then ships it in interstate commerce. The mere fact that he has such a plant on his farm would not make the manufacturing of shirts, for instance, a farming operation. It would still be a manufacturing operation. The same reasoning would apply to any other process of manufacturing.

Mr. COPELAND, Mr. BONE, and Mr. POPE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLACK. I yield first to the Senator from New York because I promised him some little time ago that I would do so. Then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE].

Mr. COPELAND. In the first place, let me congratulate the Senator upon his perspicuity and ability in preparing the bill.

I want to go back to the apple business for a moment. It happens that the county in which I live is an apple-growing county. Our farmers are orchardists. We have in the country, wheat farmers, corn farmers, hog farmers, tobacco farmers, cattle farmers, but our farmers, to a large degree, are apple farmers. An apple farmer who has a good-sized orchard during the season of production hires extra people, puts them in the orchard to pick the fruit, to draw it to the sorting house, to sort and pack it, and then to place it in the storage house. Later when there is a demand for it his own men draw the fruit to market, transport it to market, and sell it in the produce markets of New York.

Are all such activities brought within the operation of the exemptions relating to the farmer in the operation of his farm? The farmer I have in mind does not handle other men's fruit. He does not process it in the sense of canning it. He simply handles his product as the wheat farmer handles his wheat or as the pork farmer may perhaps kill his pigs and handle them. He simply handles his apples in the way I have said, his own crop, puts it in packages and stores it, and in due time transports it to market and sells it. What about him?

Mr. BLACK. I may answer the Senator by illustrating a type of farming with which I am familiar and which I think will answer his question. In my State if a man raises watermelons, ordinarily when he lives close to a city he takes his watermelons into town and sells them. He may sell them to a broker or he may sell them from door to door. Under such circumstances I would say he was engaging in farming from the beginning to the end of that transaction, because that is an incident to that type of farming. That is an ordinary incident to the sale of watermelons, we will say. The same thing, of course, would apply under this definition to farmers, including fruit growers actually engaged in that occupation.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is a fair statement, because the watermelon farmer might pack his fruit in crates, might he not? That would be equivalent to placing apples in a package.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I should say, then, that the Senator and I are in agreement that the apple farmer who gathers his product, sorts it, puts it in packages, puts it in storage, and in due time takes it to market is operating as a farmer, and would be exempt from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I simply state to the Senator that the committee reached the conclusion that agriculture in all its phases should be exempted. Therefore, they attempted to draw up a comprehensive definition which would accomplish that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. In general terms?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] has offered an amendment, to appear on page 51, which, among other things, exempts canners and the work of canning and packaging fruits or vegetables. That exemption, of course, would be added to the list of exempted operations and activities set out on page 51. Assuming that the bill is enacted, and that the activities and operations mentioned on page 51 are not brought within the scope of the bill so far as hours are concerned, are they also exempted in the matter of minimum wages, or is the exemption purely an exemption as to hours of labor, the time of labor, the tour of labor?

Mr. BLACK. As the bill is written?

Mr. BONE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. As the bill is written, it is intended to give, and I believe does give, to the board the right to exempt from both phases of the bill employees in activities that are seasonal and which by reason of the particular circumstances of their seasonal nature it is inadvisable to include under the measure.

Mr. BONE. Then they do not come under the measure either with respect to hours or with respect to compensation?

Mr. BLACK. As I stated, under the exemption which is authorized on page 63, the board would have the right to exempt such employees from both phases of the bill.

Mr. BONE. There is another question I had in mind. Does the bill in any wise impinge upon prison labor, or attempt in any way to deal with that particular activity?

Mr. BLACK. It does not.

Mr. BONE. Was that subject ever considered by the committee?

Mr. BLACK. I do not recall that anyone mentioned it. It may be that someone did; but the committee reached the conclusion that it would be unwise and improper to attempt to deal in this bill with anything except minimum wages, maximum hours, and child labor. I make that statement to the Senator because I think it is proper for me to do so at this time.

Mr. BONE. I am not complaining, because I think the bill very properly should deal with one subject, and if it does a good job in doing that, it is a fine thing.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to go ahead on that line, because I want to make one thing clear right here. The bill originally contained provisions which would have been, in effect, amendments to the Wagner Act. The committee reached the conclusion that we should not enter into that field in this measure. We reached the conclusion that entry into the field to the limited extent which was originally provided in the bill would make it necessary, if we proceeded along that line, to extend our hearings further, and to add to the bill any and all conclusions that might be reached as to changes in the Wagner Act. We therefore unanimously agreed that we would exclude from the bill any amendments to that act, and that we would limit the bill strictly to minimum wages, maximum hours, and child labor, and that is what we have done.

Mr. BONE. This discussion of processing operations is an interesting one, because it will open up a field of interpretation for the board; but I think the business experience of us all will justify the conclusion that if a man operates a threshing outfit, and goes from one farm to another farm, such a man is an independent contractor. He is not a farmer. That is not an operation incident to farming, because the man is engaging in a cold-blooded business operation, going from one farm to another, precisely as a huckster goes around and sells tinware to farmers.

I realize that in trying to meet that sort of an issue we get into a twilight zone. It is like the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] about the farmer bottling milk. There comes a point where we have to draw a line somewhere; and if a man is running a big threshing outfit, a gigantic combine out West in the State of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and he hires a large number of men, and they go on a farm with tractors and engage in an operation resulting in threshing thousands of bushels of wheat in a day, it seems to me that sort of an operation, which is in the exclusive control of the contractor, could hardly be called farming; and when he is hiring men and just being an employer, I am wondering how he could be called a farmer, or his operation an incident to a farming operation. He does not own a farm. He has not any connection with it except to take his threshing apparatus there and thresh the wheat and then get off the land.

I know that matter was pretty thoroughly discussed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]; but it seems to me that if there is any way of meeting that issue in the bill by a little further clarification, it might be advisable, and might avoid trouble in the future.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I promised the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] to yield to him first.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, on line 10, page 51, there is a reference to "subdivision (g) of section 15 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, approved June 15, 1929, as amended." I have here the latest compilation of the document room of these amendments, and I cannot find any subdivision (g). Does the Senator know what subdivision (g) is?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I will tell the Senator exactly what it is. I may not be able to find it at this moment. It is an amendment which included under the definition of farming the business of turpentine production. An amendment to the Agricultural Marketing Act approved June 15, 1929, classified the turpentine business as a farming business. Considerable evidence was given before the committee in connection with this subject; and the committee, in defining agriculture and in seeking the definitions that have been given to agriculture from time to time, found this amendment to the Agricultural Marketing Act, which related to the business about which testimony had been given, and included that definition.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There is nothing in that amendment which would help apples?

Mr. BLACK. So far as I recall, there is nothing there; but the apple business and the apple farmer are certainly included in this definition.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If I may, I should like to follow through some of the questions asked by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] which the Senator from Alabama answered by reference to the growing and sale of watermelons.

When an apple grower picks his apples and takes them into his own warehouse, as the Senator from New York has described, and in that warehouse packages them and then stores them, or perhaps first stores them and then packages them, the work being done by the farmer on his own farm, there is no dispute about the fact that it is an agricultural operation. I should like to say frankly, however, that when he takes the apples into market and sells them on the streets of New York City, as the Senator points out, I cannot see that that is an agricultural operation.

What I am interested in is the small apple producer who has a ranch so small that he cannot afford to maintain upon his own ranch a warehouse with the necessary machinery and equipment which such warehouses now must have, under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture on the question of spray tolerance. It seems to me that the bill, under the definitions as they now stand, places at a considerable disadvantage the man who is too small an operator to perform these operations upon his own farm, and who must send his apples to a central warehouse to have the same processing done—by "processing" I do not mean canning; I mean the removal of the spray—and the same sort of storage, and who must bear all those increased costs, as compared with the larger operator who can do these things upon his own place of business.

I cannot see anything fair about that sort of a discrimination. It seems to me the point of difference should be when the agricultural operation stops.

The picking of the apples is an agricultural process. If the man does it on his own ranch, the storing of the apples and the washing of the apples and the packing of the apples are all agricultural processes. If we leave the bill the way it now stands, it is going to mean that the large producer on the large ranch who can afford to maintain the equipment on his own ranch is going to have an unfair advantage over the small man who has only 5 or 10 acres, and who has to send his crop to a central warehouse, or who may join with others in a cooperative warehouse and there have the same processes performed.

I think—and I should like to ask the reaction of the Senator from Alabama to the suggestion—that the line of distinction might be made at the point of agricultural operation; that so long as the operation is purely an agricultural one, it should come within the exemption. When it becomes a processing operation, a canning operation, it ceases to be an agricultural operation. When it becomes a marketing operation, and the product gets to the railroad station, or leaves the warehouse for the purpose of going to the railroad station, it ceases to be an agricultural operation.

I should like to have the Senator's reaction to that suggestion.

Mr. BLACK. I think perhaps I can give the Senator an illustration which will demonstrate how difficult it is to draw the line at the point he mentions.

Going into another phase of farming, let us take the man who raises hogs. A great many farmers who raise hogs kill their hogs on their own farms. They prepare the hogs for market on their own farms, and then send out the product. As the bill is framed, there would be no possible manner in which their employees could be included under the provisions of the bill, because that would clearly be farming; but if we should attempt to draw the line of distinction which the Senator has mentioned we would find that we should have to exclude the meat packers, whom I know the Senator would not believe it desirable to exclude, and we should thereby step into a field which we do not wish to enter.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GREEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think it could be very easily done. Following the history of the N. R. A. and the Social Security Acts, in each of those acts the definition was simply of "agricultural labor." The N. R. A., after an investigation, which happened to be of the apple industry, adopted a regulation such as I have suggested. They sent a man out to the West, who made a complete investigation. The Social Security Board refused to do that. They had to deal with the same expression, "agricultural labor", with no attempt to define it, leaving it to the board. The Social Security Board adopted the rule that if the work was done upon the farm, if the employee whose wage was involved was working on the farm, or working somewhere else upon the products of the particular farm and paid by the farmer, then it would be exempt under the act. I have never been satisfied with that definition, and I think it should go one step further, the step which I include, taking it up to the point of processing.

Let us get back to the hog case now. If we exempt all work done on the farm by the farmer, plus other work up to the point of processing, up to the point where it ceases to be agricultural work and becomes a processing or a marketing work, then it would meet the objection. Certainly these meat packers would not be exempted, because they do the processing; their work is not of an agricultural nature. Let the farmer on the farm who does his own processing on his own farm still be exempt; but where the work is done off the farm, then there should be an exemption of everything that is purely agricultural in its nature.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, is not that exactly what this agricultural definition does? What is there in this definition, in the Senator's mind, inconsistent with that idea?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. With all due respect to the committee and the definition, so far as this particular question is concerned, it does not define the term "agricultural labor" any more than the Social Security Act did. What I am afraid of is that the board under this proposed act would accept the definition adopted by the Social Security Board rather than the definition which was adopted by the N. R. A. and the A. A. A.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to make a comparison to illustrate that there is a distinction recognized?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In the turpentine industry, for instance, one way of producing spirits of turpentine is by the harvesting of oleoresin gum from the tree, and then transporting it to a still operated by two or three men, in most instances upon the land of the man who conducts the turpentine operation. That is recognized as agriculture because they are harvesting a product that comes from the tree in its natural state, and putting it through a simple process of distillation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But it is a processing operation. It goes further than I want to go in this definition.

Mr. PEPPER. That is true, but that kind of a processing operation would be exempted under the provisions of the proposed act, because it is something ordinarily done by the farmer as an incident to his operation.

There is another way of producing spirits of turpentine, that is by means of a wood process. The men go out in the field and dig up the pine stumps and transport them to a sort of crucible, where the stumps are ground up into small particles and processed in such a way that eventually a product comes out which is also called turpentine. That is generally regarded, and it so appeared in the testimony of the experts before the committee, as an industrial operation, because the owner of the industrial process is also the owner who sends his agents out into the field and digs up the stumps and brings them back to the factory.

There is a distinction between agriculture as defined in the exemption here and an industry which is an entirely different operation. So, when we come to the man who is running a canning plant, everyone would know that he is not engaged in the cultivation of the soil or the transportation of a farm commodity, but is conducting an industrial enterprise. He takes the materials to the factory, puts them through a process, and turns out a product. That is an industrial enterprise.

I wonder whether we will not do better, perhaps, to leave a fair range of discretion to the understanding of the board, than to try to make a rigid definition, which might not accomplish the purpose desired and help our people as much as we intended?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. All I am asking for is the same provision with reference to apples the Senator has with reference to turpentine. The Senator has had the turpentine business placed under subsection (g) of section 15 of the act of 1929. All I am asking for the apple industry is precisely the same sort of an exemption the Senator has specifically under that section of the old act, the 1931 amendment, which refers to turpentine.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; but in the turpentine case the one who harvests the gum from the tree also conducts the distilling operation. If that were true in the apple case, the apple industry would be exempt under this definition. But if a third party puts up a distillery for gum turpentine, and everyone who produces gum anywhere in the country brings it to him and he distills it and provides a market, that is not the same.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the apple growers take their apples to a cider plant, certainly the man who runs the cider plant is engaged in an industrial operation; he is processing. If the apples are taken to a cannery where they are mashed and put into cans that, to my mind, is an industrial operation, it is a processing. I think that if the growers take the apples to market, that is not an agricultural operation. I am not asking to go so far as that.

But it seems that, so long as they remain in their natural state and all of the work that is done upon them is the ordinary agricultural operation up to the point of processing, whether they are handled on the farm or by a group of men gathered together in a cooperative, or turned over to a central warehouse, they should be exempt, because of the fact that if we do not exempt them, we are giving the large producer a very distinct advantage over the small producer, and I am certain it is not the purpose of the bill and is not within the economic theory of the bill to give the large producer an advantage over the small producer.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator, and that is exactly what I want; but I think it is very clear that under the pending bill they would be exempt even if they were a cooperative, just as the farmer would if he did the work on his own land.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. He may not do it himself.

Mr. PEPPER. It would be the same if some of his hands did it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I am referring to the article until it reaches the point of processing, while it is still an agricultural operation, even if it is done by someone else. Under the rules of the Department of Agriculture, it is necessary to install machinery, which costs from $20,000 to $30,000, to wash the apples. I stated here a short time ago that it was almost necessary to turn them out as baked apples in order to get by the rules of the Department of Agriculture. The little man, with 5 or 10 acres, cannot afford to buy that sort of machinery, and he has to send his apples to the warehouse. The big concern, with 50 or 60 or 100 acres, can afford to buy machinery, and, under the terms of the proposed act, the big man would be exempt, while the man who could not afford to buy the machinery would be subject to whatever disadvantages might come as a result of differences in compensation.

Mr. BLACK. Let me ask the Senator from Washington whether or not the wages in his State are ordinarily under 40 cents an hour.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I do not think the wages are below 40 cents an hour.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, the board would have no jurisdiction of any wages over 40 cents an hour in any line of business. In addition to that, there are exemptions for seasonal activities. I may also say that the board would likely exercise the same degree of caution and wisdom in connection with matters of this particular type relating to agriculture that seems to have been exercised under the N. R. A., according to the Senator's statement.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator think the board appointed under the proposed act would exercise the judgment the N. R. A. board did, or the judgment the Social Security Board exercised? There are two boards. One of them exercised judgment, the other did not.

Mr. BLACK. It is clear that we wish to exclude everything that is a bona-fide agricultural activity. I am not sure about the particular business to which the Senator refers.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have not been present during all the cross-examination of the Senator——

Mr. BLACK. For about an hour and a half I have been seeking an opportunity to yield the floor; but I am very glad, indeed, to answer any questions I can answer.

Mr. HATCH. There is one question in my mind which is really not a question, because, from the way I interpret the bill, I think the bill itself answers the inquiry. In the definition of agriculture on page 51, which has been discussed, the term is said to include livestock. The question which comes to my mind arises because under another act, the Bankruptcy Act, some of the courts have held that farm operations did not relate to large cattle and sheep ranches which were not connected with the actual tillage of the soil. I am just wondering whether such an interpretation as that could be placed on this measure.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if I may make a suggestion, I think Senators will find that the word "livestock", as used in this definition, comes literally from Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, and is included within the word "agriculture."

Mr. HATCH. I know that; but the courts have interpreted it otherwise. I happen to know that courts have interpreted the word "farming" to mean anything relating to the tilling of the soil. The courts do not always follow Webster's Dictionary.

Mr. PEPPER. I think the Senator will observe that the committee, not wishing to take a chance with the courts in the matter of the interpretation of the term "stock raising" or "cattle raising", in defining the term "agriculture" specifically inserted the word "livestock" so that there could not be any doubt about it.

Mr. HATCH. That is what I want to know. The Senator's interpretation is the same as mine, and I believe the committee has made a correct interpretation.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what happened in the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLACK. I yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator to yield to me just once. It is quite unfair to keep the Senator on his feet so long. I promise him I will not interrupt him again.

Mr. BLACK. I am delighted to answer any question I can answer.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the air-transport representatives appear before the committee?

Mr. BLACK. I do not recall that they did.

Mr. COPELAND. They have asked me to offer an amendment on page 51, line 2, after the semicolon, to insert:

> Or any air-transport employee subject to the provisions of title II of the Railway Labor Act, approved April 10, 1936.

I find, by reference to that act, that it gave a new title to the Railroad Labor Act, and it included those engaged in air service. I do not know why they need to be worried about it, because I have been given a schedule of the wages paid, and really they are quite remarkable. Pilots, for example, get $9.12 an hour. That is for an hour. Copilots receive $1.51. Hostesses receive $1.05. I find that chief mechanics are paid the same amount that they are paid on railroads. Dispatchers are paid the same amount—$1.22.

What would be the reaction of the Senator from Alabama to the acceptance of that particular amendment?

Mr. BLACK. I should be very glad to look into it.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. I appreciate it. I will state to him that I have material with reference to it.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator, in his opening remarks in connection with his presentation of the bill, referred to some letters which he had received from lumbermen. I have received a number of letters from lumbermen in Louisiana and various portions of the South. The situation with reference to the lumber industry in the South is that on account of the nature of the timber and the character of the logs, very much less timber can be produced by manpower there than in other sections of the United States, as, for instance, on the West coast; and if the wage scale in the southern lumber industry were approximately the same or nearly the same as that of the West coast, it would be impossible for the southern lumber industry to compete with western production.

Does the bill take care of a situation such as that?

Mr. BLACK. The bill recognizes the fact that in fixing a minimum wage—which, as I stated in the beginning, is a living wage—there must be taken into consideration the diversities in industry which exist throughout the country; the cost of living in various places, for example.

Mr. OVERTON. Diversities in the same industry?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly. I may state to the Senator that the western lumber people—that is, the vocal part of them—that can be stimulated to action by their Washington representatives are also strenuously objecting to the bill. It is not merely the lumber people or part of the lumber people in any one section of the country that are objecting to the bill. It is some of the lumber people and some of the textile manufacturers and some of the other manufacturers in various sections. The bill does provide, in accordance with the President's message, for fixing differences under the standards set out in the bill throughout the Nation and throughout the diversified industries.

Mr. OVERTON. One more question: There is, and I assume the Senator realizes it, a difference in the cost of production on the part of a small mill, say a portable mill, and a large lumber company which may be operating alongside it in the same territory. Will the board have authority to fix a different wage scale in the case of the portable mill as against the large company?

Mr. BLACK. Am I to understand that the small mill produces at a greater cost than the large mill?

Mr. OVERTON. Either way.

Mr. BLACK. If there is a difference, I should like to get the idea, because I do not know it.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand that there is a difference in the cost of production.

Mr. BLACK. Which has the greater cost of production?

Mr. OVERTON. It is my understanding that the production costs of the small mill are greater than those of the large mill.

Mr. BLACK. Then I suggest to the Senator that an easy way to obviate that difficulty, if the Senator will fight for it, is to offer an amendment which will exempt such industries and manufacturing enterprises as employ only a small number of persons. I may state that personally I shall not be altogether unfavorable to such an amendment. The large lumber people have strenuously objected to such a provision, and the bill at present does not exempt them; but if the Senator will offer an amendment which will exempt the small lumbermen, I believe he will get a great deal of support in this body, although the committee has taken the other course.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me on that particular point?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad that question arose at this time, because I have been somewhat worried in reference to a number of letters I have had from North Carolina in particular relation to the small lumber mills.

I see here this afternoon a large number of Senators from the Southern States. Earlier today, when I was in the Chamber, I heard the Senator from Alabama read a letter from a gentleman who is evidently the head of one of the larger lumber mills in the South. I assume that the letter which the Senator from Alabama read was written by the head of that mill, who employs a great number of men; and at that time the question arose in my mind as to whether or not the enactment of this bill would be to the advantage of the large mill operator and to the disadvantage of the small mill operator. The Senator from Alabama has suggested that the Senator from Louisiana prepare an amendment exempting the smaller enterprises that employ, we will say, for the sake of the argument, approximately 10 men; and I want to say that I would view such an amendment with considerable favor.

Mr. OVERTON. I may say that I am not in charge of the bill, and I rose simply to get information from the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I made that statement to the Senator from Alabama, who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. While we are on that subject let me call the attention of the Senator, if he is interested in lumber production, to the fact that if there are two lumber mills of the same size, both employing the same number of men, but one is engaged in virgin-timber operations and the other is not, the one engaged in virgin-timber operations will produce much more lumber per man than the mill engaged in cutting old-field pine and loblolly pine and other inferior quality pine.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In that connection I may say that the man who is lumbering the virgin timber has probably paid less for timber rights than the other.

Mr. OVERTON. No; he can afford to pay a great deal more than the one who is engaged in operating on lumber of an inferior quality. I was about to ask the Senator whether the board would have authority to make a distinction in the wage scale between two operators so situated.

Mr. BLACK. Personally I should not be in favor of the board having power to authorize any lumber mill to continue to pay as little as 10 cents an hour for 12 or 13 hours a day. I do not believe such employment is conducive to the best interests of any part of the Nation. I think it is a practice which is indefensible. I do not believe our civilization requires any such sacrifice on the part of any large percentage of our people. So far as I am concerned, I do not welcome any such hours of work and low wage, even if someone should say they were necessary in order to continue a business, because I do not believe in any business which is dependent upon any such hours and wages.

Mr. OVERTON. But that is not the question I propounded to the Senator. I am not here to defend a wage of 10 cents an hour. I merely wish to know whether, under this bill, if enacted, the board will have authority to provide a different wage scale as between, we will say by way of illustration, a lumber company that is operating an inferior kind of timber in connection with which the cost of production is much greater than that of a lumber company that is operating in virgin timber and whose cost of operation is much less?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the Senator that it is my judgment the Board would not have the power to fix one wage scale for one unit of industry and another wage scale for another unit of industry, because there are tens of thousands of such units, and the bill does not contemplate any such individual action with reference to individual business units.

Mr. OVERTON. That is the information I desired to obtain from the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The question of the Senator from Louisiana and the answer to it cause me to ask a question. The same rate, then must be fixed by the board for sawmills, say, or textile industries, even though one might be located in a very large center where the cost of living would be higher and another in a rural settlement where the cost of living might not be so high, even though both operated in the same State?

Mr. BLACK. No; I did not say anything by which I intended to leave such an impression. That is quite a different thing. What I said was that there could not be given to the board the power to pick out individual business units and to fix the wage for every individual business unit in America. That would be an impossible task.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, right on that point, I desire to ask the Senator whether the board would not have the power to classify or to create a classification?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. So that whatever order was put into effect as to wages and hours would apply to every one included in the classification?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. That is my interpretation of the provision.

Mr. BLACK. That is the correct interpretation, but I was answering a question with reference to the individual business unit.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, is not the authority particularly referred to by the Senator from Georgia found in clause (5) on page 64 of the bill, which reads:

> And (5) suitable treatment of other cases or classes of cases which, because of the nature and character of the employment, justify special treatment.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. I do not assume that that would be construed as meaning the power to take up cases of individual business units throughout the Nation, but, as the Senator from Georgia so very aptly pointed out, it would give the power to create classifications along such lines as the business exigencies and necessities required in order to reach the desired result.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Am I to understand that the Senator would accept an amendment to exclude from the provisions of the bill any individual firm, association, or corporation employing, we will say, for instance, 10 or a less number of employees?

Mr. BLACK. I would have no authority to accept such an amendment, because the committee voted to report the bill in its present form.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Would the Senator look upon such an amendment with favor?

Mr. BLACK. I will simply state to the Senator that from the comments I have heard he would probably receive a great deal of support for such an amendment. Whether he would receive sufficient support to adopt such an amendment I cannot say.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I made mention of that initially for the reason that I had in mind a great number of small sawmills operating in North Carolina which employ fewer than 10 men.

Incidentally, in that connection, someone this morning made mention of the canning business and referred to farmers who, with a few employees, engaged in canning fruit which, in many instances, moves in interstate commerce, and, therefore, would be subject to the provisions of this bill. If an amendment were accepted to eliminate from the provisions of the bill those who employ 10 or fewer number, farming interests that were made mention of by someone this morning need have no fear about the operation of this bill.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator there is quite a difference in viewpoint as to whether or not that should be done. From an examination of the testimony before the committee it appears there was quite a difference of opinion as to the number of employees a company might have to entitle it to an exemption. Some thought there should be an exemption for those employing fewer than 15, some 10, some 8, some 5.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is my understanding, in that connection, that there is no specific number of employees referred to in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. It is one of the strange paradoxes of the situation, if I may be allowed so to state, that those who first objected to the bill chiefly upon the ground that it did provide an exemption of the smaller companies, now object to the bill on other grounds. They originally stated that they would be destroyed by the bill chiefly on account of the fact that it exempted smaller groups. They have now found that they will be destroyed by the bill, anyway. It reminds me, if I may be permitted to read at this juncture, of a statement written a little over a hundred years ago by a very well-known writer. I am going to close; I would have finished about 2 hours ago, except I was asked questions. I am very happy that they have been asked, and I hope I have answered them. However, about a hundred years ago there was a considerable controversy in England about wages and hours. A great controversy arose over whether or not children of 8 years of age should be permitted to work for 15 hours a day, and whether or not women should work 15 hours a day. There were those who said that if the hours of labor were reduced below 15 it would destroy English business; it was said it would reduce England's production; that it would make England poor. So they had quite a fight over it. The first fight was about 1833. It came up again in 1845, and Lord McCaulay made a very excellent speech on it at that time calling attention to the arguments which had previously been made. A historian writing about the movement in England to reduce the hours of labor from 15 to 12 or from 12 to 10 for children working in factories, said:

> This movement enjoyed the sympathy of all men except the manufacturers and the political economists of the day. * * * At each further curtailment of the workingday, the latter demonstrated in the most positive manner that the proposed new limitation could not fail to rob them of all possible profit, to raise the price of goods, to lower wages, and to ruin the export trade.

Senators may have had such sentiments expressed in their mail.

Let me read next a quotation from Charles Dickens. He said:

> Surely there never was such fragile chinaware as that of which the millers of Coketown were made. Handle them never so lightly and they fell to pieces with such ease that you might suspect them of having been flawed before. They were ruined when they were required to send laboring children to school; they were ruined when inspectors were appointed to look into their works; they were ruined when such inspectors considered it doubtful whether they were quite justified in chopping people up with their machinery; they were utterly undone when it was hinted that perhaps they need not always make quite so much smoke. Whenever a Coketowner felt he was ill-used—that is to say, whenever he was not left entirely alone, and it was proposed to hold him accountable for the consequences of any of his acts—he was sure to come out with the awful menace that he would "sooner pitch his property into the Atlantic." This had terrified the Home Secretary within an inch of his life on several occasions. However, the Coketowners were so patriotic, after all, that they never had pitched their property into the Atlantic yet, but, on the contrary, had been kind enough to take mighty good care of it. So there it was in the haze yonder, and it increased and multiplied.

I call attention of the Senate to that in view of the numerous epistles we have received to the effect that business will close up the day this bill is passed and will cease to function.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator that ultraconservative statesmen in 1837, 100 years ago, were just as fearful of the future as some of us are today?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. So times have not changed much after all.

Mr. BLACK. No. "Time marches on." [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes. "Time marches on."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I had intended to discuss some of the other details of the bill, but I assume that Senators have asked me the questions about the particular phases of the bill in which they are interested. So, if there are no further questions, I surrender the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the splendid presentation or explanation by the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] of his bill concerning wages and hours of labor and child labor. In this connection it has been quite significant that almost nothing has been said of one phase of the bill, and that is the portion of it dealing with and concerning child labor. Not a single question has been asked upon this subject by any Senator. That does not indicate, however, by any means, Mr. President, that child labor is not an important subject, that it is not of deep concern to our country, but, rather, it indicates that this phase of the bill has been entirely submerged because of the importance and the interest of the other phases of the bill. I, therefore, wish to make a motion to strike from the bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator from Colorado that there is pending before the Senate an amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will yield, I may state that the Senator from Oregon has offered an amendment to another phase of the bill, and, as stated by the Chair, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado will not be in order until after the amendment of the Senator from Oregon shall have been disposed of. I shall be glad to have the matter come up at any time which will be satisfactory to the Senator, but it cannot come up until after the other amendment shall have been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no reason why the Senator from Colorado should not proceed with his remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall proceed with what I have to say on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I should be very pleased to hear the remarks the Senator from Colorado desires to submit with relation to what it is he is desirous of accomplishing. Whether it be in order at the particular time or not I do not assert, but it may be in order at some time and I would prefer to have the Senator from Colorado elucidate his particular desire at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My understanding is the Senator from Oregon submitted an amendment and that it is on the table but is not pending, in which event the amendment of the Senator from Colorado would be in order.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has stated the parliamentary situation correctly. It is the usual practice, however, to consider committee amendments first.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the committee has offered one amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill, and therefore there will be no series of committee amendments. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon would be appropriate to be offered to the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MCNARY. I am willing to offer my amendment in order that we may have one pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Oregon has already offered an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. No, Mr. President; I did not offer it. I said I would do so at an appropriate time, and I am willing to do so now if this be an appropriate time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator had offered the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I wish to submit an amendment to the committee amendment. Is that in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon withdraw his amendment?

Mr. MCNARY. I do not offer it at this time in view of the statement of the Senator from Colorado. I withhold my amendment so that he may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I move to strike from the pending bill every word, phrase, part of sentence or sentence, part of paragraph or paragraph, part of section or section, refering to child labor. If the amendment should prevail it is my expectation to submit a motion that Senate bill 2226, known as the Wheeler-Johnson bill, shall be made a special order to come before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. President, no subject is more endowed with national interest than the welfare of the Nation's children. The Nation's future existence, the intelligent use of its resources, the role it will play in world affairs, depend upon its children—upon whether they are physically fit, whether they are trained in self-control, in holding a proper respect for the rights of others, and in understanding their own rights and their own duties and responsibilities as citizens.

Such fundamentally important characteristics are not promoted by submitting their undeveloped bodies to working for long hours at the factory bench or at the machine, or in the sweatshop. England learned a hundred years ago that sending young children into the mines and factories to work for long hours was undermining the English race.

Nevertheless, the child-labor problem in America is a growing one. The depression brought about a general break-down of labor standards, particularly child-labor standards, resulting in the revival of the sweatshop, in long hours of work, and in low wages for child workers. N. R. A. set up a general 16-year minimum age for full-time employment in industry and trade, effective throughout the entire country. This met with the widespread approval of employers, employees, and the public alike, and during the time the codes were in effect, the employment of children under 16 in these occupations was practically eliminated. After N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional there was an immediate increase in child labor, which has since continued to grow. In the last 7 months of 1935, the number of children leaving school for work was 53 percent greater than during the whole 12 months of 1934. During the first 5 months of 1936, the number of 14- and 15-year-old children certified for work increased 150 percent over the corresponding 5 months of 1935 when the codes were in effect.

Early in this year, the President, in a letter to the Governors of certain States, made this significant observation:

> It is clearly indicated that child labor, especially in the low-paid unstandardized types of work, is increasing. I am convinced that Nation-wide minimum standards are necessary and that a way should be found promptly to crystallize in legal safeguards public opinion in behalf of the elimination of child labor.

The President has spoken well and timely. It should be remembered that the States now have full power and authority to deal with child labor within their own boundaries. However, they cannot protect themselves against child-labor competition from outside of their boundaries. Only Congress can do that. In order to be rid of child labor in America, then, there must be action by the States and by the Congress. The States have been continually addressing themselves to this worthy objective, but Congress has done very little with it since its Child Labor Act of 1919 was declared unconstitutional. The burden is now upon us to move forward. Shall we accept the challenge? There must not be a no man's land in America in child-labor regulation.

Child-labor legislation can very well be separated into two distinct classifications: Child labor engaged in the production of goods that find their way into interstate commerce is presumed to be subject to the regulation of the Congress under its constitutional powers to regulate commerce; all other child labor with all other results and for all other purposes is subject to the police powers of the respective States and under the Constitution is the sole responsibility of the States.

Generally speaking, 75 percent of child labor—not including child labor in agriculture—comes under this second classification and is permitted to exist in whatever degree it does exist by the States, leaving only 25 percent subject to regulation by Congress.

The interest of so many Senators in child-labor legislation in this session is most gratifying. The Supreme Court has pointed the way to a new approach to this problem in the decisions approving the regulation of prison-made goods. On January 6, the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] introduced S. 26, to divest goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities of their interstate character in certain cases, which was referred to the Commtitee on Education and Labor. On January 11, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] introduced S. 592, for the same purpose, and it also was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor; but on May 11, at the request of the Senator from Missouri, it was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. On January 12, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] introduced his child-labor bill (S. 668), which was referred to the Judiciary Committee. On March 24, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] introduced S. 1976, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. On March 29, he introduced an amendment in the nature of a substitute to this bill. On March 29, I had the honor to introduce S. 2068, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. On April 19, the Wheeler and Johnson bills were consolidated into Senate bill 2226. On May 6, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] introduced Senate bill 2345, a bill similar to my original bill. On May 13, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] introduced Senate bill 2454 almost in the identical form of the Johnson and Barkley bills. On May 24, after the Interstate Commerce Committee had held extensive hearings, considered, amended, and submitted the Wheeler-Johnson bill, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] introduced Senate bill 2475, to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, including a child-labor rider, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Rather extended hearings have been held by that committee, and their report is now before you, and the Black bill is up for your consideration.

Many of the States have assumed their full responsibility, and have enacted legislation regulating, curtailing, and prohibiting child labor. Every State now has a child-labor law. As would be expected, these State laws are not uniform, nor are they, in a majority of States, at all adequate. There is wide variation between States in standards and in the occupations covered. Agriculture and domestic service are, as a rule, excepted from regulation.

In 33 States the minimum-age standard is 14 years, and in 4 States 15 years, but in a number of these States exemptions of various kinds cut under the minimum age specified. Ten States have a basic minimum-age standard of 16 years which applies to factory and related employment and to all work during school hours. One of these 10 States extends this minimum-age standard to all industrial and commercial employment at any time, but the remaining 9 States have exemptions permitting nonfactory work outside school hours, usually at 14 years.

Most States have recognized the need for protecting young workers from employment which is dangerous to life or limb or injurious to health or morals. The laws of 43 States establish a higher minimum age for hazardous work than is fixed for general employment. These provisions of the State laws are very uneven, some States prohibiting employment in a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations, while others specify only a few. Seventeen States have substantial prohibitions extending up to 18 years, 1 State to 17 years, and 25 to 16 years of age.

The maximum work week established for minors under 16 years of age varies from 40 to 60 hours. Two States have a 40-hour week for minors under 16 years, and in one other all industrial and commercial employment is barred under 16 years. Six States have a 44-hour week, and 32 a 48-hour week. In the remaining States the maximum weekly hours' limitation for minors under 16 years is still 54 hours or longer. Forty-six of the 48 States prohibit night work of minors under 16 years, the prohibited period covering from 7 to 14 night hours.

It is the opinion of many students of this problem that in order to have uniform laws and uniform standards, the police powers of the several States to regulate child labor should be surrendered to Congress; and, to bring this to pass, they favor either the ratification by eight more States of the original amendment to the Constitution submitted for that purpose 13 years ago, or, if that is out of the question, the submission by the Congress of a new amendment that the States will ratify. We have on the calendar at this time another proposed amendment to the Constitution reported by the Judiciary Commitee and sponsored by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], which it is hoped by some will overcome many of the objections that have caused the first amendment to fail of ratification.

Recent polls taken of the Senate have disclosed the fact that the Members of this body apparently are overwhelmingly in favor of the enactment of child-labor legislation at this session of the Congress. Two bills for this purpose are before you now.

Regarding the need of getting rid of child labor, there is no serious disagreement among the Members of the Senate; and if you will accept a clear-cut bill specifically designed to achieve such an objective, not involved with other highly controversial questions, it will, in my opinion, be promptly passed by Congress by an overwhelming vote.

The real question before the Senate is: Shall it consider the very important child-labor problem in a separate bill, such as the Wheeler-Johnson bill, well and carefully written; or shall it attach a child-labor measure as a rider to the very complex and deeply involved Black bill, which, according to some of the newspapers, has a very poor chance of receiving favorable consideration by the House. If child-labor legislation is defeated by this Congress, the responsibility for that defeat will rest upon Senators who stubbornly resist an honest effort to separate into two bills two distinctly different problems.

The Washington Herald on Tuesday, June 29, carried this interview with Mrs. Roosevelt:

> To a remark that prospects for child-labor legislation were brightening, she stated: "I don't much care how we get rid of child labor, just so we do."

It seems to me that Mrs. Roosevelt has given the Senate the right cue for settling the controversy that is before us. If the Black bill has a chance to pass, and if child labor can better be eliminated by it, then the child-labor rider in it should be retained. If, however, we can get rid of child labor better by a separate measure solely devoted to its elimination and regulation, then the Wheeler-Johnson bill should prevail, and the child-labor provisions, which form only a minor part of the Black bill, should be eliminated from that ambitious measure.

President Roosevelt, in his address before a joint session of the two Houses of Congress on January 6, 1937, made this statement, which is especially pertinent at this time:

> Sober second thought confirms most of us in the belief that the broad objectives of the National Recovery Act were sound. We know now that its difficulties arose from the fact that it tried to do too much. For example, it was unwise to expect the same agency to regulate the length of working hours, minimum wages, child labor, and collective bargaining.

If it was unwise to expect one agency to regulate the length of working hours and minimum wages and child labor under the National Recovery Act, then for the same good reason it is not logical to lump them all together in the Black bill, making the same fatal mistake over again.

As a matter of fact, child-labor regulation is an important subject of legislation in itself. It has received much consideration by the Congress, by the courts, and by the several States. It is neither fair to the courts nor to the States to tie it up with fair labor standards legislation on wages and hours, espionage, and strike breaking.

I may say that the original Black bill had two other phases besides the three phases we are considering today. It dealt with the regulation of strike breaking, for instance, and a part of it dealt with espionage. Some of the witnesses before the Committee on Education and Labor recommended to the committee that they take out of the bill the features of the bill dealing with espionage, strike breaking, and child labor. The committee very wisely, it seems to me, acted upon that advice insofar as espionage and strike breaking were concerned, but they failed to follow that very good advice in separating the child-labor features from this wage and hour bill.

Donald R. Richberg, who had great responsibility in the administration of the N. R. A., in his testimony before the joint committee on the Black bill, had this to say:

> N. R. A. showed graphically the danger of overloading an administrative body with too many tasks of great complexity and vesting it with too much discretion in their performance.

I have studied the Black bill thoughtfully, and I have carefully read all of the testimony given in the extended hearings upon that bill. In my humble opinion the measure's objectives are sound and desirable; and, while the bill is shrewdly drawn, it has some serious weaknesses, most of which the committee has attempted to correct. If there ever was a bill that needed to be checked and double-checked, if there ever was a bill that needed to be gone over with a fine-toothed comb, it was the original Black bill. When this bill has been amended by the adoption of the committee's report in accordance with the suggestions made at the hearings, I expect to support it; and it is not now my desire, in my efforts to separate the child-labor rider from it, to emasculate or weaken it in any respect. It is my desire to be constructive and helpful to the whole cause of labor in the changes which I seek.

However, I greatly fear that the Committee on Education and Labor is not sufficiently impressed with the staggering administrative job confronting the board created by the Black bill with reference to minimum wages and maximum hours, a job that it is estimated will require 100,000 persons to administer. The so-called "oppressive child labor" practices should go to the Children's Bureau, experience having proved that they can be dealt with most efficiently by this splendid and experienced agency. It is unjust to exploited children to insist that their regulation shall be provided for in an omnibus measure that is headed straight for a prolonged controversy, not only in Congress but before the courts as well.

Under the Black bill, child-labor regulation is placed in the hands of a quasijudicial board and the Children's Bureau, to act with divided authority, which is most unfortunate. It is generally conceded that the Black bill must travel an almost uncharted course so far as the courts and public opinion are concerned. It faces many difficulties and court hazards that child-labor regulation does not now have. It undertakes a new approach to the solution of an old problem, and it is not fair to let such an experiment ride upon the backs of exploited children.

The broad and extended delegation of power to a new bureau under the Black bill looms large as a most formidable constitutional hurdle. The whole measure is based upon the theory of arbitrary rule by men, and most completely circumvents the democratic theory of rule by law. Such theories have always been difficult to fit into the Constitution of this American democracy.

Under the committee's substitute for the child-labor provisions, the Chief of the Children's Bureau alone determines whether or not the products of child labor shall be denied the privilege of interstate commerce. I want Senators to get this, for it is important. Under the committee's substitute, she has a right to permit child labor in Texas and rule it out in New York, or to sanction it in a Ford factory and stop it in a General Motors factory. Under the committee's substitute the Chief of the Children's Bureau becomes without restraint the dictator over child-labor products in interstate commerce. I wonder if the courts will hold such delegation of power constitutional. I do not say that the present Chief of the Children's Bureau, Miss Katherine Lenroot, will abuse that power, because I have great admiration for and implicit confidence in this able and distinguished woman, but I do say that Congress has no constitutional right to delegate its legislative powers to any person. Ours is presumed to be a Government by laws enacted by Congress and not a Government of persons empowered by Congress to not only enforce laws but to enact them as well.

The committee substitute bill provides for Federal "payment of State and local agencies, officers, and employees, notwithstanding any other provisions of law." That is a startling, new, and unique use for Federal funds. Man cannot serve two masters, but local officers, agencies, and employees are to become the hirelings of the Federal Government and are to be tempted by Federal cash. How will the States like that?

Again, on page 65 of the committee substitute, we find this very drastic proviso:

> It shall be unlawful for any person directly or indirectly to employ any employee in violation of any term or provision of an order of the board made under this section.

This section deals with goods that are not actually in interstate commerce, so I say this is very drastic power that is delegated to a board by this bill.

Why should the Congress inject the regulation of child labor, which is relatively simple, into all the complexities and uncertainties of the wage and hour bill? Is it possible that child labor has been added to this wage and hour bill to obtain public sympathy for a program over which there is great difference of opinion and controversy, and to which there is no small amount of opposition? If that be the purpose, then I say with all the force at my command that it is not fair to pillory the elimination of child labor in such a cause or to sacrifice the determination by America to be rid of child labor for such an objective. Let each proposal stand on its own feet. Child labor does not belong in a wages and hours bill.

The original Black bill does contain some glaring inconsistencies which are not in line with the objectives of this administration. I feel certain that the Senator from Alabama did not write the original Black bill. In fact, I doubt whether any Member of this body had even read it before it was introduced and sent to a Senate committee. According to rather widespread rumors, the original Black bill, Senate bill 2475, is the production of a legislative canning factory that specializes in canned legislation and still employs childish labor in its awful "brain trust" productions. The Congress, the courts, and the country are sick and tired of that kind of foolishness. I shall point out just a few of the queer things in the original Black bill as an illustration. It sets up a quasijudicial board consisting of five members, with the peculiar provision that two of its members shall constitute a quorum. Boards are seldom harmonious; factions and differences naturally occur. Under this most unusual quorum provision the ridiculous situation will doubtless arise wherein two meetings of this board, each legally constituted, will be held simultaneously, and our two good horses will be pulling each other all over the field to be plowed.

Other parts of this bill are equally strange. Under the provisions of the bill, oranges from a Florida orchard could not enter interstate commerce if a boy under 16 years of age had anything to do with their production. Butter and cheese from Wisconsin would be barred from interstate commerce if a child under 16 years of age had milked the cow or had driven the dairy herd to pasture. Flour manufactured from Kansas wheat and cornmeal from Iowa corn must remain in those States because boys and girls under 16 years of age had a part in their production, and these commodities so vital to our existence become unfair goods because they were produced in part by so-called oppressive child labor, and therefore cannot enter the flow of interstate commerce.

Another provision of the original Black bill which is really startling makes all foreign goods subject to all of the restrictions placed upon domestic commerce, and while I personally am enthusiastically in favor of such a foreign policy, I fear that the distinguished Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, will not subscribe to it. This provision will upset every reciprocal-trade agreement in the land. It is claimed that the Black bill is an administrative measure; I cannot believe it because, as I understand it, the administration is pledged to a policy of foreign importations regardless of the labor conditions used in the production of foreign-made goods.

There is a general opinion out over the country, and often spoken of by the Members of the Senate, that the major difficulty in recent years in having the acts of Congress upheld by the Supreme Court has resulted from the practice of having inexperienced persons, not familiar with the country's needs and who are not Members of Congress, draft our bills. After a careful study of the original Black bill I, too, must frown upon such careless, dangerous, and subservient practices.

There are two bills before us at this time. One represents the efforts and study of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the other is a child-labor rider on the wages and hours bill. Our course should be clear.

I say it is a rider. I looked through the bill very carefully. I thought they had perhaps left out the child-labor provision. When I reached almost the last page of the bill, under the title of "Penalties" I found the child-labor provision. The child-labor provision that was under "Penalties" had nothing to do with penalties, yet it was inserted there as a rider.

The President in his letter to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] on Thursday a week ago said:

> On the Congress of the United States falls the primary responsibility for the adoption of methods. On the President falls the responsibility of recommending objectives.

The President has asked for child-labor legislation as a proper objective. The method will be left entirely to us, as it should be.

The Wheeler-Johnson bill, which I earnestly hope the Senate will choose as the bill to be enacted, has been drawn with a careful consideration of three important Supreme Court decisions: Hammer against Dagenhart, Kentucky Whip & Collar Co. against Illinois Central Railroad, and Whitfield against Ohio. It has been drawn with the firm conviction that there should not be a "no man's land" in child-labor legislation between the police powers exercised by the States and the authority over commerce that is manifestly vested in the Federal Government. The Hammer against Dagenhart decision of nearly 20 years ago is squarely challenged in the pending bill, as it should be. If that decision can be overcome, child-labor legislation immediately becomes a very simple proposition.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator if he does not want to be interrupted, but I should like to have him yield for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask whether in the Senator's bill he has proceeded upon the basis of an assumption that the Whitfield case overruled the case of Hammer against Dagenhart, or on the assumption that it did not overrule it, and that the rule in Hammer against Dagenhart is still in existence.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will reach that point in a very few minutes. We challenge the Hammer against Dagenhart decision in a separate section of our bill. We set out a provision separately as a challenge to that decision. If that part of our bill is upheld, as we believe it will be upheld, then the Wheeler-Johnson bill becomes a very simple measure. If it is not accepted by the Court, then we have something in our bill which undoubtedly they will accept.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In other words, the Senator goes upon the assumption that the Supreme Court now will overrule the decision in Hammer against Dagenhart, and if they do not, then the Senator proceeds upon the basis of the decision in Whitfield against Ohio, and other cases?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. In further answer to the Senator from Washington, we took the position that the old law was flying in the face of the decisions of the Supreme Court. We drafted the bill so as to try so far as possible to get around some of the objections laid down by the Supreme Court in the original child-labor case, Hammer against Dagenhart. Then we drafted a provision so that if they did hold the first provision unconstitutional, the bill would come under the decision in the so-called prison-made-goods case.

In my judgment, and in the judgment of many others who have given a great deal of time and a great deal of thought to the child-labor movement, and to an effort to eliminate child labor, including some very eminent liberals in this country, either one or both of the provisions would for all practical purposes put an end to child labor.

If I may be permitted further, our bill would prevent the shipment of goods made by child labor into a State such as New York, which is a large user and consumer of goods, or into the State of Pennsylvania, or into the State of Massachusetts, where the goods happened to be made in some State where there was no provision equivalent to that of the law of the State of Massachusetts or of Pennsylvania or of New York. After all, it is the large industrial States which are large consumers of prison-made goods, and likewise they are the ones which generally have the best laws with reference to prison-made goods.

In addition to that, we sought to include, and feel that we did include, a provision, which was very carefully drafted, to prevent goods being shipped out of New York, as is being done at the present time, and processed by child labor in some other State and brought back into New York for the purpose of evading the State law.

I feel a good deal as the Senator from Colorado feels, that the pending bill is flying directly in the face of the Supreme Court decision in Hammer against Dagenhart, and also flying in the face of the Supreme Court, in my judgment, with reference to the question of whether or not the Congress can properly delegate the power attempted to be delegated to the Children's Bureau to say what is oppressive child labor in one particular case and what is not oppressive child labor in some other case.

If I may further interrupt the Senator, I wish to say that I appreciate the fact that at the moment I introduced a child-labor bill, because of the particular stand I had taken on the Court bill, immediately the Department got busy and sent down a bill of its own. Representatives of the Department came before the Committee on Interstate Commerce and actually said they did not want any child-labor bill at all enacted, that they did not want any child-labor legislation passed, and they did not want it because they felt it would defeat the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Of course, that is a perfectly ridiculous statement for them to have made, and a perfectly ridiculous position for them to have taken. But they made the record, and the statement stands in the records of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and in the testimony before that committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that in fairness it ought to be said that actually the position of the Department was that if legislation, either of the prison-made-goods type or the type of legislation which had previously been enacted and had been nullified by the Supreme Court, would retard the ratification of the child-labor amendment they preferred not to have legislation. They did not make the flat statement that they did not want any legislation, but they did not want anything that would interfere with the ratification of the child-labor amendment, or would hold out a false hope that it was not any longer necessary to urge the ratification of the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I have not the testimony before me, but I think the Senator will find in the record that they not only came here themselves, but they sent out telegrams to a large number of people to come before the committee and testify against both the bill of the Senator from Colorado, which was drafted in conjunction with Mr. Edward Keating, the publisher of Labor, who originally in the other House introduced and had passed the child-labor law, and the other proposal, and they were opposed to a combination of all, because they said they felt it would stop the amendment to the Constitution.

What I have in mind is that I want to put an end to child labor in this country. I have been in favor of stopping child labor, and I worked in my own State when I was in the legislature, in 1910, to that end, and I have been constantly in favor of such legislation. I took that position from a practical standpoint, because of my experiences when I was in the State of Massachusetts, working for a producer of textile machinery. They were selling a great deal of textile machinery in the Southern States, and when I was there working for that firm I came in contact with correspondence from chambers of commerce and others in the South urging this manufacturing firm to come into the South and set up factories in some of the Southern States, saying, "You can come down here and exploit cheap white labor."

As the result of that, many manufacturers moved down there for that purpose. I felt that we ought to have a national child-labor law and we ought to have a national law affecting wages and hours of labor; and if the manufacturing interests of the country want to compete, let them compete on the basis of such laws. First, we should fix a minimum wage and maximum hours and provide that standards of labor and hours of labor must be virtually the same throughout the country, and the manufacturers can compete in the matter of efficiency from that point on.

Mr. President, I submit that a careful reading of the child-labor provisions of the pending bill shows that they are not going to do the work. The provisions may be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground of unwarranted delegation of power or because the proposed legislation is flying straight in the face of the Supreme Court's decision in the case of Hammer against Dagenhart.

I thank the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] for permitting me to interrupt him. I apologize to him for having taken so much of his time. However, I did desire to make that statement at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator from Montana would not intentionally make an inaccurate statement with respect to the testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee. Inasmuch as he referred to Mr. Edward Keating, who has probably been interested in child-labor legislation longer than any of us, it may be well to state just what he said at the time.

I introduced one of the bills that was under consideration by the committee. Numerous bills had been introduced. Finally a bill was introduced jointly by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] which incorporated the principles of the previous act of Congress which had been declared unconstitutional, which was the sole basis of the first bill introduced by the Senator from Colorado, but which was later combined with and became known as the Wheeler-Johnson bill, carrying out almost identically the original act of Congress of 1916, and also incorporating the prison-made goods idea. It was a double-barreled bill. It was on all these measures that we held hearings.

In his testimony before the committee Mr. Keating started out by quoting from a speech I made in 1916 in the House of Representatives in behalf of the bill then known as the Keating bill. I asked him the specific question whether he thought the enactment now of legislation of either type or both types would retard the ratification of the child-labor amendment. I frankly stated that, so far as I was concerned, I should prefer not to have any legislation on the subject now if it would make it impossible to ratify the child-labor amendment, which had been ratified by 28 States, and lacked ratification by only 8 more States. My recollection is that Mr. Keating most emphatically stated, in reply to a question from me, that he took the same position, and that if he thought the enactment now of either bill would retard the ratification of the child-labor amendment, he would oppose both of them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have his statement right in front of me. I shall read it. It was the position not only of Mr. Keating but of anyone who had any sense at all that they would not urge the passage of any legislation which would retard the ratification of the child-labor amendment.

In answer to the question, Mr. Keating said quite frankly:

> Mr. Chairman, if I imagined that the passage of this legislation would in any serious measure interfere with the ratification of the child-labor amendment, my advice to this committee would be to toss the legislation out of the window, because, as I stated in the beginning, I fully agree with Senator BARKLEY that the problem of protecting the American child is not a State matter exclusively.

That, of course, was not only the position of the Senator from Colorado and my position, but, as I understood, it was the position of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. The position of those who came down here at the instigation of the Labor Department, however, was that they did not want any child-labor legislation passed because they said that in their opinion it would delay the amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was not the language. I think their position was very much similar to that taken by all of us. What the Department feared was that a false sense of security would be injected into the situation if legislation were enacted now. While I do not want to go into that proposition, I did not want any misapprehension as to the attitude of those who came before the committee.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In view of the fact that the Senator from Montana felt that it was because of his attitude upon other legislation that this position was taken by the Department of Labor, I think I should include a statement in the RECORD.

Last year, very shortly after the opinion was handed down by the Supreme Court in the case of Whitfield against Ohio, which, as I remember, was on April 4 of last year, I introduced a bill dealing with prison-made goods on the same basis as previous legislation dealing with child labor. That was before the Court measure was submitted. Then I introduced a similar bill this year, immediately after Congress convened, which was also before any proposed Court legislation came up. The attitude of the Department of Labor toward my bill was precisely that described by the Senator from Montana as having been the attitude toward his bill. There certainly was not any motive upon the part of the Department of Labor of being unfriendly to me because of my attitude on the Court legislation, because it was prior to the time that the Court bill was proposed. I may say that they had the same attitude last year toward me and my bill that they had toward the Senator and his bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much. If I misstated, I withdraw the statement.

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that I desire to correct a statement which I made a moment ago. I said that representatives of the Department of Labor had made the statement that the Department was afraid that the passage of a child-labor bill would defeat a constitutional amendment on the same subject. I have read the testimony since then, and find no statement of that kind by representatives of the Department. I found in the record a statement by someone else to that effect, and I confused the testimony. In fairness to the Department, I wish to correct what I said.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I appreciate the contribution of the Senators who have spoken.

Senators will recall that in Hammer against Dagenhart, the Supreme Court held by a 5-to-4 decision that the Child Labor Act of 1916 was not a regulation of interstate commerce, although it was admitted that the Constitution, giving Congress the right to regulate commerce among the several States, included the right to prohibit certain products from interstate commerce entirely. In fact, the Court had so held in a number of previous cases. Thus, the Lottery Act of 1895 had prohibited the interstate shipment of lottery tickets. The pure-food law of 1906 prohibited the interstate transportation of adulterated foods. The Webb-Kenyon Act of 1913 prohibited the interstate shipment of liquor in violation of any State law. More recently, Congress has prohibited the interstate transportation of diseased plants, stolen automobiles, and kidnaped persons. All these acts have been held constitutional. Section 6 of the Sherman anti-trust law of 1890 prohibits the interstate transportation of trust-made goods. This was held valid in the American Tobacco Co. case in 1911.

Why there should be a difference between trust-made goods and child-made goods, so that Congress may regulate one and not the other has never been pointed out. The commodities clause of the Interstate Commerce Act makes it unlawful for a railroad to transport in interstate commerce any commodities in which it has an interest, direct or indirect. This was held constitutional in 1918 in a case involving coal. It was held legal to prohibit the transportation of coal because a railroad was involved in mining it. Had children been used to mine the coal, is it logical that Congress could not prohibit its transportation for that reason?

Also, since 1894 there has been a Federal act prohibiting the importation of convict-made goods. The Court within the past 2 years has upheld both State and Federal legislation prohibiting interstate commerce in prison-made goods, saying that such legislation proceeded upon the view "that free labor, properly compensated, cannot compete successfully with the enforced and unpaid or underpaid convict labor of the prison." Is not the same thing true of child labor? Since the competition of convict labor with free labor is a proper matter for the concern of Congress, most certainly the competition of child labor with the labor of adults with families to support should also be the concern of Congress.

If, for the sake of argument, we consider the rule laid down by the Court in the first Child Labor case as sound and accept the distinction between the prohibiting the transportation of goods which are harmful and those which are not harmful, still the decision in the case that child-made goods are not harmless in themselves was all wrong.

States cannot maintain high child-labor standards if other States with lower standards are allowed to flood the market with cheap child-made goods. Progressive businessmen might well say, "We deplore the use of child labor; we would favor a State law raising the age at which children shall be permitted to work; but we cannot do so as long as our neighboring States continue to use child labor, and ship their products into this State in competition with our goods."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have not been able to hear all the able argument being made by the Senator from Colorado. I know the Senator's extensive studies of this subject, and I am especially interested to know his view concerning what he thinks should be the age limit in connection with any child-labor legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In the Wheeler-Johnson bill we have placed the same limit that is provided in the Black bill, the limit being 16 years except in the case of hazardous occupations. Those employed in such occupations shall not be under 18 years of age.

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased to know that the Senator entertains those views, because they are my own. I desire to add that in the so-called Walsh-Healey Act a provision was made to prevent those engaged in Government contract work from employing males under 16 and females under 18 years of age. That provision has developed a very unsatisfactory situation. The Labor Department has had considerable trouble in connection with it. The Labor Department has had to make exceptions in the case of females under 18 years of age. The situation exists in this country today, which we ought to face, that there are just as many females over 16 years of age who want employment as there are males, and we ought to try to equalize the age limit for both. I am pleased to know that the Senator is in accord with the suggestion that the age limit for both males and females should be 16 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his contribution.

The Supreme Court, in 1936, and again in 1937, decided that the competition of prison labor with free labor brought about a harmful result which might be corrected by regulating commerce in prison-made goods. I submit that the Court has thereby, in effect, overruled the Child Labor case, for the competition of child labor with the labor of the breadwinner in the family is identically the same problem. If one is valid, so is the other.

I cannot believe that the Supreme Court of the United States today would refuse to see what all the civilized world has long known. I believe that the Court today would agree that interstate commerce in child-made goods is at least as harmful as is interstate commerce in prison-made goods—harmful to the members of industry trying to operate without child labor; harmful to States which are trying to maintain higher standards of labor; harmful to the future safety of the Nation, which tomorrow must depend upon the physical and mental competence of the children of today to protect its shores and govern its affairs.

In his decision in the Minimum Wage case the Chief Justice propounded a query, which I interpret to be a direct invitation for a new Child Labor Act. Chief Justice Hughes asked the question:

> What can be closer to the public interest than the health of women and their protection from unscrupulous and overreaching employers?

The answer is written in the heart of every parent in the land. Only one thing is closer—the preservation of the health, the morals, and the general welfare of the children of America.

The Court has reversed itself in order to protect working women. I predict that, if given the opportunity, it will do as much for exploited children.

I therefore most earnestly believe that if given the opportunity, the Court, in the light of present-day knowledge of the effect of child labor upon the labor market and upon the physical and mental development of the race, would overrule its decision in the first Child Labor case and uphold the power of Congress to prohibit the facilities of interstate commerce to products made with child labor.

The President, in his message to Congress on May 24, urged that the Hammer-Dagenhart decision be challenged. He said:

> A majority of the Supreme Court, however, decided 5 to 4 against Mr. Justice Holmes and laid down a rule of constitutional law which has ever since driven into impractical distinction and subterfuges all attempts to assert the fundamental power of the National Government over interstate commerce.

In the Wheeler-Johnson bill this unfortunate decision is squarely challenged. In the light of all the Supreme Court decisions of the past 20 years it is hardly conceivable that the majority opinion in the Hammer-Dagenhart case will continue to be sustained. But if section 4 of the Wheeler-Johnson bill, which squarely challenges that unfortunate decision and boldly adopts the principles of the invalidated Child Labor Act of 1916 and prohibits the shipment of the products of child labor in interstate commerce, is declared unconstitutional, all will by no means be lost. The separability clause of the act specifically singles out section 4 by number as an independent and separate approach to this problem. If section 4 is upheld, this bill will be very simple. If section 4 is not upheld, then the bill proceeds on other theories which, while more complicated and awkward as to administration, will without doubt be effective in eliminating child-labor goods seeking to move in interstate commerce.

This composite bill presents the consolidation in a single bill of several approaches to constitutionality, each unique in itself so that if one or more fails to receive the approval of the Court, the balance of the bill is still effective. It makes the laws of every State governing the sale of child-labor goods apply to such goods shipped in interstate commerce when they enter that State from the outside. It prohibits the transportation of child-labor goods into States which forbid their sale. It requires an informative label to be attached to child-labor goods when offered for transportation in interstate commerce.

That the Members of the Senate were much impressed by the Supreme Court decision rendered on January 4, 1937, in the case of Kentucky Whip & Collar Co. against Illinois Central Railroad Co. is evidenced by the immediate introduction of child-labor laws on the part of five Senators, working independently, and each adopting the theory and the language of the Ashurst-Sumners Act that was upheld by that opinion. To these Senators it pointed the way to a solution to the problem of child labor with which the Congress had for a long time concerned itself. The Whitfield against Ohio case, upholding the Hawes-Cooper Act that convict-made goods transported into any State shall upon arrival be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State as though such goods had been manufactured in such State, provided still another approach to the regulation of child-labor goods.

The Wheeler-Johnson bill represents in its provisions the efforts of Senators SCHWELLENBACH, CAPPER, CLARK, WHEELER, BARKLEY, BLACK, and JOHNSON, and the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce who considered it. It is most decidedly the result of the thought and study of many Senators. That is the proper way to write laws. Furthermore, these men had the benefit of the constructive criticism and suggestions of the following outstanding citizens:

Miss Grace Abbott, professor of public welfare administration, University of Chicago.

John Brophy, director of the Committee for Industrial Organization.

Mrs. LaRue Brown, director, National League of Women Voters.

J. Wallace Bryan, attorney at law, representing the Bureau of Catholic Charities of Baltimore.

Henry Root Stern, attorney at law, New York City.

John T. Corbett, assistant grand chief engineer and national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

W. D. Johnson, vice president and national legislative representative, Order of Railway Conductors.

James A. Farquharson, national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

William F. Montavon, director, legal department, National Catholic Welfare Conference.

James A. Emery, general counsel, National Association of Manufacturers.

Alfred P. Thom, Jr., assistant to the general counsel, Association of American Railroads.

E. L. Oliver, executive vice president of Labor's Nonpartisan League.

James Emory Brooks, civil engineer.

Frieda S. Miller, director of the division of women in industry and minimum wage, New York State department of Labor.

Edward Keating, editor of Labor, former Member of the House of Representatives from Colorado.

Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor, Lutheran Church of the Reformation, Washington, D. C.

Manfred W. Ehrich, attorney at law, New York City.

Lee Merriweather, representing National Committee for the Protection of Child, Family, School, and Church, St. Louis.

Arthur J. Lovell, vice president and national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

E. J. Manion, president, Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., member of the Senate of the State of New York.

Miss Katharine Lenroot, Chief, Children's Bureau, Department of Labor.

Courtney Dinwiddie, general secretary, National Child Labor Committee.

William H. Davis, representing National Consumers' League.

Because the Wheeler-Johnson bill is a composite of all the child-labor bills introduced by seven Senators, there can be no individual pride of authorship. The Interstate Commerce Committee, considering this bill, held extended public hearings on the whole subject of child labor where everyone interested was given an opportunity to present testimony. Every constructive suggestion and every reasonable theory made at those hearings was incorporated in the amended form of this bill. It is only fair to ask that since the Interstate Commerce Committee, acting in good faith and by diligent and earnest labor, has worked out the bill's technical difficulties, the splendid measure which they have by their industry created be accepted as the proper child-labor bill to be passed at this time by the Senate. The decision is for the Senate to make.

EXEMPTIONS FROM UNDISTRIBUTED-PROFITS TAX

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, a discussion of any bill that attempts to set up a schedule of maximum hours, of course, invites our attention to the effort that has been made to find employment for those millions of American citizens who are still unemployed.

As I am leaving the city tonight with the Battle Monuments Commission, this is very likely the last opportunity I shall have during this session to present my suggestions upon proposed legislation which, I believe, will result in a large increase in employment of American citizens. I recognize that there is very little possibility of any revenue legislation being enacted at the present session of the Congress. I understand, however, that, commencing next November, a study will be made of the revenue laws, with the purpose of making some revisions and changes. In order that my viewpoint on this subject may be before the committees making such study, I am going to ask permission to introduce a bill which if enacted would amend the Revenue Act of 1936, and I wish to take a few moments of the Senate's time in presenting this subject.

Let us make a hasty survey of the unemployment situation at the present time. I have for some time past favored a census of unemployment so that we might have some accurate information as to the number of unemployed in this country. The most commonly quoted estimates measuring employment and unemployment are (1) the American Federation of Labor; (2) the report of the National Industrial Conference Board; and (3) the estimates of the President's Committee on Economic Security.

From these sources the following figures may be presented: In 1929 there were between 48,100,000 and 48,600,000 gainful workers in the United States. Of these, there were employed in that year somewhere between 46,200,000 and 46,800,000. Therefore, in 1929 the number of unemployed ranged between 1,800,000 and 1,900,000.

By the middle of the year 1933, which we can consider the depth of the depression, the number of gainful workers had increased to about 50,000,000, but the number of employed had dropped to about 35,000,000, so that at the time when the Roosevelt administration assumed control and direction of national affairs there were very close to 15,000,000 unemployed persons.

About the middle of 1936 the total number of gainful workers had been further increased to about 52,000,000 and the number of employed had risen to between 41,000,000 and 42,000,000 workers, and the number of unemployed is variously estimated at between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 for the middle of last year.

In order to make a more precise approach to this subject, it is necessary to determine what industries have curtailed employment to a greater degree than the others and have been slower in reemploying workers during the recovery period from March 4, 1933, to the middle of 1936, the latest period when any near accurate estimates have been made.

Mr. Robert Nathan, in preparing the estimates for the President's Committee on Economic Security, determines that, of the 47,500,000 people employed in 1929, about 10,500,000 were employed in manufacturing and 2,800,000 in building. By the middle of 1933, when the total employed fell to about 35,000,000, which was a drop of approximately 26 percent, the number of employed in manufacturing had dropped to 5,500,000, which was a decrease of 45 percent, while the number of unemployed in the building trades fell to 15 percent of its 1929 level.

Manufacturing has in the last several years absorbed nearly 3,000,000 workers. The Brookings Institution estimated that in 1929 about 18,000,000 workers devoted their full time to the production and distribution of durable goods, whereas at the low point of the depression there were only 9,000,000 employed in this field, or a drop of 50 percent.

So we may come to these conclusions: There are in this country 4,000,000 more workers available than in 1929; there are still somewhere between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000 who are unemployed; the building industry and other phases of durable-goods industries curtailed employment to a greater extent during the depression than other industries and have reemployed to a lesser degree during the recovery period.

The production of durable goods normally comprises between 30 and 50 percent of the total commodity production. During the depression the decrease in the output of durable goods was greater than that of nondurable goods. Figures show that between 1929 and 1933 the volume of durable goods decreased from $32,000,000,000 to about $12,500,000,000, while the output of nondurable commodities declined from $36,800,000,000 to $31,200,000,000.

This may be accounted for in part because industry during the depression was compelled to forego replacement and modernization. The Department of Commerce, in a recent study of store modernization, concluded that there has been a tremendous percentage of undermaintenance and obsolescence in commercial buildings during the depression. Also, a survey made by the American Machinist indicates that during the depression machinery and equipment have been worked beyond the normal period of useful life. For instance, in 1935, 65 percent of the installed metalworking machines were over 10 years of age, as against only 44 percent in 1925; and 58 percent of foundry equipment exceeded 10 years of age, as against only 36 percent in 1930. Furthermore, there has been great technological progress in this field during that period, and normally this would have required considerable replacement.

If this deficiency is to be made up in the next 5 years and the increase of population provided with goods equal on a per-capita basis to those furnished in the late twenties, the level of production during the next 5 years would have to be something like $33,000,000,000 annually, as compared with the actual production of durable goods in 1936 of approximately $21,000,000,000.

Therefore the possibilities of replacement in the durable-goods field alone are startling. Assuming the accumulated deficiency in durable goods amounts to $25,000,000,000 to $30,000,000,000, if the production necessary to restore the depleted inventories were spread over the next 5 years, the backlog would be sufficient to give employment during this period to more than 3,000,000 persons, over and above the employment necessary to satisfy the regular requirements in durable goods. If the production were $33,000,000,000 instead of $21,000,000,000, as it was last year, then this difference of $12,000,000,000 would absorb a very large proportion of the people of this country who are now unemployed.

In my opinion, one of the greatest deterrents for the modernization and replacement of existing plants and structures is the burden that the undistributed profits tax now imposes upon any attempt made to enlarge and expand present facilities. The tax places an economically prohibitive burden on the expenditure of any part of current income for such expansion or replacement of existing productive facilities. I believe that this tax now presents a tremendous obstacle to the absorption by industry of millions who are at present unemployed.

It is my belief that some relief from the undistributed profits tax should be afforded corporations for expenditures for modernization, replacement, and expansion of existing productive facilities. I have prepared an amendment which I am presenting, which provides for a credit against net income, in computing adjusted net income, for amounts expended during the taxable year for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments to increase the value of property. Under the existing law no deduction is allowed for amounts expended for such services. The proposed amendment allows the credit only in computing "adjusted net income" for the purpose of the "undistributed profits tax", and does not change the computation of "net income" upon which the "normal tax" is imposed.

Under the amendment the extension and expansion of productive facilities, for which a credit is allowed, includes the acquisition or construction of a new plant, and the machinery needed to equip that plant properly, but does not include the acquisition of the real estate, incident to such plant.

(1) The credit will not be allowed to the extent that a deduction for that item has already been allowed in computing net income for the taxable year. This is necessary to prevent a double deduction for the same item.

(2) The credit is arbitrarily limited to an amount not exceeding 30 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this credit. While an unlimited credit would be advisable from the business point of view, the Treasury would undoubtedly contend that it would adversely affect the revenue, and the 30-percent limitation is expressed merely as a compromise which it is hoped might be acceptable to the Treasury.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much interested in the proposal of the Senator. Will he repeat in a few words what exemption he is proposing as to improvements of property?

Mr. DUFFY. The exemption would be that 30 percent in one taxable year could be used for improvement of plant, in extending manufacturing facilities, which in turn would not only give more stimulus to the building trade, but would provide an opportunity for employment for many additional workmen after the plant went into operation.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me see if I understand the thought of the Senator. Here is a great planing mill, we will say. The owner of that mill would be permitted to make an extension which would be sufficient actually to give space for the employment of additional men, and he would be given consideration in his income tax to the extent of 30 percent of his expenditures.

Mr. DUFFY. No; to the extent of 30 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted net income.

In other words, at the present time there are many manufacturers in my State who would be glad to make improvements to their plants, but they feel that they cannot afford to do so because of the undistributed-profits tax imposing such a great burden on them when the earnings do not go out in dividends.

I do not care whether this particular device shall be adopted or something else. I should like to have a greater leeway, so that there will not be such a great burden upon manufacturers who want to extend their plants, which in turn will give more employment to people. When we are talking about industry "taking up the slack" and doing its part, I think we ought to give industry at least a little chance to make some expansions. I know that millions of dollars' worth of such expansions and extensions would be made by small companies in my State alone if that were done.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is right, and I believe he has made a suggestion which is well deserving of the serious consideration of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I approve of what the Senator has said. I may say that last year, and also at the beginning of this session, I introduced several bills, one of which provided cushions along the lines indicated, and permitted manufacturers and others to expand their premises and their plants and modernize their machinery for the purpose of giving greater employment and bringing their mechanical appliances up to the highest standard, and allowed them deductions from the amounts which otherwise they would be compelled to pay under the undistributed-profits tax.

I could not get any hearing on those bills for the reason, as the Senator knows, that measures of that character must originate in the House of Representatives. I had hoped, and I still hope, that when the tax bill is before the committee—and one will come over within a few days—attention may be given to my bill or the Senator's bill; and if the Senator is here, I beg him to come before the committee, and I will join him in insisting upon some legislation on the subject.

Mr. DUFFY. The reason why I impose upon the Senate at this time is because I am leaving the country tomorrow, and I did not anticipate that the Senate would be in session upon my return in about a month.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator will have ample time to make his trip in very leisurely fashion, because the deliberations of the Congress are so slow and so long-drawn-out that even though we should begin considering his wise bill tomorrow, I am sure it would be under consideration at the time of his return.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent that I may at this time introduce the bill to which I have referred and have it referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to introduce a bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be received.

The bill (S. 2852) to amend section 14 (a) (1) and section 26 of the Revenue Act of 1936 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair-labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement with reference to the pending measure.

In conformity with the desire of everybody, as I said yesterday, to finish the business of Congress at the earliest possible date consistent with the performance of our duty, it is desirable that we hold sessions as late as possible. It is now only 25 minutes after 4 o'clock, and there are amendments pending to the bill which we might dispose of. I see no reason why we should quit at this hour, with amendments pending which we might dispose of. I think, therefore, the Senate ought to remain in session at least until 5 o'clock in order to dispose of such amendments as are ready to be voted upon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] desires to discuss the bill, and would like to start tomorrow. For that reason I suggested to the leader of the majority that the Senate probably would adjourn earlier today than normally it would adjourn. However, I am willing to comply with his request and offer the amendment that I suggested sometime ago, if it is now in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is out of order. The amendment was offered by the Senator from Oregon this morning, and later withdrawn. The matter now before the Senate is the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator from Colorado has formally offered his amendment, of course my amendment is not in order; but if he is not ready to offer his amendment now, I should be willing to go forward with the one I suggested earlier in the day.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest, then, that the Senator from Colorado formally offer his amendment at this time, if he wishes to do so, and that the Senate take a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been offered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then let us vote on it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I be permitted to make an inquiry? Is the Senator from Colorado at this time prepared to go forward with the further discussion of his amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has already discussed his amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that, of course, but there may be other Senators who desire to discuss the amendment. If so, and they are not prepared to do so now, I suggest that the Senator withdraw his amendment, and then I shall offer mine. I suggest that the Chair address the inquiry to the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has heard the inquiry. What is his reply?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, I have no further discussion of the pending amendment unless there are questions. I do not know whether or not the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] cares to discuss the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood that the Senator from Colorado, having offered his amendment and having discussed it, was willing that the Senate vote on it without further discussion unless some other Senator wanted to discuss it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further discussion, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I did want to discuss the amendment for a short time, but I did not know it was to be brought up at this time. I was called at my office and told that the amendment was coming up. I did not intend to discuss the amendment for more than a very short time; but I should prefer to do so tomorrow, if the matter could be put over until tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I can meet that situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the Senator from Colorado temporarily withdraw his amendment in order that the Senator from Oregon may offer his amendment, so that we may dispose of that, with the understanding that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado may be offered again tomorrow, and the Senator from Montana may then discuss it, and then we will take a vote on it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that the Senator from Colorado is not going to insist upon a roll-call vote on his amendment, but simply wishes to offer it and explain it, and I desire to call attention to some of its provisions tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Colorado willing to withdraw his amendment temporarily for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am, Mr. President. I withdraw the amendment temporarily.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado has been withdrawn by unanimous consent, I offer the amendment which I discussed briefly this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment in the nature of a substitute will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 51, line 3, after the word "agriculture", it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

> Or any person employed in connection with the canning or other packing or packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges, fruits, maple sugar, or vegetables, when the services of said employee are of a seasonal nature and do not extend over total periods of more than 6 months in any 1 year.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, we have discussed that amendment rather extensively today. So far as I am concerned, I do not care to engage in any further discussion of it. The committee went into the matter very carefully, and unanimously, so far as I recall, reached the conclusion that canners should not be wholly exempted from the bill, but that the bill should be left in its present condition, which, in our judgmnt, will take care of the seasonal conditions which the Senator from Oregon mentions in his amendment.

Personally, I sincerely hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should be disposed to agree to the amendment if it were confined to hours of employment; but I see no reason why a person who is employed for only a few weeks or months' work in a canning factory should get a smaller minimum wage than a man who works all the year around. As a matter of fact, I think he ought to get more. The trouble with the amendment is that it leaves out of the bill any provision which would give these poorly paid workers an opportunity to get a decent minimum wage by a collective bargain through a Government agency.

I agree that the provision limiting the working hours might well be changed so far as temporary canning industries are concerned, but I cannot for the life of me see why a person who works only a few weeks a year should be deprived of the opportunity to go before some organization of the Government in an effort to get a decent minimum wage.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not a fact that the very temporary character of the work, the emergent character of the work, is a pretty definite assurance of a reasonable wage for the short period of time during which the men are employed?

Mr. WALSH. That is not the evidence we have in regard to many industries, particularly the sugar-beet industry, with which I am sure the Senator is familiar.

Mr. WHITE. I am not familiar with the sugar-beet industry, but I had assumed that in many of these temporary and emergent works in many sections the very fact that they were temporary in and of itself assured a reasonable wage.

Mr. WALSH. The fundamental theory of the bill, as I gather it, is that the poorest-wage workers, who are not organized, who have no means of asserting their rights to a living wage, are now to have the benefit of a Federal commission to hear their claim to a living wage, and to be granted one by the power and authority of a board created by the Federal Government. It seems to me that the hundreds of thousands who work only temporarily and in seasonal work ought to have the benefit of that agency. It may be that the board will find they ought to get a lower minimum wage than is received by those who work the year around, but they certainly ought not to be left out in the cold. If the bill has any merit at all, it is in the protection it would afford sweatshop workers and the wage earners employed by "chiselers", and to have the Federal arm of protection extended to them to see that they get something approaching a living wage. If that merit is not in the bill, then the bill is not worth anything. It is the first time any attempt has been made to give the unorganized, unprotected, forgotten men and women receiving low wages and working long hours an opportunity to have some agency other than a labor union to see that they get a living wage.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the practice which obtains throughout the country, but I am sure that in the West the hourly wage is reasonably higher than the minimum prescribed by the bill. I quite agree with the philosophy of the Senator from Massachusetts. No one wants a sweatshop wage paid, and that is not the practice in the West. It might be well if we would limit the amendment to hours of labor rather than include wages, but certainly the hours of labor in the field covered by the amendment should be exempted from the operation of the provisions of the bill.

It will be noted that I speak in the amendment of seasonal employment and have inserted a maximum period of 6 months, which is a conservative estimate of what would be called seasonal labor. It is a definition within the amendment.

I do not know whether I can state for those who are supporting the amendment whether they are interested in the canning of vegetables and fruits and berries and fish. It might be well to let this amendment go over until tomorrow so that some Senators may confer about it. I know the Senator from Maryland is very much interested in the amendment I have offered, and he is absent, having gone home for the day, I understand. Personally, I would not have any objection, believing as I do now that we should take the wage element out of the amendment, but I think it should be the purpose of the modified amendment to exempt the industries named from the provisions of the bill with reference to the hours of employment. I hesitate to assume the responsibility of making the suggestion at this time of modifying my own amendment without a further consultation with those who are as interested in it as I am. I suggest to the very able and amiable leader of the majority that probably the amendment I have offered should go over until tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as I think I stated to the Senator from Maryland before he left that there probably would be no vote on an amendment at this time, I am perfectly willing that the amendment should go over until tomorrow. In view of the fact that two or three Senators have matters they desire to have disposed of, I think we might suspend consideration of the pending bill at this time and take up two or three other measures.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill, with a request that it be printed. I prefer not to discuss it this evening, because it is in the nature of a substitute for the bill, and it will take considerable time. I think it fair to Senators that they have a chance to read it.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator desire to present the amendment, have it printed and lie on the table?

Mr. MALONEY. I make that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be received, to be printed, and to lie on the table.

INTERSTATE OIL COMPACT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have conferred with the majority leader and the minority leader about asking unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 183, which is a resolution giving the consent of Congress to the extension of an oil compact among six southwestern States. An oil compact is now in existence, but it will expire on September 1 of this year. Unless the extension is granted, the compact, of course, will die. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to an extension and renewal for a period of 2 years from September 1, 1937, of the interstate compact to conserve oil and gas, executed in the city of Dallas, Tex., the 16th day of February 1935 by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, California, and New Mexico, and thereafter recommended for ratification by the representatives of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, and Michigan, and subsequently ratified by the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado, and Texas, which said compact was deposited in the Department of State of the United States, and thereafter such compact was, by the President, presented to the Congress and the Congress gave consent to such compact by House Joint Resolution 407, approved August 27, 1935 (Pub. Res. No. 64, 74th Cong.). The extended and renewed compact, executed in New Orleans, La., the 10th day of May 1937 by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, and New Mexico, and there recommended for ratification by representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, New Mexico, Illinois, and Colorado, and since ratified by the said States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, New Mexico, Illinois, and Colorado, which extended and renewed compact has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States, and reads as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"This agreement may become effective within any compacting State at any time as prescribed by that State, and shall become effective within those States ratifying it whenever any three of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, and New Mexico have ratified and Congress has given its consent. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto as hereinafter provided.

"ARTICLE II

"The purpose of this compact is to conserve oil and gas by the prevention of physical waste thereof from any cause.

"ARTICLE III

"Each State bound hereby agrees that within a reasonable time it will enact laws, or if laws have been enacted, then it agrees to continue the same in force, to accomplish within reasonable limits the prevention of—

"(a) The operation of any oil well with an inefficient gas-oil ratio.

"(b) The drowning with water of any stratum capable of producing oil or gas, or both oil and gas in paying quantities.

"(c) The avoidable escape into the open air or the wasteful burning of gas from a natural-gas well.

"(d) The creation of unnecessary fire hazards.

"(e) The drilling, equipping, locating, spacing, or operating of a well or wells so as to bring about physical waste of oil or gas or loss in the ultimate recovery thereof.

"(f) The inefficient, excessive, or improper use of the reservoir energy in producing any well.

"The enumeration of the foregoing subjects shall not limit the scope of the authority of any State.

"ARTICLE IV

"Each State bound hereby agrees that it will, within a reasonable time, enact statutes, or if such statutes have been enacted then that it will continue the same in force, providing in effect that oil produced in violation of its valid oil and/or gas conservation statutes or any valid rule, order, or regulation promulgated thereunder, shall be denied access to commerce; and providing for stringent penalties for the waste of either oil or gas.

"ARTICLE V

"It is not the purpose of this compact to authorize the States joining herein to limit the production of oil or gas for the purpose of stabilizing or fixing the price thereof, or create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but is limited to the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the avoidable waste thereof within reasonable limitations.

"ARTICLE VI

"Each State joining herein shall appoint one representative to a commission hereby constituted and designated as the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, the duty of which said commission shall be to make inquiry and ascertain from time to time such methods, practices, circumstances, and conditions as may be disclosed for bringing about conservation and the prevention of physical waste of oil and gas, and at such intervals as said commission deems beneficial it shall report its findings and recommendations to the several States for adoption or rejection.

"The Commission shall have power to recommend the coordination of the exercise of the police powers of the several States within their several jurisdictions to promote the maximum ultimate recovery from the petroleum reserves of said States, and to recommend measures for the maximum ultimate recovery of oil and gas. Said Commission shall organize and adopt suitable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business.

"No action shall be taken by the Commission except: (1) by the affirmative votes of the majority of the whole number of the compacting States, represented at any meeting and (2) by a concurring vote of a majority in interest of the compacting States at said meeting, such interest to be determined as follows: such vote of each State shall be in the decimal proportion fixed by the ratio of its daily average production during the preceding calendar half-year to the daily average production of the compacting States during said period.

"ARTICLE VII

"No State by joining herein shall become financially obligated to any other State, nor shall the breach of the terms hereof by any State subject such State to financial responsibility to the other States joining herein.

"ARTICLE VIII

"This compact shall expire September 1, 1937. But any State joining herein may, upon 60 days' notice, withdraw herefrom.

"The representatives of the signatory States have signed this agreement in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States, and a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

"This compact shall become effective when ratified and approved as provided in article I. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto by affixing its signature to a counterpart to be similarly deposited, certified, and ratified.

"Done in the city of Dallas, Tex., this 16th day of February, 1935.

"And whereas, it is desired to extend and renew said compact for the period of 2 years from September 1, 1937, its expiration date;

"Now, therefore, this writing witnesseth:

"It is hereby agreed that the said compact entitled 'An interstate compact to conserve oil and gas' executed in the city of Dallas, Tex., on the 16th day of February, 1935, and now on deposit with the Department of State of the United States, a correct copy of which appears above, be, and the same is hereby, extended for a period of 2 years from September 1, 1937, its date of expiration, this agreement to become effective within those States joining herein when executed by any three of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, and New Mexico, and consent thereto is given by Congress.

"The signatory States execute this agreement in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States and a duly certified copy thereof shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

"Executed as of this the 10th day of May, 1937, by the several undersigned States, at their several capitols, through their proper officials thereunto duly authorized by resolutions or statutes of the several States."

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of section 1 is hereby expressly reserved.

PRINTING OF HEARINGS ON THE INVESTIGATION OF INTERSTATE RAILROADS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Printing Senate Resolution 155, authorizing the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to have printed additional copies of hearings held before a subcommittee on Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, relating to holding companies. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 1,000 additional copies of part 1, and each subsequent part, of the hearings held before a subcommittee appointed by the chairman of said committee, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, "To investigate interstate railroads, holding companies, and affiliated companies."

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 363, to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission. The joint resolution has passed the House of Representatives, and is an authorization for the appropriation of $150,000 more for the Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 363) to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 9, after the word "thousand", to strike out "and five hundred"; on the same page, line 19, after the word "and", to strike out "Delegates'." and insert "Delegates"; and at the end of the joint resolution to add two new sections, so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 8 of the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution to enable the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans, and for other purposes", approved June 1, 1936 (49 Stat. 1392), is hereby amended by striking out the sum "$200,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the sum "$475,000."

SEC. 2. Such public resolution is hereby further amended by adding new sections thereto, as follows:

"SEC. 9. Sums heretofore or hereafter received from the sale of publications and other material of such Commission are hereby authorized to be appropriated as a revolving fund for the further acquisition of such publications and material.

"SEC. 10. That the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commisison is authorized and directed to procure sufficient copies of the booklet entitled 'The Story of the Constitution', published by the Commission, to provide a distribution quota of 2,000 copies for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate from a Territory. Enclosures for mailing such booklets shall also be provided by the Commission. The quantities of such booklets and enclosures required for Senators shall be delivered to the folding room of the Senate and placed subject to the order of the respective Senators and the quantities required for Representatives and Delegates shall be delivered to the folding room of the House of Representatives and placed subject to the order of the respective Representatives and Delegates.

"SEC. 11. Any funds heretofore or hereafter made available to the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission for carrying out the functions imposed upon such Commission by or pursuant to law may be expended by the Commission for such objects and in such manner as the Commission may deem necessary and proper to accomplish the purposes of such functions without regard to the provisions of other laws or regulations relating to the expenditure of public funds except that this exemption shall not be construed as waiving the requirement for the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit.

"SEC. 12. The President is authorized to appoint a director general of such Commission who shall not be deemed an officer of the Government."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

SUGAR PRODUCTION AND MARKETING

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked that before the adjournment of this session of Congress the subject of sugar should be dealt with. In his statement the Senator said in effect:

First. That the President, in his message on sugar, said that the Jones-Costigan Act had worked satisfactorily, and that the President favored reenactment of the principles of that act.

Second. That beet crops had been planted on the basis that the present law would be reenacted.

Third. That there is no opposition to it upon the part of the producers or those most interested.

As I read the message, the President said that the principles of the Jones-Costigan Act should be reenacted in new legislation, emphasizing that a quota system must be accompanied by necessary complements, which he said were:

(a) Adequate protection for the consumer;

(b) Adequate share for labor;

(c) Benefit payments, with larger payments for family-sized farms than for larger units; and

(d) A tax of at least 75 cents per 100 pounds.

These are the principles of the Jones-Costigan Act and not of the present law, since under the present law no benefit payments are made, and there is no tax.

With respect to the existence of opposition, it seems to me that the Senator from Idaho is in error.

Reports of press conferences and press statements indicate to me that the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Interior are all in opposition to the bill now pending before the House.

They are equally opposed to a joint resolution which would continue the quota system without tax, since they have said on many occasions that a quota system without a tax is indefensible.

I desire to say, Mr. President, on behalf of the State of Florida, as one interested, that I am opposed to any new sugar legislation of the character indicated by the bill now pending, and I am equally opposed to the extension of the present sugar law, the Jones-Costigan Act, for the reason that I think it unfair, in that it restricts what I regard as the inalienable right of an American citizen to grow upon the soil of this Nation the produce of that soil at least to the extent of the consumption requirement of this Nation.

I should like to say, Mr. President, that I cannot believe any administration or any party for long will adhere to a contrary principle.

By way of summary of the attitude of the Florida sugar producers, I ask leave to have incorporated in my remarks a statement on the sugar situation embodied in a letter from Clarence R. Bitting addressed to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

JULY 26, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BORAH: I am deeply appreciative of your telegram of July 20, in answer to my letter of July 17. I am sure that in our objectives on sugar we see eye to eye, although possibly our approach to a solution may be different.

You tell me there are 80,000 beet-sugar farmers with 100,000 employees, an average of 1¼ hired men per farmer, which would indicate that by far the great majority of sugar-beet farmers are what I referred to, in my testimony of last March, as operators of family-sized farms, i. e., a farm operated by a farmer, his family, and not more than one hired man. Perhaps you are not familiar with my attitude toward such farmer, expressed during hearings before House Agriculture Subcommittee on Sugar during March of this year in the following words:

"If to assist him to get back on his feet, financially and otherwise, it is either necessary or desirable to grant special consideration and favors to the farmer who tills his own soil with the aid of his own immediate family and not more than one hired man, all well and good. No person, or persons, will more quickly and freely grant that aid to the individual, independent farmer, the backbone of our national welfare, than the cane-sugar producers of the Everglades. We do not, and will not, object to such payments to operators of a family-sized farm—a farm operated by the producer, his family, and not more than one employee. But 2,000 tons, or even 1,000 tons, of sugar cannot be produced on such a farm.

"The justice in, and necessity of, aiding that great body of individual, independent farmers, operating family-sized farms, should not be used as a smoke screen to pay public funds to, and thus increase the profits of, employers of large number of farm workers, whether those workers be classified as sharecroppers, tenant farmers, adherent planters, adherent farmers, or as plain farm labor. The agriculturist who finds it necessary to employ a number of assistants, either on a permanent or temporary basis, should, like the general storekeeper, so arrange his affairs as to be able to operate without gifts from the Federal Government."

One of the representatives of the beet growers, during these same hearings, asked for increased benefit payments to beet growers who produced the equivalent of 2,000 tons of sugar which, based upon Department of Agriculture statistics, would require an acreage, on the farm, devoted to only one crop, of 1,280 acres—2 sections—2 square miles. I think you will agree with me that a farm, only that part which devoted to sugar beets comprises a planted area of 2 square miles, is quite a chore for Farmer Smith, son John, and hired man Jack.

I think you will likewise agree with me that when two classes of stockholders in a beet-sugar company start litigation over the division of profits, as has happened during this year, when "benefit payments" were not distributed, there must be very substantial profits to distribute. The sugar-beet growers whom I have had the pleasure to meet have impressed me as able and successful businessmen-farmers, certainly none of them have ever given me the impression of being ill-fed, poorly clothed, or lacking in pocket money.

An examination of beet-sugar production in the United States discloses some unusually significant figures. From 1901–2 to 1904–5 beet-sugar production showed a normal upward trend; in 1905–6 and 1906–7 it spurted upward, then dropped back for the next 2 years, returning to a normal upward trend until 1915–16; then after another quick increase it dropped back from 1917–18 to 1919–20, making tremendous forward strides during the next 2 years; during 1922–23 and 1923–24 it dropped back to the levels of about 10 years previous. Beginning with 1924–25 beet sugar again began its spectacular climb until it reached its peak just prior to the Jones-Costigan Act; since then beet-sugar production has been fairly constant, but it has never reached the prerestriction peak, nor has it ever filled the quota assigned to it. Thus it may be said that under restrictive legislation there has been no restriction on beet sugar—just benefit payments.

The history outlined in the preceding paragraph has a much deeper significance to you and me than to the casual reader. It very clearly supports my contention that sugar beets supply a most desirable "cushion" to both industry and agriculture, as I testified before the House subcommittee, in that the production increases in times of stress and decreases, relatively, in times of general prosperity, and for this reason, if none other, a quantitative limitation is unsound. It was for this basic reason that during the March hearings on proposed sugar legislation, I stated:

"All of the purposes sought to be attained by the proposed legislation can be much more simply and surely obtained without taxing food out of the mouths of our people and without legalizing a raid on the public Treasury, while at the same time increasing employment in both agriculture and industry, through unlimited continental sugar production and provision for any balance required being supplied by those areas which maintain living standards equal to those in continental United States."

The last time continental supplies of sugar were exhausted the offshore sugar-producing areas "soaked" the American housewife more than 25 cents a pound for this vital necessity of life, and it did not return to a reasonable price until continental supplies were again available. Neither the Jones-Costigan Act, the Jones-O'Mahoney resolution, nor the proposed sugar legislation provide any means of assuring the American housewife an adequate supply of sugar at a reasonable price, although they all guarantee the offshore areas (that gouged the American housewife the last time they had the opportunity) 70 percent of the continental market. True, if the price goes up, the estimates of consumptive requirements may be raised, but that does not guarantee a fair price any more than unrestricted importations did when sugar sold at 25 cents or more a pound.

You state that the pending legislation will not increase the price of sugar, by which I assume you mean the price to the consumer. May I direct your attention to the fact that I was the only representative of sugar producers who, during the March hearings, objected to increasing the cost of food to our people? My basic reason for believing that the consumer always pays the tax was based not only upon my own experience but also upon Secretary Wallace's statement (in his report to the President dated December 10, 1935, pp. 12 and 25) that processing taxes are excise taxes, and domestic consumers pay the processing taxes.

I have indeed a great deal of sympathy for our sugar-beet grower and believe that he should obtain a fair portion of the proceeds from the sale of the produce of his soil, but I cannot agree that the way to protect the American farmer is to give to others 70 percent of his market. The proposed legislation does not, as you claim, recognize the principle of protection of the American market for the American producer, but does the very opposite in assuring to others 70 percent of our market.

Florida, paying higher than average farm wages, is producing sugar at a lower cost than most of the offshore low-wage areas that are being presented, on a silver platter, with the great bulk of the continental market. Some excerpts from my testimony of last March are enclosed.

Again thanking you for the nice telegram of July 20, I am,

Sincerely and faithfully yours,

CLARENCE R. BITTING.

SHENANDOAH MEMORIAL, AVA, OHIO

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, House bill 7564, to permit the erection of the Shenandoah Memorial in or near Ava, Ohio; and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7564) to permit the erection of the Shenandoah Memorial in or near Ava, Ohio, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the erection of a memorial to those who met their death in the wreck of the dirigible Shenandoah", approved May 22, 1936, is hereby amended to read as follows: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to erect in or near Ava, Ohio, a suitable tablet or marker to commemorate the heroic services rendered by Commander Landsdowne and other members of the crew who died when the Navy dirigible Shenandoah was destroyed."

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before I move an executive session I may say that, depending on the progress we shall make on the pending bill tomorrow, we may undertake to have the Senate meet at 11 o'clock following tomorrow. I hope we may make sufficient progress so that will not be necessary, but we want to get along with the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the Senator willing to have me recognized before he makes his motion for an executive session, so that I may have the floor tomorrow when the Senate convenes?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized and has the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky to move an executive session.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Carl A. Fisher, of Utah, now a Foreign Service officer of class 6 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ralph J. Rivers to be United States district attorney for the fourth division, District of Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 28, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 27, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who hast set man and the universe in their order, we rejoice that we are not victims of time or space. We praise Thee, even though veiling fogs may shut out the stars, Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee. Heavenly Father, look into our hearts and fill them with love toward our fellow men and keep us faithful to truth. Clothe us, we pray Thee, with a very fine sense of honor, fidelity, and self-sacrifice. Do Thou make us strong of mind and clear in purpose. Gracious Lord God, may our people be obedient, God-fearing, and law-abiding, and hasten the day of Christian brotherhood in all the earth. We pray in the name of our blessed and glorified Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 69. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

DEATH OF HON. CHARLES A. KORBLY, FORMER MEMBER OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad privilege and duty to announce to the House the death in this city yesterday of Hon. Charles A. Korbly, who represented the Indianapolis, Ind., district in this body with distinction from March 4, 1909, until March 3, 1915. A lawyer by profession, he served with great ability and credit as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency and assisted in writing the Federal Reserve Act. In addition to being one of the coauthors of that great statute he became widely known by his writings on financial subjects. A Democrat by convictions, he exemplified the sound principles of Jeffersonian philosophy, and was highly esteemed and frequently consulted by President Wilson and the other leaders of his time. Quiet, modest, unassuming, and gifted with a most ingratiating personality, he will be missed by many thousands of people who had learned to love and trust him.

STATEMENT BY AMERICAN OFFICIALS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am very much distressed to read in the forum of the Boston Transcript a statement supposed to have been made by Dr. Francis B. Sayre, our Assistant Secretary of State, at London, which is as follows:

> We in the American Government are convinced that lasting peace can never come until the people constructively build for it. There must be changed economic policies. That is why we are bending every energy to tear down the indefensible trade barriers which force down in every country the national standards of living.

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that our Assistant Secretary of State should make such a statement in London. According to an Associated Press dispatch he made a somewhat similar statement at Oxford, in which he said:

> We in the United States seek to tear down the great barriers and teach the gospel of economic liberalism. We've got to turn back to the principles of Jesus Christ and put them into practice.

It has never been the custom, I know, for our Assistant Secretaries of State, our ambassadors, our ministers, or our representatives to commit the United States Government to any policy while that person was in a foreign country.

Dr. Sayre speaks of tearing down these trade barriers. The workers in agriculture as well as the workers in industry in the United States know that the reason this country has become the greatest country economically, with the highest standard of living in all the world, is because we have had those trade barriers. The Assistant Secretary of State had no right to make these statements in a foreign land, and I am sure America and the workers of this country do not want these protective tariffs removed. The quotations may be Dr. Sayre's views, but not the views of the people of these United States, I am very sure. The workers in our factories and on our farms must view these statements with greatest alarm. They know it was under the protective tariff that our standards of living advanced until today they are unequaled in any other country in the world. You and I know they do not want these standards lowered. Break down the barriers and our women will be working for 20 or 30 cents a day, as they are in some countries. Accept the policy proposed in Dr. Sayre's statement, and thousands more of our workers will be walking the streets and thousands who are working will be doing so for a mere pittance. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may sit during the sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is important legislation coming before the House today. I do not think there are enough Members present for us to proceed with it. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 124]

Arnold	DeMuth	Hoffman	Plumley
Barden	Dies	Hook	Reece, Tenn.
Biermann	Dingell	Hope	Reed, N. Y.
Bigelow	Dirksen	Jenks, N. H.	Rigney
Boehne	Doxey	Kerr	Robertson
Boylan, N. Y.	Driver	Kloeb	Ryan
Buckley, N. Y.	Duncan	Kniffin	Schuetz
Burch	Eaton	Lambeth	Scrugham
Caldwell	Eberharter	Lanham	Sirovich
Cannon, Wis.	Ellenbogen	Long	Smith, Maine
Cartwright	Fernandez	Lord	Smith, W. Va.
Celler	Flannagan	McClellan	Snyder, Pa.
Clark, Idaho	Fulmer	Maas	Steagall
Cluett	Gasque	Maloney	Sullivan
Cole, N. Y.	Gilchrist	Mason	Taylor, Colo.
Cooley	Goldsborough	Meeks	Voorhis
Cravens	Greenwood	Miller	Wadsworth
Crosby	Griswold	Mosier, Ohio	Withrow
Crosser	Harlan	Mott	Zimmerman
Culkin	Hartley	Parsons
Deen	Hill, Ala.	Peyser
Dempsey	Hill, Wash.	Phillips

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 345 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

STATE LIQUOR-DISPENSING SYSTEMS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7949) to exempt State liquor-dispensing systems from the requirement of keeping certain records and rendering transcripts and summaries of entries with respect to distilled spirits.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not expect to object, this is a rather important matter, and I think that the chairman of the committee should tell the House what is sought to be accomplished by this legislation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Answering the gentleman from New York, in the first place it is a bill that was reported out of the Ways and Means Committee unanimously. It was recommended by the Treasury Department and is intended to prevent the making of unnecessary reports by those States which have State liquor stores.

At this time I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND], the author of the bill, to answer any further questions.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman should make a full explanation of this radical change in connection with reports in this matter. The House should know what it is doing.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the present law requires the States that have liquor stores to furnish reports to the Internal Revenue Department for every individual liquor store the State has, which results in the making of very voluminous reports. These reports have to be made by each individual liquor store, and the reports are rather enormous and it costs money. In the State of Pennsylvania it will cost in the neighborhood of $500,000 a year to furnish these unnecessary monthly reports by every individual store in that State. The same thing applies to all other States that have State liquor stores. This resolution is introduced to save this expense to the States, and that is the reason we want this bill passed. It is a bill prepared by the Internal Revenue Department itself, and it has the unanimous support of the Ways and Means Committee. There should not be any objection to a matter of this kind.

Mr. SNELL. We are entitled to know what it is, that is all.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. That is about all there is to it.

Mr. SNELL. How would it cost any State $500,000 a year to make these reports?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. The State has to make an individual report on every individual store in every State in the country.

Mr. SNELL. How many States are there that have this system?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. About 17, I believe. Pennsylvania has 572 liquor stores under its control. These stores have to send this duplicate report that they furnish to the State down here to the Internal Revenue Department. The fact is, these reports are never looked into by the Department. The Department simply takes the report from the State commission and the tax is paid on all the liquor that is bought and sold in the State. This is really a duplication of effort.

Mr. SNELL. The man who runs the liquor store makes out these reports?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Exactly.

Mr. SNELL. He does not have to have extra help?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much extra help does he have to have to make out the report?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. To the extent of some $500,000 in the State of Pennsylvania alone.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has definite information that shows it cost the State of Pennsylvania $500,000 a year?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. That is the report that has been made to me by the State liquor commission in Pennsylvania. I cannot say what it would cost other States, but I suppose it would be in proportion. For instance, let us take the State of New York.

Mr. SNELL. We do not have State liquor stores.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Different States have State liquor stores. How liquor is dispensed in New York, I do not know.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know either. Everybody sells it over there.

Mr. DOUGHTON. These reports are all unnecessary so far as the Treasury Department is concerned.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. It is really a benefit to the Treasury and it will save the various States that have controlled liquor stores this exorbitant sum of money.

Mr. SNELL. What was the reason for putting that in here when the original law was framed?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. This was done before the States had controlled liquor stores. It is the old law they are operating under, and they have to furnish these unnecessary reports.

Mr. SNELL. This will result in more unemployment. You are trying to relieve unemployment, and this will result in more unemployment in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I would like an answer to that question with reference to unemployment.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. What was the question?

Mr. SNELL. It is going to increase unemployment in the State of Pennsylvania if we pass this law, because the gentleman's State takes extra help to make out these reports.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Exactly.

Mr. SNELL. Then we are doing something just the opposite to the intent of other legislation you are putting through. You are putting through something now which will result in unemployment.

Mr. McCORMACK. The saving of this money will enable the State to utilize the saving in other directions, which will result in increased employment.

Mr. SNELL. Tell me how they are going to do it.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Is it not a fact that this saving will only mean an increase in the payments made to the favored few who are taken care of by the present Democratic regime in Pennsylvania? It will not result in a saving to the taxpayers but will simply mean an increase of salary to those who are presently employed under the Democratic administration?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. No; I think my friend is going a little far in making that statement. Any time you save Pennsylvania $600,000 you are saving it for the taxpayers of the State.

Mr. DITTER. Will it be saved or will this money be distributed among those who are presently on the pay roll?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. I say to the gentleman it will be a saving to the taxpayers of Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. In dispensing with these monthly reports, as suggested, will there be annual reports made showing what disposition is made of the sales of liquor and what the liquor stores are doing? And further, will there be reports made so that we can keep a record of what is going on regarding such sales?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. The State commission has to furnish that information to the Bureau of Internal Revenue just the same.

Mr. McFARLANE. Rather than the individual liquor store?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. The State commission has the information regarding the amount of money that is disbursed.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Of course, if the summaries and transcripts are desired by the Bureau of Internal Revenue here, they can be obtained upon request. No information is going to be taken away from the Bureau of Internal Revenue which it desires.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. How many reports are the liquor stores requested to make to the Bureau of Internal Revenue?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. The 572 liquor stores in Pennsylvania have to make out monthly reports. This is what we are trying to eliminate.

Mr. RICH. Then each store makes 12 reports annually?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states that this costs $500,000?

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. That is an enormous sum of money for this service. The Commission tells me it costs in the neighborhood of $500,000 to make up these reports.

Mr. RICH. May I say to the gentleman that he is interested in keeping the State liquor stores from making out unnecessary voluminous reports, but I wish the State Democratic administration could come into the manufacturing establishments and see the reports the State of Pennsylvania is asking the manufacturers of Pennsylvania to make out and the reports to the Department of Commerce that the Federal Government is asking the manufacturers to make out. If, as the gentleman states, it costs $500,000 for the State liquor stores to make out these reports, the Democratic administration will open its eyes when it finds out what the manufacturers of this country are compelled to pay to make up their reports. This condition is a real shame and is something that ought to be corrected. If it is wrong to ask the State stores to make out one report, then the Democratic State and National administration should have a heart and give some relief to the businessmen of Pennsylvania in making out the many, many voluminous and unnecessary reports they are compelled to make out. Has the Democratic whip from Pennsylvania ever given this a thought? It is just as necessary and expedient that business be relieved of this evil as the State liquor stores. I hope it will receive some consideration from their hands. You can see that it is absolutely necessary. Will you act?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3318 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. II, title 26, secs. 1208 and 1209) (relating to keeping entry books with respect to distilled spirits and rendering transcripts and summaries thereof), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The provisions of this section shall not apply to States and Commonwealths and liquor stores operated by such States and Commonwealths that maintain and make available to inspection by internal-revenue officers such records as will enable such officers to readily trace all distilled spirits received and disposed of by them: Provided, That such States and Commonwealths, and the liquor stores operated by them, shall, upon the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, furnish to the Commissioner such transcripts, summaries, and copies of their records as he shall require."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Select Committee on Government Organization, I call up the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be confined to the bill and limited to 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, at this moment I have requests on this side for 2 hours of time. I cannot consent to a limitation of 30 minutes to a side, and must object to the request. May I suggest to the gentleman that we make it 4 hours?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request to 1 hour on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that general debate be confined to the bill and limited to 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. I shall have to object to that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Utah that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 161, noes 37.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 261, nays 71, answered "present" 1, not voting 98, as follows:

Mr. LYNDON JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], and I therefore withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants, with Mr. PATMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Under the rules of the House anyone recognized is recognized for 1 hour. Am I right about this?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. SNELL. I object, Mr. Chairman. This is a very important bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants and to fix the compensation of each at the rate of not more than $10,000 per annum. Each such administrative assistant shall perform such duties as the President may prescribe.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, this is a short bill and your committee thought there would be no objection to it. This is the first bill that the committee has been able to report and it covers only one subject. The committee has divided the matter that is under discussion, with respect to reorganization of government agencies, into four bills, and this is one of them. The other bills will be presented at a later date.

This bill consists of only a few lines, and I take it the Members have read it, and, as I have stated, I had assumed there would be no opposition to the bill. We have always understood, almost from the time we entered the grades at school, that the President of the United States is very much overworked, that it is a position that requires unlimited endurance, and the entire time of the President is occupied with the handling of most intricate and most difficult problems. No man is called upon to handle so many intricate and difficult problems as the President of the United States. It seemed to your committee that the President should have such administrative assistants as he thought necessary in order to perform efficiently the job he is doing.

The President selected a committee to investigate this question, and the committee, after going into the matter for a number of months—and, by the way, this committee was composed of experts along the various lines they were investigating—reported that, in their opinion, the President should have at least six administrative assistants in order for him to adequately perform the duties he is now performing.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell the House what specific information came to his committee that led them to come to that conclusion?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. The specific information that came to the committee is in the hearings.

Mr. SNELL. I have read all the hearings, and I would like to have the gentleman tell us of anything that occurred in addition to the hearings.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Our judgment is based largely on the recommendation of the President's committee that was appointed to investigate the matter, and I think that is all set out pretty thoroughly in the report we have made.

Mr. SNELL. There are very few items in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is true; but I think those items are sufficient to advise the House as to why it is necessary to have these administrative assistants.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me from reading the Brownlow report and the hearings that their general recommendations are based on the entire reorganization of all the executive departments of the Government. Is that not correct?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That would not be my judgment.

Mr. SNELL. That was my judgment, based on the general reports to the committee.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I will ask the gentleman from Utah whether at any time during the consideration of this matter there was any objection interposed by any of the minority members of the select committee with respect to this particular item?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Not that I know of.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield to me, I stated right out in the hearings that I thought it was a very bad practice.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I may say to my friend from New York that we served upon a subcommittee, had a conference with the Director of the Budget, and I recall very distinctly the clarity of the gentleman's voice when he said with reference to the secretariat or the increased personnel for the President, he wanted the President to get what he wanted.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; not that.

Mr. SNELL. I want to say in reply to that statement that that did not carry the approval of the rest of us, anyway.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I thought the gentleman from New York had such persuasive powers that he represented what is left of the gentleman's party when he spoke about the matter.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to know whether any representative of the administration came before the committee asking for this measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I may state that the only ones who came before the committee were the members of the committee appointed by the President to investigate these matters.

Mr. SNELL. That was a question of the entire reorganization of the executive departments of the Government, and it so states in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No; there were others who testified.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is stated in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Others testified on other matters, but this committee are the only ones that testified on this particular question.

Mr. SNELL. And the testimony the gentleman refers to in these hearings states that these men are to act really in the capacity of the present Secretaries. They are to receive reports, while under our organization the heads of the departments are the ones who should receive the reports and sift them out and report on them to the President. That has been so from the formation of our Government up to the present time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am willing to yield the gentleman some time, and he can make his own statement about this matter.

Mr. SNELL. But I am trying to get some information from the gentleman that is not in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I think I have answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield for a question to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the gentleman is thoroughly posted on what the committee did or what the committee intended to do. In this bill we are providing for the appointment of six assistants. At the present time the President has three, and every other President, from the beginning of the Government, has had only one or two. Can the gentleman tell me how he arrives at the conclusion that the present President should have six, and what duties he expects these six to perform?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Utah has yielded to me and I would like to have an answer to that question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. I shall answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not want the gentleman's answer.

Mr. WARREN. Well, the gentleman is going to hear it whether he wants it or not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman wants to interpolate something and take me off my feet, I suppose he can.

Mr. WARREN. But the gentleman from Utah has yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will suspend for a moment. Does the gentleman from Utah yield for further inquiry, and to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, whether the gentleman from Ohio wants to be answered or not I do not care.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And I do not care to have the gentleman from North Carolina answer me.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman from Ohio has just stated that every other President has had either one or two secretaries. The gentleman knows it to be a fact that in the very beginning of the Hoover administration the gentleman's party came in here, having an overwhelming majority, and created two new secretaries, one position going to Mr. Akerson and the other to Mr. Ritchie, giving Mr. Hoover three during his term.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want to say that the gentleman did not quote me correctly. I said that at the present time this present President has three secretaries. I further said that most of the time from the beginning of the Government down the President had only one or two. Now I said, we are doubling the number we have had, and I want the gentleman to answer me, and he has not answered the question.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman can look at the reporter's notes and see what he said.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want an answer to my question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I shall be glad to answer the question. The gentleman from Ohio is confusing secretaries with administrative assistants. These are not secretaries in the ordinary sense of the term.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio rose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I do not yield further.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman answer the question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am trying to. These are administrative assistants; they are men comparable to men who are in the larger corporations, who aid the Chief Executive in determining what matters should be passed upon and how they should come before the President so that he may pass upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Not now. I want to make this point, to illustrate what I am getting at, and answer the gentleman's question. Even in the Department of the Treasury there are two assistants to the Secretary, each getting $10,000 a year. There are two technical assistants getting $9,500 a year each, two assistants getting $8,500 a year, two technical assistants and special assistants getting less money. All of these are administrative assistants. They are men who are helping the Secretary of the Treasury do his job as Secretary of the Treasury. What we are asking and what the President is asking, and what he is asking of you men is to give him some help. You know that the President, any President, needs competent help, needs trained and efficient men who are experts in their various lines to furnish him information.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. In just a moment. The President needs help of a technical nature. He needs men who can go into a problem pertaining to the departments and analyze it and bring it before him in a succinct yet detailed form, so he can quickly understand the matter as it actually exists, and so that he can determine how he shall proceed.

That is the purpose of these administrative assistants. Of course, the present President has a lot more work to do than former Presidents. In President Hoover's administration the letters were only 200 a day. Now they are 4,000 a day. But I do not want you to confuse that with the work these administrative assistants are to do. It is a matter of saving money; a matter of saving time; a matter of doing the job as it should be done. There is no corporation of any consequence that does not have administrative assistants who are experts, technically trained, and carefully chosen for the particular job they are going to do.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have no criticism of what the gentleman has said. I noticed he used the expression "the President needs this help." I am wondering if the gentleman would not agree with me that the Congress of the United States, through its Members, should be fearless enough to vote ourselves the money which we need for additional clerk hire, that we may properly and promptly handle the increased business that comes before us? In that connection I would like to say I believe the petition of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] for additional clerk hire is vitally proper at this time. Does the gentleman agree with that?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I agree with that. Members need additional clerks. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. Can the gentleman tell me whether one of these secretaries will be Charles West, who is now already supposedly on the staff?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I will say to the gentleman that the President of the United States has an absolute right to choose whomsoever he pleases for his secretaries, and I have no idea who they will be.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that under the Coolidge and Hoover administrations nothing was done and they did not need any secretaries? We are actually in need of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. Is it not a fact that a big bank will have as many as eight or nine vice presidents who are acting in about the capacity of these executive assistants that the President is asking for?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has again expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

I wish to read exactly what the President said about this matter. The President said on January 12, quoting his words:

> The committee has not spared me. They say what has been common knowledge for 20 years, that the President cannot adequately handle his responsibilities, that he is overworked, that it is humanly impossible, under the system which we have, for him to fully carry out his constitutional duty as Chief Executive, because he is overwhelmed with minor details and needless contacts arising directly from the bad organization and equipment of the Government. I can testify to this. With my predecessors who have said the same thing over and over again, I plead guilty.

Those are the President's words.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as one of the two minority members of the greatly heralded Reorganization Committee, whose proceedings until a day or two ago were kept so secret that even you Members were not supposed to know what was proposed and what went on in the committee, I want to say to you that you should not consider it strange that secrecy was desired. There was a fight going on over the Supreme Court. Did you hear about that? Enormous power seemingly was desired to put through a certain program. Coupled with that came this stupendous reorganization scheme, and it was such another arrogant demand for Executive control of government that it must not be openly discussed, lest the two demands prove too great a shock to the Nation.

First, I want to congratulate the members on the Democratic side of the House. They have proven themselves able to withstand great pressure. They apparently intend to move cautiously and use their own judgment. They know that I greatly respect them—COCHRAN, WARREN, FRED M. VINSON, and the others. Certainly they seemed to recognize the enormous power that had been requested, and are not unmindful of the danger of grasping for power by the Executive, who has been so thoroughly rebuked by his own party in another legislative body. But they are still steadfast members of their party. They are determined to save the President. This report before you seems a simple thing, and you may well say, "The mountain has labored, and here is your mouse." [Laughter.]

In spite of Farley or the President they are going to stay in the party. The little girl went to a party to which she was invited, but when she got home she said, "Nancy was very disagreeable all the afternoon."

"Well, why did you not come home?"

"I just slapped her face and stayed."

I think somebody's face has been slapped, but they are going to stay in the party.

I ask you, now that these secret hearings are available, that you read the report and contemplate the power that has been asked for. They have given you this seemingly little bill to provide the President with six secretaries. That, however, is putting the cart before the horse. These six secretaries might be needed if they passed the so-called reorganization bill, which would have turned practically the whole executive functions of government over to the President. The bill contains only a few lines—pay them $10,000 a year and let them do exactly what the President may prescribe.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. In a minute. I have a few things I want to say first.

So we wonder what the actual duties may be, and we have a right to ponder probable results. The whole fundamentals of our Government practically have been upset largely by these secretaries having a passion for anonymity, these selfless individuals who have sought to avoid publicity. It is now desired that they actually stay at the White House and not in the little red house or on K Street. They should live in the White House, so it would not seem strange to be seen coming in the back door. The President has said that he kept the keys to the back and side doors in his pocket. We think we know better; we think we know who has admittance to the back and side doors.

These are the kind of secretaries desired; selfless; with a passion for anonymity; no wish for publicity; to scheme for the President—an arrogant President. He has displayed, has he not, plenty of arrogance lately—grasping to control the Supreme Court for a program largely hatched by these anonymous persons? A program planned for him not by Moley, not by Johnson, or by any of those former friends, but by those selfless, nonpublicized brain children lacking any practical experience in public affairs. And they have already been credited—they did not want the publicity—not only for legislation affecting holding companies and public utilities, the S. E. C., and many others, so-called, but even Supreme Court reforms for the recent act to obtain control itself. All these pieces of legislation were formulated by these selfless secretaries anxious to avoid publicity, when they come up here in the corridors of Congress and threaten a Brewster, and possibly even a Warren, of North Carolina, might be approached by such secretaries if he did not vote for the program of the President. But they have had a little publicity. Why, one of them sat right here in this Chamber, as I recall it, suggesting to committee members how they could answer arguments against the public-utilities legislation. Those secretaries who worked 16 hours a day; who at times are reported to have slept on the floor; who were musical and could lull even the President into a happy frame of mind, according to the magazine articles we read lately; I have read that these two secretaries whom we are describing were the inspiration which prompted the Brownlow report to request six similar secretaries. Apparently these are the type of secretaries such as will be wanted under this bill. It has been fully demonstrated. No one need stand in the Well of this House and attempt to tell what the President will have them do, for nothing is said in the bill about that. But we can well imagine what he will have them do. We know they will be picked men whom he can trust. Men who he can swear to eternal obedience or else they will go the way of Moley, Douglas, Johnson, and the rest who dared advise him for his good.

Ah, you say, this is a simple matter. Why, this granting of six selfless, anonymous secretaries to the President has already been demonstrated to you is a highly dangerous proceeding. We should now know the great danger of suggesting to this President of ours any new reform to further hamstring business, the only factor that can ever solve the unemployment problem. We have had enough of such suggestions. Shall we now invite more of it, even three times as much?

On reading this report of the committee it is certainly apparent that these are the kind of secretaries you should expect and that you will get. I read in the paper yesterday that these two particular secretaries who have teamed up for all these years are soon to open a private office in New York, and I think then they will publicize enough what they have done in Washington. Anyway, I think the great corporations well know that they are practically the only ones who understand some of the legislation that has been put over. How carefully they worded that legislation. Sixty-six pages even in the wage and hour bill. Oh, only they who drafted that legislation can understand the meaning and the possibilities of legal talent to explain and unravel. They will be needed, oh, so badly needed, by private corporations who now must appeal to them to save them from their own Government exactions. No; these two secretaries have fastened themselves upon the very texture of our Government in such fashion that business may never fully recover confidence for new ventures, so absolutely necessary to the life of our growing population. Practically a new house has been built on the original framework of our Government during the past few years, and the credit or blame to be largely taken by these selfless, anonymous, shrinking violets now soon to be released to rescue corporations from the laws they themselves have fashioned.

It may be, after all, a matter of grave importance to give the President these assistants unless we define their duties and limitations.

The entire reorganization plan will stagger you after reading it. It recommended that the President take over practically the whole executive function of government, leaving the policy-determining power to those whom he would appoint himself. He would take over all administration of government, and referring, if you please, to independent agencies, the results of such investigations and activities that he might see fit. What kind of Federal communications investigation would you get under that set-up? Why, they even desire to do away with the Comptroller General and hold autopsies only on money spent. Read this report carefully and you will realize that such extravagant demands mean a sure dictatorship in this democracy of ours.

Control of the Supreme Court is at least temporarily refused. Complete control of the administrative functions of the Government seems now to be set aside. At this particular time they are striving to save the President from destroying himself. This is painfully apparent. These men on the committee whom I mentioned are patriotic, clear-headed, and conservative, and whose judgment would not allow this entire reorganization bill to be presented, at least at this time.

I have tried to suggest to you how extremely dangerous it might be to give the President any more Cohens and Corcorans. I ask you to think it over. Again I repeat, that is the type of secretary that furnished the whole inspiration for the Brownlow report.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I was wondering if this proposal for six additional clerks had its inception in the six additional members of the Supreme Court that was advocated by the President.

Mr. GIFFORD. Maybe there is something intriguing in the number six. He may have had more than six assistants if he wanted them. He can get a detail from any department of the Government. These two secretaries to which I referred were detailed from the R. F. C. and from the Federal Power Commission. They are paid by those departments and that is where they can flee when the heat is turned on down here. But they are at the President's disposal night and day, not only to carry out his ideas but to bring him new ideas.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. This bill makes no reference to the civil service. Is there a provision in the civil service that exempts executive assistants from the civil-service law.

Mr. GIFFORD. Of course, he could have them now from the other departments who would be under the civil service. But they could get only $8,500 a year under the Classification Act. It is desired to pay them $10,000 a year, as much as you Congressmen receive, although they do not have to spend money to be elected. They will be regarded as more valuable than a Congressman, so it is proposed to pay them $10,000 and be selected from whatever source the President may designate.

Mr. BOILEAU. The personnel of any department of the Government is taken from the civil service, unless there is an exception made in the legislation, which may take them out of the civil service. Automatically, those people are under the civil service without exception, and that provision is not in here. I wonder under the circumstances, if they would then come under the civil service?

Mr. GIFFORD. It says here he may invade any department he pleases and pick career men or any men he desires and after they have served his purpose they shall then be taken back into that department. That is the viewpoint we have. I do not know, but I would judge such selections would be under the civil service.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would not think they would be under the civil service, but in view of the fact this bill does not make any exception, I was wondering if they would not automatically come under the civil service.

Mr. GIFFORD. No; I do not think so.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not read the provisions of this bill very carefully, but may I ask, would the President be free to go outside of the family to make these appointments?

Mr. GIFFORD. The family is already so very busy. Even the lady at the White House now answers Senator WHEELER when he makes a remark. He has plenty of help from the family now.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, at the present time the President has three executive assistants?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Are they paid $10,000 a year?

Mr. GIFFORD. I understand so.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Now, then, a while ago I had a colloquy with a gentleman down in front and I indicated my understanding was that this administration has three secretaries. I understood further that has only been the custom for a comparatively short time. Does the gentleman know how long it has been since the President has had three secretaries down there?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; but I want the gentleman to understand these secretaries are not for these new purposes. These present secretaries are for the purpose of giving out publicity, meeting newspaper reporters, and taking charge of radio matters and meeting the public. These new secretaries are to be anonymous. We must, possibly, not know who they are. They must bring and carry the President's messages, entertain him, and give him new ideas, as at present exemplified by those in similar positions. The Cabinet and administrative officers will receive messages through them, salute, and send their replies by such liaison official. I would think the Cabinet officers would turn over in their beds at the thought that they will have to receive orders from one of these secretaries who will say, "I have a message from the President, who, upon my investigations and advice, recommends your adoption of this particular policy or action."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, the gentleman means these six new fellows are expected to be sleuths of some kind?

Mr. GIFFORD. We have two of them already. That is apparently what is wanted. Shall I repeat? Unquestionably the work of Corcoran and Cohen was the inspiration behind the Brownlow report. They are asking for more secretaries to write our legislation for us; brain children who will write our bills in such difficult language that even our own SAM RAYBURN will need have them at his side to advise him. You will recall that Mr. Huddleston stated, "They shall not sit in our committee any longer." He rebelled at such dictation and was punished. It was his country's loss.

Mr. Chairman, we have taken orders long enough. I see a bright light ahead. I do not think orders will be taken even on that side much longer. I rejoice with you that the President was rebuked in the matter of the Court. A threat was made that Farley would go into Indiana immediately and defeat their courageous Senator. But have courage, my boys, to say "no."

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. When was this emancipation proclamation that the gentleman just referred to issued?

Mr. GIFFORD. I should judge it was of very recent date. I remember speaking on the floor some 6 weeks ago on the "March of Time." I think I ought to make another address describing events since that date, because time has wrought many changes since that recital was made. The mask is off. The intolerance and the arrogance we now plainly see. Certain people hastened back to Washington and have attempted to patch up the differences. They pleaded, "Let us save our party. Let us not destroy our President." But great damage has been done. However, there is hope for the future. If we would adjourn and go home in the next 2 weeks, business could have a breathing spell and real prosperity and confidence might be restored. However, as long as we sit here, with Cohen and Corcoran advising the President, business is and may well be badly frightened and suspicious of their own Government. I believe that even Democrats do not know what the objectives are which the President has really in mind. We wait for a "fireside lullaby" to learn what may be these present objectives.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The gentleman talks about a breathing spell for business. How much of a breathing spell did Hoover give business when he was in the White House? I have here an article from the Minneapolis Journal, a Republican newspaper, headed "Business Upturn—Collection Gains Cut States' Debts."

CHICAGO, July 26.—From State capitals of the Nation came reports today of midyear audits, showing marked improvement in Government finances.

Mr. GIFFORD. I know what the gentleman will say, and I will agree with that, but whatever has been accomplished has resulted in public debt of $36,500,000,000, with over $40,000,000,000 in prospect, and nothing has apparently been helped except by subsidy. This is nothing to flatter ourselves about.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota (reading):

Tax collections shooting upward with the rising curve of business were the principal reasons advanced for the brighter financial picture.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, when the distinguished gentleman from Texas, Mr. Buchanan, passed away early in this session, as I was the ranking Member of the reorganization committee, the Speaker appointed me as chairman to succeed him. I have attended all the meetings, with one exception. I attended the meetings of the joint committee of the House and Senate as well. I know what has been going on, and therefore am in a position to inform the House of our activity.

May I say first that the House committee agreed we would divide the question into four bills. The report and the message that came to the Congress dealt first with the White House staff. The first bill we report deals with the White House staff.

For the benefit of the Members of the House, may I say that the subcommittee handling the civil service phase of the recommendations met last Wednesday, read a tentative bill in full, and is about to render a report to the full committee. We had the assistance of a representative of the Civil Service Commission, and of others, before us. Certain changes were recommended, and so far as I was able to observe, there was no disagreement.

Another phase of the question is with respect to the General Accounting Office and the Comptroller General. The chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] advises me that a tentative bill has been drafted, and I venture the assertion that the bill will be satisfactory to the Members of the House, and if they do not play politics, to the minority as well as the majority.

The fourth question deals with the general reorganization plan and the power to be given to the Chief Executive in reference to the consolidation and elimination of Government agencies.

In other words, may I impress upon you that this is not the finish, it is simply the start. If it were the finish I would not be here today advocating the passage of this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a moment. Let me continue, and I will yield to the gentleman later.

Now, what is this bill? The Congress of the United States has charged the present President of the United States with a great many responsibilities which former Presidents did not have. I recall that in 1929 when the independent offices appropriation bill went to the Senate, the Senate Committee on Appropriations added an additional secretary for President Hoover. When the bill reached the Senate floor the Senate added a secretary in addition to the one that the Senate committee had recommended, and the bill passed the Senate unanimously. Then the bill came over here and was passed by the House without a roll call. I, for one, supported it. I believed the then President of the United States was entitled to additional help. If he had asked for more than two secretaries I would have been willing to give them to him.

I came here 25 years ago, and I may say I served an apprenticeship as secretary before I came to the House as a Member in the Sixty-ninth Congress. I am not egotistical when I say I think I know a little bit about this Government. I know something about the workings of the Government. Stop for one instant and consider that the President of the United States today has reporting to him approximately 120 different Government agencies. There is the answer to the question of why he needs additional assistants. This reason was pointed out in our hearings, which have just been released, and one copy has been sent to each Member of the House.

In the hearings no objection was raised, and, may I say, there was absolutely no objection to this bill until the last 48 hours. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] told me that all the time he wanted on this bill was 3 minutes, but another gentleman from New York, the minority leader [Mr. SNELL] decided on the day before yesterday that he wanted 2 hours. For what? For political discussion, that is all. Only today at 12 o'clock the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] said, "I want an hour and 15 minutes", but when we attempted to settle the question of time, the gentleman asked for 2 hours. Talk about taking orders! I wonder if the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is taking orders from another gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] talked about secretaries coming down here to Congress and telling certain Members what to do. I can say without fear of contradiction that no secretary of the President has ever come down here or come to me at my office, or any other place, and told me what to do since President Roosevelt took office in 1933.

When you talk about a representative of the President coming down here and telling somebody what to do, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] and his colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle, if they have forgotten a man by the name of Walter Newton, a former Member of the House, who used to sit here on this floor not 1 day a week but 5 days a week—and I wonder if he was telling somebody on the Republican side of the aisle what to do during the Hoover administration. He was one of Mr. Hoover's secretaries.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to answer that?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. I grant that, and I ask the gentleman to recall Mr. West and Mr. Keenan coming here openly; but these secretaries, as I said, are the kind that are not supposed to be known.

Mr. COCHRAN. I guess Mr. West and Mr. Keenan are just about as well known as was Mr. Newton. Mr. Keenan cannot come on the floor of the House. I served in the House with Mr. Newton, and I have a great deal of respect for him. I was always his personal friend; in fact, I have always got along with the Republican Members of the House just about as well as I get along with the Democratic Members. I have never had any trouble with the Republican Members of this House. [Applause.]

I want to state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] must bear me out in the statement, that time and again when there was legislation pending here during the Hoover administration I rose and supported the gentleman when many of his own party deserted him, and he knows this statement is true.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman, since I have mentioned his name.

Mr. SNELL. What has the fact that the gentleman has supported reasonable legislation heretofore got to justify his supporting unreasonable legislation at the present time?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know of any unreasonable legislation that I am supporting at the present time or have supported in the past.

Mr. SNELL. Then it is a matter of judgment, is it not? This is absolutely an unreasonable proposition, and every man here in his own heart knows that it is.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is the gentleman's opinion, but my opinion is entirely to the contrary. Let me proceed.

Mr. SNELL. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. COCHRAN. I cannot yield. The gentleman has time on his own side he can use.

Mr. SNELL. All right, if you will give us all the time we want.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] also said, "Why, he is going to select them from any source." Why should he not select them from any source? Is there any reason in the world why he should not? Does anybody try to tell the gentleman from Massachusetts or the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] whom he should select as his assistants, or does anybody try to tell any of us whom we should select as our secretaries?

The gentleman also states he—meaning the President—is going to pick men he can trust. Why should he not pick men he can trust? Is he going to come down here and pick HAROLD KNUTSON? Is he going to pick HAM FISH? Is he going to pick BOB RICH? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. I cannot yield. The gentleman's side has time.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why should not the President pick men he can trust? That is the most foolish statement I ever heard in my life. [Laughter and applause.] All of us want to pick men we can trust, and the man or woman who does not pick a man he can trust will not last very long.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now; I want to proceed with my statement.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman mean that the President could not trust me?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not, of course, questioning the gentleman's integrity.

The gentleman from Massachusetts states that administrative assistants are going to write bills. They are not going to write any bills, but, probably, if they did write some good bills and sent them down here, it would not do any harm for us to look them over. There are very few Members of the House and Senate, with all due respect to all, who can sit down at a desk and write a bill that will stand up, and you know that just as well as I know it. This is why we have legislative counsel.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 more minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Somebody mentioned the name of Mr. Corcoran and Mr. Cohen. I do not know Mr. Corcoran and I do not know Mr. Cohen; I never met either of them; but one thing I do know and that is if they tell the truth about them, they are the authors of some legislation we passed such as the Security and Exchange Act, the Social Security Act, and other outstanding laws, and I think the country would be better off if we had a few more Corcorans and Cohens. [Applause.] Do not let anybody tell you differently. Some of the laws that have been declared unconstitutional by the "Nine Old Men", as you call them, were not written by Corcoran and Cohen, while the laws that have stood up, I understand, were written by Corcoran and Cohen, if we can believe what we read.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now.

These six assistants are to be known as administrative assistants. As I say, the President of the United States has 120 Government agencies directly responsible to him. The Secretary of the Treasury, who is the head of one of these Government agencies out of the 120, has 11 assistants.

What are his duties in comparison with the work and responsibilities of the President?

Just think of that! You voted for them for those assistants; you Republicans created some, while Democrats created others.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not at the moment. The Secretary of the Treasury now has 11 assistants, and needs them, and that is only 1 of the 120 Government agencies that report to the President of the United States. If the heads of the 120 Government agencies should be put into groups, and one of the assistants to the President contacts one group and interviews the heads of agencies when they have some matter to present to the President, and prepares a brief memorandum which he can present to the President when sides of the story; he will have not only the side of the head of the Government agency, but he will have another side; the matter is taken up, then the President will have two and I think that will prove to be extremely beneficial to the Chief Executive. The trouble is that the Chief Executive has not the time to examine into the workings of all of these agencies that must report directly to him. If ever there was a bill that spells economy, this bill does, because if one of these administrative assistants—and the President does not have to appoint six, although he may do so—places information before the President of the United States and tells him something about how these agencies are running, and the President corrects a condition that should not exist, it means a saving of money to the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Please let me conclude. We have given the President a job, and now we want to give him tools with which to do the job; and I say in all fairness that this should not be a political question, because, remember, if the day ever comes—and I doubt if it will come during my lifetime—when your party gets back into power, you will have these six assistants.

Mr. TABER and Mr. RICH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I desire to conclude.

Mr. Chairman, I want the membership of the House to understand—and I do not think there is any Member, at least of the majority of the Committee on Reorganization, who will dispute my statement—that this is the start, and we are going to have more bills to follow, they will be in here very shortly, and you will have an opportunity to vote on them.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there on that point?

Mr. COCHRAN. I only have a moment left. The gentleman should get some time from his side. You are going to have an opportunity to vote on other bills growing out of our work. We have been working hard, we have been going to meetings at 10 o'clock in the morning and sitting there until 12 o'clock noon. We have been reading a great deal from reports. This House created this committee, you created one in the last Congress and you created one in this Congress and you said that you wanted us to do something. Now we are starting to do it, and all we ask of you is your support. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah rose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] relinquish his time?

Mr. TABER. I do not.

Mr. SNELL. I think I have a right to be recognized under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] is recognized.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of recognition is one to be determined by the Chair.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that, if the Chair desires to so rule, but I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Chair rule that I cannot be recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the gentleman from Utah is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Does the gentleman from New York desire to yield any of his time now?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Under the rules of the House, when we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as we have in this instance, without fixing the time for debate, am I correct in saying that anyone recognized by the Chair is recognized for an hour, and has the Chair the discretion of recognizing certain individuals and then permitting those individuals to yield their time to other individuals, to the exclusion of other Members who are seeking recognition?

The CHAIRMAN. That has been the practice. The gentleman from Utah is recognized.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to yield some time?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that we all enjoy a good joke, and I have not come across a more supreme piece of political humor than is contained in one sentence in the report made by this committee, in which it said that these secretaries should be persons with "a passion for anonymity." If anyone before has ever suggested that the present occupants of the White House, or their publicity staff, have been modest or timid or afflicted with anonymity, no one in Washington has heard of it.

I would like to have someone from the Democratic side of the House explain whether these six additional secretaries are to be appointed so that the public can know who they will be, and what their specific duties will be, or whether they are to be undercover men for the Chief Executive of the United States? If this bill passes, will Cabinet officers be needed? It has been freely asserted that the present administration is somewhat displeased with different Cabinet members, but does not desire to retire them, and that this is a new, adroit way to appoint men who will overreach or partly replace the present Cabinet, so that the President will not be obliged to rely upon those whom in the past our Chief Executives have relied upon and with whom they have consulted and cooperated.

I do not know whether it is a coincidence or by design that we are to have about the same number of executive private secretaries as we now have members of the Cabinet, so that the President can rely upon each of those individuals, rather than upon the chief of some of his departments.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. For a brief question.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] in stressing the need for this legislation, called attention to the many bureaus and other agencies that are reporting directly to the President. Can the gentleman inform the House just how many new bureaus have been created since the New Deal went into office?

Mr. THURSTON. I do not have the accurate figures, but possibly half of the existing 120 bureaus, commissions, boards, administrations, and authorities have been created in the last 4 years.

Mr. KNUTSON. One hundred and four, according to my information.

Mr. THURSTON. But we were told that the administration is vitally interested in economy, and the able gentlemen from the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, and Mr. WOODRUM, of Virginia, made the announcement yesterday that there would be a real economy move on the part of the present administration, and today we have a measure to provide six additional secretaries at $10,000 each annually. Typical Roosevelt logic. Of course, there will be secretaries to the secretaries, and the usual perquisites without end. We are starting out—rather continuing—on a policy of extravagance rather than economy.

I am surprised that any Member of this House would seriously contend that the President needed this additional aid. In this connection, I want to call attention to some of the agencies you have here to assist the President. Last month the total Federal pay roll for executive branches amounted to $127,998,772. That means that at this time the executive branch is paying in salaries more than $1,500,000,000 annually. Who will consistently claim we need more high-salaried secretaries? The President is Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. There are now assigned to duty in Washington 806 thoroughly trained military officers and we have 730 efficient naval officers, all men trained and skilled in their respective branches. How many persons do we have in the civil branches of the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Iowa 3 additional minutes.

Mr. THURSTON. I have here a table issued by the Civil Service Commission released July 1, 1937, showing that for the month of May 1937 we had a total of 115,000 Federal employees in the city of Washington, and in the field or country at large, 725,000, making an aggregate of 840,000 employees of the executive branch. Practically every line of human endeavor has come under the contact and training and experience of these Government employees. Of course, these figures do not include the military or naval service. With all of this trained and skilled personnel you know and I know and the country knows that the President is just as much Commander in Chief of the Department of Agriculture, and especially the Treasury Department, as he is Commander in Chief of the Army, and he can call to his aid any of those experts—men who have been trained in the Government for years. There are several thousand persons employed by the executive branch who receive from $3,000 to $12,000 per year. He is entitled to their advice and also their cooperation. So when we talk of necessity for these six additional secretaries, that is pure camouflage. What is the real reason? I cannot believe that any Member on the floor of this House seriously believes that the executive branch does need these additional employees, unless he wants the President to have a little supergovernment confined to the White House, probably to check up on his Cabinet or some of these other officials who apparently do not have his confidence. If that is the background for these "passion anonymities", I think the majority should have the frankness to come out here and say so.

I know how deeply embarrassed the many splendid members of the majority have been in the past few months, and how they have been importuned to lay aside their judgment, their views on government, and their discretion so as to support many of these measures without merit and without logic and outside the pale of sound government; just plain Treasury raiding. So it is to be hoped that when this test comes, even though it does not involve a great amount of money, irrespective of party affiliation or Executive pressure, they will have the courage to speak out and say they are going to reject this useless, extravagant expenditure of further Federal funds, and thereby oppose further centralization of power in the President. I thank you. [Applause.]

NUMBER OF CIVIL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES IN THE REGULAR, NEW, EMERGENCY OR RELIEF, AND THE WORKS PROGRAM AGENCIES OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT, WITH ADDITIONS AND SEPARATIONS, FOR THE MONTH OF MAY 1937

The monthly report of civil employment issued by the Civil Service Commission shows a total of 840,159 employees in the executive branch of the United States Government service on May 31, 1937, an increase of 4,900 employees since April 30, 1937, of whom 1,404 were permanent employees and 3,496 were temporary. There was a decrease of 463 employees in the District of Columbia and an increase of 5,363 outside the District of Columbia, making a total of 115,912 employees in the District of Columbia and 724,247 outside the District of Columbia on May 31.

There were increases in employment in the Post Office Department of 981 employees, chiefly substitute clerks and carriers, and of 579 in the Treasury Department, principally in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with the collection of social-security taxes. There were seasonal increases in employment in the War Department of 3,982 employees, chiefly in the Engineer Department at Large; in the Department of the Interior of 1,125 employees, mainly in the General Land Office, the National Park Service, the Alaska Railroad, and the Alaska Road Commission; and in the Department of Agriculture of 571 employees, primarily in the Forest Service, the Soil Conservation Service, and the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine.

The total civil pay roll for the executive branch of the Federal Government for the month of May was $127,998,772.

Decreases in employment were reported in the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works of 910 employees, in the Panama Canal of 799 employees, and in the Navy Department of 354 employees.

There was a total of 661,796 employees in the regular agencies on May 31, 1937. In the new agencies (agencies created since Mar. 4, 1933) there was a total of 51,528 employees, and in the agencies and parts of agencies financed by emergency funds there was a total of 126,835 employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and set out some statistics and Government tables therein.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desire to use further time?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, in 1936 the passenger revenue of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. from train operations over 10,380 miles of track in the central-eastern region of the United States was $76,552,256.

The New York Central Railroad, another great passenger carrier, operating passenger service over 11,219 miles of track in the Great Lakes region, received in passenger revenue for 1936 the sum of $62,575,824.

In 1936 the Pullman Co., operating over practically every railroad in the Nation, had an income from operations of but $56,347,041.

In the fiscal year 1936, Mr. Chairman, this Government spent for travel expense alone $76,669,506, a sum greater than any of the greatest railroad systems has ever taken in, in 1 year from passenger fares.

Last week the attention of the Congress was directed to the enormity of these travel expenses. I now repeat my charges: "The galloping hounds of waste have spent, or will spend, over $206,000,000 of the taxpayers' money in the fiscal years of 1936, 1937, and 1938."

Mr. Chairman, when one stops to consider that the total income of all the railroads in the United States from passenger fares for the calendar year 1936 was only $412,143,933, it is easily conceivable that someone may next suggest we buy the railroads and operate them for the benefit of these New Deal travelers. Seventy-six million six hundred sixty-nine thousand five hundred and six dollars is rather a healthy sum of money to toss away for travel expense.

In a few days we will be called on to pass the third deficiency bill of this session. Undoubtedly, that measure will saddle on us some more travel expenses to pay, but before we pay them I suggest that these traveling bureaucrats of the New Deal be advised to pack up their old kit bags for a one-way trip home, where they may again become producing members of society who contribute to rather than abstract from the Federal Treasury.

Although the amounts spent for travel expense may seem to have been encouraging for the railroads and steamship lines, there is another side of the picture which should not be overlooked.

While the Pullman Co. had an operating income for 1936 of $56,347,041, after deducting their operating expenses, their net operating revenue was only $6,613,338. Of this sum, nearly half, $3,159,117, went for taxes.

Perhaps the new dealers will find some new method of taxing the Pullman Co. next year in order to get money for these travel expenses and to continue these hide-and-go-seek journeys in an attempt to find the rendezvous with destiny. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, what excuse or reason is there for this legislation? Our House Select Committee on Government Organization have offered no explanations, but in this report from our committee they choose to quote from the President's own committee on administrative management showing that the Congress should take the advice that was presented to the President and then transmitted to us in the President's message last January. Again we are asked to give the President more power simply because he wants it. These gentlemen appointed by the President say:

This recommendation arises from the growing complexities and magnitude of the work of the President's office.

I believe that all Members of the House, regardless of party, will admit that as our population increases and our modern life becomes increasingly complex, occasionally there are added duties that government must perform, not only for the President but for Congress, too. That is just one of the reasons, Mr. Chairman, that this particular legislation should be defeated. Everyone is aware of the fact that our American democracy is fast degenerating into a bureaucracy. Bureaucracy feeds upon its own power and fattens upon its own funds. Already our Government is top-heavy and this dangerous bill, instead of making it more simple, makes it more complex.

Why has the office of President of the United States become so complex and grown to such magnitude in recent years? It is because, Mr. Chairman, the executive branch of our Government, since the 4th of March 1933 has pretty largely swallowed up the legislative functions of Congress, and if it could have achieved its ignoble purpose recently it would have destroyed the integrity and independence of the judicial arm of our Government. What is wanted and what this vicious measure will help to accomplish is one-man rule—government by executive decree. If the President would realize that the executive arm of government is only one of three coordinate, coequal, coextensive branches of government and not attempt to rule everything from the White House and to control all the activities of the American people, if he would just allow Congress to perform its own constitutional functions, if he would not trespass upon the judiciary but would be content to accept the impartial decisions rendered by able and competent, courageous and conscientious men, we would not have any need for these additional governmental employees. Let us insist that the President keep his word and fulfill his promise to abolish bureaus and reduce governmental expenditures made to us in 1932.

Only day before yesterday the press informed the American people that $1 out of every $3 of our income in this country goes in taxes, Federal, State, and local; 33⅓ percent of the total earnings of the American people are now being spent in taxation. And they propose to balance the Budget by hiring six additional and superfluous administrative assistants at $10,000 each in order to reduce those expenditures. The President and his committee would add fuel to the flame that is fast destroying us.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not the gentleman believe that each one of these six executive secretaries will have a secretarial force of his own which will cause the employment of many more people?

Mr. SHORT. Of course; and new office equipment and supplies will be required. Perhaps traveling expenses will be allowed. God only knows where the end will be. More political parasites placed on the public pay roll to lobby, propagandize, and perpetuate the New Deal in power.

In the report of the President's own committee we are told that the "men for these positions should be carefully chosen by the President from within and without the Government", that "they should be installed in the White House itself, being directly accessible to the President." The report states further:

It also would facilitate the flow upward to the President of information upon which he is to base his decisions and the flow downward from the President of the decisions once taken for execution by the department or departments affected.

Are we to understand from this language that the President can secure quicker and more accurate information from these satellites and sycophants, these theoretical, intellectual, professorial nincompoops who could not be elected dog-catcher in any jurisdiction in the United States than he could from the true leaders of his own party, the chairmen of congressional committees and members of his own Cabinet? [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Certainly these six administrative assistants could not and would not be more willing to give him the information he desires from this House than our own beloved and able Speaker [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Certainly no assistant could give him more accurate or speedier information than Vice President Garner who stepped in just in the nick of time to redeem and hold together the disintegrating ranks of the Democratic Party. Oh, no! Mr. Roosevelt, it seems, would carry out not the advice of Thomas Jefferson, the patron saint and founder of the Democratic Party, who said, "That government is best that governs least." Mr. Roosevelt seems to be obsessed with the idea that that government is best that governs most, and perhaps he wants these six additional assistants in order that he might carry out his plans of regimentation throughout the United States. Then we would have a government of men rather than a government of law. Fleeting fancy would supplant fixed principles. Mr. Jefferson founded the Democratic Party—President Roosevelt has dumbfounded it. [Laughter.] Had Franklin Delano Roosevelt asked the advice of BENNETT CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri; of PAT MCCARRAN, of Nevada; of BURT WHEELER, of Montana; of TOM CONNALLY, of Texas; of WALTER GEORGE, of Georgia; of JOE BAILEY, of North Carolina; of ED BURKE, of Nebraska; of BYRD and GLASS, of Virginia; of MILLARD TYDINGS, of Maryland; of DAVID WALSH, of Massachusetts; of ROYAL COPELAND, of New York; of FRED VAN NUYS, of Indiana, or our own SUMNERS of Texas—if he had talked to even a few of these and other stalwart, patriotic Democrats instead of to a few pseudo new dealers such as this putrid bill would create, he never would have got his own party into the serious predicament and awful, impossible situation over the infamous, illegal, unconstitutional attempt to pack the Supreme Court which, thank God, by patriotic Democrats has been sent to the graveyard and the ignominious death that is justly deserved. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] has control of the time.

Mr. RICH. Does not the Chair intend to recognize anybody except the gentleman from Utah?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter for the gentleman to decide.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not recognized.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. TABER. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desire to yield time?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I do. I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the bill now pending before the Committee calls, in effect, for a reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. I agree that the executive branch should be reorganized, and the resolution which I am introducing today would effect that purpose.

When the Constitution of this country was before the Constitutional Convention there was much opposition to the proposal of a single executive. Actually three States voted against having a single executive. It was argued that with the executive power in the hands of one individual there might arise a Catiline who would seek to destroy the Republic and to impose bondage upon the people. It has since been argued that having the executive power in one person is not compatible with the permanence of popular government.

A resolution providing for an investigation to determine the desirability of a plural executive, such a change in the executive department of our Government to be effectuated through appropriate constitutional amendment is being introduced in the House of Representatives today.

Free government and free men will disappear from the United States if a dictatorship is established here as it has been established in other countries recently.

Against the tyranny of a dictatorship all liberty-loving Americans must mutually pledge to each other their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

Personal government cannot be set up in the United States and the United States survive.

No demagogue with personal-power madness must be allowed to assassinate the American Republic. Demagogic expenditures of public funds must be prevented so that the American people will not be debauched into submitting to dictatorship.

Dictatorship and tyranny must be made impossible in the United States, whatever the device, whatever the means, whoever the man.

One way to ameliorate the danger and to avoid the terrors of a dictatorship is to have a plural executive.

For a long time Sparta and Rome successfully avoided the despotism of a dictatorship and the oppression of a tyrant by having a plural executive.

If the executive power in this country rested in three persons instead of one, hatred of our form of government might not be so brazenly manifested, American traditional policies and precedents might not be so flagrantly violated and destructive and revolutionary policies might not be so boldly proposed.

A plural executive might well make less likely—

First. Constant appeals to class hatred, which inevitably foment revolution and ultimately result in the destruction of a republic. It was just such appeals which were used by the Russian revolutionist, Lenin, to foment the Russian revolution of 1917.

Second. Abolishing the rights of the states and setting up in their stead local soviets or prefectures, with all control in a centralized bureaucracy, thereby imposing Russian or Asiatic collectivism upon a free people.

Third. Cajoling the American people to forfeit their liberties and their freedom by promises of security and comfort which are impossible of fulfillment, and destroying completely the rights of the middle classes, of the small manufacturers and merchants, generally recognized to be a vital part of a true republic.

Fourth. Repeated demands for more and more power to meet new emergencies constantly created by the adoption of revolutionary policies.

Fifth. Attempting to make of the two Chambers of the Congress houses of ill fame through coercion, by means of brutal threats of political reprisals, and the prostituting effects of political patronage.

Sixth. Infamous attempts to put an end to a free and independent judiciary, the bulwark of minorities, and the protection of the rights and liberties of the individual. It is the essence of dictatorship to regard justice as a matter of political opinion.

Seventh. Coercing and abusing the judiciary, thereby developing a widespread disrespect for law and authority.

Eighth. Making use of the criminal courts, of public investigations, and of income-tax and other laws to persecute individuals for political purposes and for personal reasons, thereby promoting Government terrorism and tyranny.

Ninth. Cringing in silence when insurrectionist political campaign allies flaunt law and destroy lives and property.

Tenth. Treating the Constitution as a "scrap of paper" to be violated at will and committing "high crimes and misdemeanors" plainly impeachable in character.

Eleventh. Practicing the policy of Asiatic and European dictators of branding as public enemies all those who voice opposition to their policies.

Twelfth. Constantly proposing innumerable alleged emergency measures so as to divert public attention from the ruthless destruction of all rights of persons and property.

RESOLUTION

Resolved, That the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to investigate the desirability of amending the Constitution to provide that the executive power, instead of being vested in one individual as President, shall be vested in an executive body consisting of not less than three individuals, and, in connection therewith, to make a survey and study of plans for establishing and organizing the head of the executive branch of the Government in a representative republic, including the proposals made during the formation and establishment of the Constitution, in respect of the organization of the head of the executive branch, and including the various plans of organizing the executive head in other comparable forms of governments.

The committee shall report to the House during the present Congress the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations for amending the Constitution as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

[Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago Republican statesmanship and leadership in the House of Representatives reached a high level when, under the leadership of the minority leader, a roll-call vote was forced in the House on the question of creating a $1,200 janitorship. Today that statesmanship is reaching its peak in opposition to this measure.

There is no use of us on the majority side fooling ourselves. We had the assurance up to a day or so ago that there was practically no opposition to this measure, but on account of the tactics displayed here today by our friends on the minority side, this matter has been made a partisan issue and we Democrats are ready to accept the challenge. There is no reason why any Democrat, why any Progressive, or why any Farm-Labor Member should not support this bill on its merits, and there is no reason why any Republican should not support it, except for pure, plain cussedness.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If we were building a house, we would not build a cellar foundation until we knew what was going to be put on top of the foundation, would we? If we accept this as a part of the reorganization plan, and we do not know what is going to follow, we would be just as dumb and just as blind to go ahead?

Mr. WARREN. Well, I can tell the gentleman what is going to follow.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Not right now. I can tell the gentleman what is going to follow.

It was agreed, so far as the House group is concerned, that reorganization would be divided into four parts. This is part no. 1. As has been stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], in a short while a bill affecting the Comptroller General's Office will be brought in here for consideration, and I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], I sincerely believe we are going to bring in a bill, without destroying the effectiveness of that great office, that even the gentleman from Pennsylvania will support. After that a bill dealing with the civil service will be brought in and after that, and in due course of time—when I cannot say—a bill for the reorganization of the executive departments will be presented.

We have been talking today about delegation of power. I have no fear of supporting a bill in this House which delegates power for the reorganization of government. Time after time, in years gone by, the Congress has attempted to reorganize. Every time it has ever attempted to do that it has met with hopeless failure. Congress has never agreed to consolidate. Congress is never going to reorganize, because that has been apparent every time the question has been brought up for consideration. The only way you are going to reorganize, the only way you are going to effect economies by means of reorganization, is to give the power to an Executive who has the determination and the will to do it. Mr. Harding had it, Mr. Coolidge had it, Mr. Hoover had it, and Mr. Roosevelt had it, but all failed to use it within the time it was given to them.

Speaking only for myself, I may say further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no fear about delegation of powers. I think any delegation of power that we give for reorganization should be kept within bounds and limited and circumscribed for a certain period of time.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first bill to be offered. I rest the case simply on this: The Executive has made the request because he said it is necessary. Personally I think it is necessary now without reorganization.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. In just a minute.

No Executive in the history of the Nation, so far as I know, has ever laid his hands on a legislative appropriation bill. That is our function. No Executive has ever questioned, so far as I know, what we write into a legislative appropriation bill. It is not up to us, therefore, to question the Executive when he says that extra assistants and secretaries are needed for the administration of his great office.

Mr. Chairman, this has been a field day and more will be heard along political lines. I do not have to go back again, because the story has been told too many times. That story is burning in the hearts and souls of the American people. For 12 long years the Republican Party, drunk with power, arrogant in its rule, sat here in complete charge of the Government under three of their Presidents and let the country go to its downfall. I do not have to remind even the Republicans that during 1932 and in the first 2 months of 1933 banks were tottering and crashing throughout this Nation. I do not have to tell them that farms and homes were being foreclosed and the auctioneer's hammer ringing in every county seat in the Nation. I do not have to remind them that agriculture was prostrate and every farm commodity was selling below the cost of production.

I do not have to remind them that factories were closed and smoke was no longer coming from the chimneys. I do not have to remind them that 14,000,000 American citizens were walking the streets of this Nation hungry and starving, and standing in bread lines and soup kitchens.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. I will yield to the gentleman in just a minute.

A new leader came in. From the time he took the oath of office on that blue 4th of March in front of this Capitol he inspired hope and confidence in the American people. Since then in election after election that confidence of the American people has been justified.

Who stand here and attack him today? Beginning with his inauguration and down to date at times a majority of the Republican minority in this House have consistently supported much of the legislation he has proposed. Even the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and even our friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], have gone down the line time after time supporting measures the President has proposed for the general welfare of the American people. Talk about expense! We have passed all the appropriation bills at this session of Congress. So far as I can now recall, you have called for roll calls on only two of these bills. You have sat here supinely in your seats and voted for billions of dollars at this very session of Congress without ever demanding a roll call and not even expressing your opposition to such measures.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. May I say that all legislation which has been presented here that I thought good I have supported. I have not hesitated to vote against any bills I did not think were right.

However, I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina that when he offers his support to, and expresses his confidence in the President of the United States, all the gentleman needs to do is read the statements of the President at the time he accepted the Democratic platform of 1932, and many of his later statements, which deal with his promises of what he was going to do. He has not fulfilled these promises. I cannot support the President of the United States when he does not do the things he has promised he would do.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman is like a candidate for office down in my district who said he was in favor of all good laws and against all bad laws. [Laughter and applause.]

I know mistakes have been made. I know the President has made mistakes and will continue to make them. There have been times when I have disagreed and there will be a time at this very session, I am sure, when I shall disagree again. However, I have followed him, and I have gone with him because I have believed in what he was trying to do and because in this time of crisis I believe he has been the only hope and salvation of the American people. [Applause.]

Gratitude, and I am speaking of the gratitude of the people, is the shining virtue of all. To my mind, ingratitude is the basest of all sins. Over 1,900 years ago, Mr. Chairman, there walked the earth a man who went about ministering to the sick and spreading joy to mankind. You recall the story of how He cleansed the ten, and waved to them to go out and spread it to the world. When only one returned to give him thanks, He said, "But were there not ten cleansed? Where are the nine?" I refuse to believe that gratitude is a thing of the past. I refuse to believe that appreciation no longer exists. I refuse to believe that in these attacks upon the President the men and women of this Nation, at times the inarticulate mass, have forgotten in the short space of 5 years. I believe they are the nine who will return and rise up and bless the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, and Mr. RICH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. RICH. I ask recognition, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair declines to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I took my position upon this bill on February 16. On page 5 of the hearings, which are available to the Members of the House, appears the following:

> Does not the result of this administrative set-up look just about like this: It breaks the direct connection of the departments represented and presided over by Secretaries in the Cabinet, and does not that kind of a set-up destroy the present efficiency of the Executive resulting from the Cabinet meetings and the direct contact between these officers and the Executive?

I maintain that position today. The question here is not whether I or somebody on the Republican side of the House can make the welkin ring or whether I can make a grand appeal to the membership on the majority side of the House to support the administration, but the question is the merits or the demerits of this bill. I do not believe a man upon this committee believes this is a good bill or a good thing for the President or a good thing for the country. Frankly, I have heard that sentiment expressed by them.

What does this bill do? It sets up six administrative assistants, who are to be anonymous, who have "a passion for anonymity", who are to be the errand boys between the department heads and the President. What is the set-up of this Government under the Constitution of the United States?

The President is supposed to appoint Cabinet officers who are supposed, under the law, to organize their departments and operate them as the President wants them to be operated. These Cabinet officers are expected to come in direct contact with the President. They are expected to tell him what their important problems are. Now, if the President has not appointed this kind of a Cabinet, his remedy is not six administrative assistants, with anonymous characteristics, but a Cabinet that will go down the line in a constitutional way.

The great advantage of a Cabinet, under such a system as is developed by our Constitution, is that the President can have direct contact and direct support from his Cabinet ministers and at his Cabinet meetings can meet the situations that may arise. If we pass this bill, we are creating wedges that will be driven between the President and his Cabinet, as well as the independent agencies the heads of which the President also appoints.

This is the present situation: Are we going to pass this bill, which would be a wedge bill, driving a wedge between the President and the administrative agencies of the Government, or are we going to promote efficiency in the Cabinet and at Cabinet meetings, so they can function in a proper, honest, and honorable constitutional fashion? I hope if someone in favor of this bill takes the floor hereafter, he will discuss the bill and answer some of the suggestions I have made to you here. I do not believe there is the slightest justification for this kind of set-up.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1½ minutes more.

I hope that not upon fervent, partisan appeals, but upon lack of merit in the proposed legislation, which I believe is clearly apparent to any Member who has had the fundamental groundwork of the Constitution in his mind, this House will consider this measure and that it will vote against the setting up of this wedge bill which would prevent efficient administration of the Government and increase the expense and cumbersomeness of Government. There is no excuse whatever for a bill of this kind, and I hope the House here and now will set its stamp of disapproval upon this kind of extravagant, wasteful, and disorganizing legislation. I do not see how we can go forward with this kind of legislation and get anywhere except into trouble resulting in destroying the very fundamental constitutional set-up that this country has always had.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Can the gentleman tell me why the President wants six? He has not that many sons. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah and Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, in his statements a few moments ago the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] deplored the fact that, as he sees it, the Democratic Party is disintegrating. He also voiced regret at the way some Senators voted on the court bill; but, after all, since nothing is perfect you cannot expect a Senator to be perfect. As I see it, however, many of them are ready to correct their mistake.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I regret I cannot yield. I have just started.

This is the first time I have observed the gentleman from Missouri taking such an interest in the Democratic Party, but since he brings the matter up I hasten to assure him that there will be no disintegration of that party. I want the gentleman to know that the masses of the honest American people are heart and soul with the President and the Democratic Party, and they will continue to be with him because they trust him and believe in him. [Applause.]

If the gentleman will search his memory he may recall that under the last three Presidents—all Republicans—the country was led to the greatest panic and depression it has ever known. It fell to President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party to lead the country out of that depression, and even the Republican press joined in the appeal that immediate steps be taken to give relief to the nearly 14,000,000 unemployed, that something be done to reopen shops and factories, and that confidence be restored so that prosperity such as the country knew under the last Democratic administration could again be known.

Toward relieving unemployment, reopening factories, safeguarding banks, and protecting the farms and homes of citizens, new departments and bureaus had to be created. Among the important ones were the R. F. C., the H. O. L. C., the F. D. I. C., the F. H. A., and others.

Many new duties and responsibilities were imposed upon the President, as even the most unfriendly critic must admit. Four years ago, as a means of affording him assistance, it was recommended that he be given additional help. Again 2 years ago the subject was brought up, but today is the first time we have had a bill before us which contemplates giving him that help by authorizing the appointment of six assistants.

In three different messages the President has dwelt upon the need for such assistants, and I understand that this bill is but the first of four which seek to bring about a coordination of departments and bureaus and to eliminate needless expenditures.

Regardless of political differences, no one can charge that the present occupant of the White House, Franklin D. Roosevelt, is dishonest, or that he does not desire to bring about economy and improvement in conditions.

I notice that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is smiling. It may be that he is considering another ridiculous statement by which he hopes to mislead the people. It was tried in the last election, you will remember, but without deluding anyone. I am satisfied that all of the cunning efforts of the Republican Members will not succeed to even the slightest degree in shaking the confidence of our people in the President.

Another silly charge has been made that by this bill there would be a tendency toward centralization and dictatorship. The charge is amusing. The closest this country ever came to dictatorship was during the Republican administrations, when industrial and financial czars dictated policies. It may fairly be said that they are the ones who seek dictatorship—the return of a dictatorship which has vanished since President Roosevelt took office. [Applause.]

President Roosevelt's aim is not dictatorship but a fair and square deal for all. Equally unfair is the charge that the President has sought to usurp the powers of the courts. As I have often stated on the floor, it is not the President but the Supreme Court itself which has usurped powers by nullifying the acts of Congress whenever they were intended to improve the conditions of the underprivileged masses.

So, Mr. Chairman, fully realizing the need for additional aid for the President, I am heart and soul for this bill. I have served under seven Presidents, and know the needs of the Chief Executive. When the country has in the White House as able, honest, and fearless an Executive as we are fortunate enough to have today he should be given every possible aid and assistance. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. RICH. I desire recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair respectfully declines to recognize the gentleman at this time. Does the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] desire to use more time?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I approach this subject unselfishly, without any ulterior motive, because I am convinced from what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] had to say, that I am not apt to qualify for one of these appointments. But I am one of those who think the time has come when the Congress should take back some of its powers and prerogatives from the Chief Executive rather than concentrate more powers in the hands of President Roosevelt. I am inclined to think that if Thomas Jefferson knew what is going on today, that the machinery on the Democratic side is well oiled and using high-pressure methods to limit debate on this important measure and jam it through, he would turn in his grave at the thought of centralizing and concentrating more power in the Executive branch of the Government and in helping to establish further bureaucratic control in Washington. I have listened here patiently for more than an hour hoping against hope that someone would explain the bill, that someone would give the reasons for it, that someone would let us into their confidence and let us know the need for these six administrative assistants or the need for one single administrative secretary. But no one has advanced any reasons whatever except that the bill provides for six. No reasons are advanced, and no information is given as to what these men are to do. It is quite obvious there might be need for one or two coordinators if we should reorganize the Government and if such a bill is passed, but no one assumes that such a bill will be passed at this session of Congress. Therefore, why the need and the rush for six administrative secretaries for the President, when you do not even propose to put through the reorganization bill?

If this bill were for one coordinator after the reorganization bill is passed, that would be defensible. To my way of thinking, this is just a step to concentrate power in the hands of the President and set up a species of fascism or nazi-ism or an American form of dictatorship, far from the ideals of Jefferson and Lincoln. The Congress, acting like a rubber stamp, has already yielded a large part of its constitutional powers to the President and now proposes to further concentrate power in his hands, and thereby help to destroy our American system based on our three separate and independent branches of government. That is what happened in Germany and Italy. Step by step legislation of this kind centralizing all power in the hands of one man developed into a dictatorship. It may only be an embryonic dictatorship or a kind of benevolent despotism but a rose by any other name smells just as sweet, and a dictatorship just as rotten. This step is like all the others, setting up a one-man government in the United States of America the same as foreign dictators gradually assumed powers in Italy, Germany, and Soviet Russia. I do not ask you to take my word for it. I quote the words of a man who held a high and important position in the Federal Government, Gen. Hugh Johnson. He says:

> But no man can read carefully the legislation and communications sent to Congress since the first of the year, and escape the conviction that, taken altogether, they push our carefully guarded democracy some distance toward the Fascist and communistic experiments, which, for all that is said, are as alike as two peas—government by executive fiat with little, if any, popular participation.

No one has said what these six administrative assistants are to do. Are they to be the Ogpu of the American Government and the secret agents, snoopers, and spies of the President. Is one of them to compile a black list of Democratic Members of Congress and know exactly how they vote on different legislative matters before they go to the White House to gather their patronage? Is another to set up a black list of Republicans? Then the right to criticize the administration, the only right of a minority, will become an unforgivable crime, and we will be singled out for reprisal and punishment. The New Deal ideology patterned on fascism evidently contends that criticism of the administration or the President must be curbed or crushed.

What is the use of these six assistants? The only answer I can find is to set up a supergovernment, a superbureaucracy to make for a one-man government so that the President can govern this country from the White House without the help of the Congress and in spite of the Supreme Court. Already Congress has surrendered its power over the purse strings. Already it has given a lump-sum control to the President. It has given him control of the finances and the monetary system of America, and now you propose to give him six administrative assistants to further centralize and concentrate power in the Chief Executive. If I had my way Congress would cease to be a rubber stamp and reassert its power and prerogatives and take back from the President the authority granted him in the emergency. My answer to this whole proposition is, Has not the time come to take back the powers from the President we have granted him and restore representative and constitutional government in the United States of America? [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the gentleman any more facts concerning this proposed legislation than he had about the evasion of income taxes?

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman will look in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he will see I gave the facts that I was not permitted to present before the joint committee of Congress. I quoted the President from a statement he made 3 years ago, in which he said that he was taking advantage of income-tax loopholes himself like thousands of other American citizens. I am glad the gentleman from Kansas asked that question. [Applause.] The only reason I could not introduce it before the committee was that the committee, setting up a one-party government or Fascist control, refused me the right to criticize the President of the United States or even to the extent of quoting the very words that he had used himself and has never denied.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Can the gentleman tell whether or not the bill we are considering today has been endorsed by the new spokesman of the majority party [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]? [Laughter.]

Mr. FISH. Well, I am much surprised to know that my friend, Mr. BOILEAU, and other real liberals will support a reactionary piece of legislation such as this, further centralizing bureaucratic regimentation, establishing a supergovernment and a one-man control, along the lines and precedents established by Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah and Mr. RICH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 11½ minutes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I really feel that it has been helpful to our friends on the other side of the aisle to have permitted them to pop off a little steam today. How low hath the mighty fallen! God bless them! I am glad you have had an opportunity to express yourselves today. You have been sitting over here for days, weeks, and months unable, because of the order from the high command, to take a position on an issue that has attracted the attention of the Nation. Then when that issue is temporarily put aside, here you rush, Goliath-like, into the arena offering your lives for your party, fighting this sort of thing. Upon my word, it is peanut politics.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I decline to yield. It is simply peanut politics. I regret from the bottom of my heart that my friends on that side can find no other issue.

Now, what was the situation 8 years ago when there was an effort made to increase the secretariat of the White House from one to three? It so happened that I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations at that time. I was a member of the subcommittee on appropriations for the independent offices. An amendment was adopted in the Senate increasing the secretariat from one to three. There was very little debate. It was stated in the Senate that there was one of the men whom they desired to appoint working down there for $7,500, but they felt his position and his work entitled him to a salary of $10,000. Then the gentleman in power desired a third secretary at $10,000 a year. The amendment was adopted in the Senate.

It came here by a unanimous conference committee report, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN] and myself, as minority members, signed. If you will look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 13, 1929, you will find there was not any roll call, there was not any fight. As a matter of fact, I assisted, in my humble way, to put that law upon the books. Why? Because the President of the United States needed additional help. He needed additional secretaries. There was no partisan issue drawn. The Democrats at that time had more fundamental issues than peanut politics. So it was adopted and the secretariat increased to three.

Now, let us see what the situation is in regard to the personnel in the Executive Office of the White House who are administrative, clerical, or fiscal aides. To hear some of the gentlemen, you would think it costs five or ten million dollars annually; that the President has an army down there assisting him do the things that the people of the country expect him to do. Look at the Budget message for 1938 and you will find clerical, administrative, and fiscal officers in the Executive Office of the White House totaling 37 people. Eighteen of those 37 are in minor capacities. Eight of them are in custodial service. Eight of them are in the unclassified service, chauffeurs, doormen, washers, and so forth. That leaves 29 people in the Executive Office, including all of the typists, clerks, stenographers, and secretaries, to do the biggest job in the United States.

In one breath our friends talk about bureaucracy and in another they do not want the President of the United States to have assistants in order to give him the knowledge and information that the Executive should have, which might well assist in meeting some of the objections to bureaucracy. I dare say there are 500 corporations in the United States whose executive heads have more personnel than the President of the United States.

In the Treasury Department there are 14 persons who are Assistant Secretaries or assistants to the Secretary.

There are 14 such persons assisting the Secretary of the Treasury in performing his tremendous job, yet they would deny to the President of the United States the right to have needed assistants to secure information needed by him. This information would not be from the viewpoint of the department heads, not from the viewpoint of the independent establishments, not from one side of the question, but information that would give him both sides of the question. To my mind it is simply a question of whether or not we want to equip the President of the United States with a sufficient force to do this job.

I submit that if Mr. Coolidge, in 1929, with his known characteristics in respect to spending money, if Mr. Coolidge would sign a bill increasing the secretariat to three, with all the increased activities of the Government, with all the increased responsibilities of the President of the United States, they now ought to do what the Democrats did in 1929, when political blood was running about as high as it is now, it seems to me they ought to join with us in giving this personnel to the Chief Executive.

May I say also, Mr. Chairman, that until a couple of days ago I never had the slightest idea that there would be opposition to this bill? Oh! Gentlemen may read from the RECORD conclusions in regard to his attitude toward the whole reorganization bill, but after that question was asked, when we were face to face with the alternative of permitting the Executive to appoint six administrative assistants at $8,000 a year, which he can do without any added authority of law—the President can now select six administrative assistants at $8,000 a year, with the maximum salary of $9,000—or place these administrative assistants upon the same plane that the Secretaries now occupy, with an increase of $1,500 or $2,000 a year for each of these six assistants, say, $12,000 annual added cost, I heard no objection until a couple of days ago. We must decide whether or not, in cold dollars and cents, we could get better men for these positions, men on the same plane as the present three Secretaries. It appears to us it is economy to do so rather than to permit $8,000 men to be selected for these particular positions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my conclusion that even though the remaining parts of the reorganization bill were defeated by the House when they are presented, that this phase of the Brownlow report would still be indispensable insofar as the President is concerned?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I say to my good friend from Illinois that in my opinion the President needs these men.

Mr. LUCAS. The select committee, as I understand it, now are acting more or less upon the Brownlow report.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The select committee has determined to present separate bills to the House so that each bill will stand upon its own bottom in order that the House will have an opportunity to pass upon the merits of the particular bill, and this is the first of the bills.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The point I am trying to make is whether this phase of the Brownlow report is so connected with the remainder of the report that should the latter fail this also should fail?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Oh, not at all.

Mr. LUCAS. That is what I thought.

Mr. RICH and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I must decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, according to the information I have, according to my observations, according to information that is available to all of us, the President of the United States not only needs these six administrative assistants, but every President in the last 20 years ought to have had an increased secretariat to perform the most stupendous task any executive could face; he is entitled to have both sides of a proposition submitted to him; and when the vote comes, Mr. Chairman, I trust that, upon reflection, our Republican friends will be as gracious toward the Chief Executive today as the Democrats in 1929 were toward the Chief Executive of that year. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Utah.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 102, noes 47.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PATMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants; and pending that motion, I move that all debate on the bill do now close, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7730; and pending that motion, the gentleman from Utah moves that all debate on the bill do now close. Upon that he moves the previous question.

The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Utah that all debate on the bill H. R. 7730 do now close.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 255, nays 79, answered "present" 1, not voting 96, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Parsons (for) with Mr. Reed of New York (against).
Mr. Crosser (for) with Mr. Cluett (against).
Mr. Maloney (for) with Mr. Plumley (against).
Mr. DeMuth (for) with Mr. Reece of Tennessee (against).

Mr. Flannagan with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Jones with Mr. Murdock of Utah.
Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma with Mr. Martin of Colorado.
Mr. Kerr with Mr. Peyser.

Mr. LUCAS changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming, Mr. GREEVER, was called to one of the Government departments on important official business. If he were here, he would have voted "yea." Having a live pair with the gentleman from Wyoming, Mr. GREEVER, I withdraw my vote of "nay" and vote "present."

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I cannot qualify. I was absent, together with some other Members of Congress, attending a very important meeting in regard to certain legislative matters; therefore I failed to be here at the first or second call of the roll. Had I been here I would have voted "yea."

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I was absent when my name was called. I was attending a meeting of the tobacco growers and did not reach the Chamber until after my name had been called. If I had been present, I would have voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7730.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7730, with Mr. PATMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate is closed. The Clerk will now read the bill under the 5-minute rule for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants and to fix the compensation of each at the rate of not more than $10,000 per annum. Each such administrative assistant shall perform such duties as the President may prescribe.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the Committee desire recognition?

Mr. COLLINS and Mr. SHORT rose.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHORT moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion just offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] is premature.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, it is regrettable that the Members of this House have not had more time to seriously discuss and debate this very important measure. In essence it is a corollary to the Supreme Court proposal. It removes the Executive one step further from the legislative and judicial branches of our Government.

If my motion should be withdrawn or voted down, and we are given the opportunity to offer amendments, I intend to offer an amendment which will add a paragraph at page 1, line 7, reading as follows:

The President shall appoint as his six administrative assistants other members of his immediate personal family, namely, Elliott Roosevelt, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Jr., John Roosevelt, Anna Roosevelt Dall Boettiger, and Sistie and Buzzie Dall.

This amendment will be offered not facetiously but in all seriousness, because what are the qualifications, powers, and duties of these Presidential aides to be? In the words of the President's own committee, as subcommitted to the Congress on January 12 of this year, we are told:

These aides would have no power to make decisions or issue instructions in their own right. They would not be interposed between the President and the heads of his departments. They would not be Assistant Presidents in any sense. Their function would be, when any matter was presented to the President for action affecting any part of the administrative work of the Government, to assist him in obtaining quickly and without delay all pertinent information possessed by any of the executive departments so as to guide him in making his responsible decisions; and then when decisions have been made, to assist him in seeing to it that every administrative department and agency affected is promptly informed.

In other words, these six administrative assistants will be nothing more than flunkies or errand boys to carry from the heads of the departments of this Government messages to the President and in return carry messages from the President back to the heads of the departments. And for this highly technical and indispensable work each assistant is to receive $10,000 per year.

Is there any Member of this body who thinks that Cordell Hull, a member of the President's Cabinet, needs a messenger to carry his orders to the President? Does anyone suppose Mr. Farley needs an interloper or someone to carry a message to the President when he wants to interview him? Does Mme. Perkins find it necessary that she have someone to carry her views on sit-down strikes to the President? Then, must the President have some messenger to carry his orders back to them, particularly when the President meets every week with his own Cabinet and associates with them in a close and intimate way?

Mr. Chairman, this measure stands condemned on the face of the report itself. The only cause for which the individuals I named in my suggested amendment might be disqualified would be their lack of "passion for anonymity." I submit to you they are thoroughly qualified from every other aspect to fill the high and important functions which are imposed upon them by the proposed legislation. It is inexcusable, unjustifiable, and unnecessary, and I am unalterably, unflinchingly, and unqualifiedly opposed to such legislation.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] stated a while ago he was surprised that I am supporting this legislation and referred to it as being Fascist and reactionary legislation. May I submit to the gentleman from New York I have supported a good deal of the New Deal legislation in the firm conviction that the legislation proposed during the tenure of the administration now in power has been for the purpose, not of fostering communism or fascism but of preserving democracy in this country. [Applause.] I submit the legislation that has been enacted has gone a long way toward preserving democracy. [Applause.] I submit further that in the absence of such legislation we might today have in this country either a communistic or Fascist state.

We Progressives have been the traditional enemy of fascism. We are the enemy of communism. We are the friends of democracy, and are firmly convinced that the present occupant of the White House is trying his utmost to preserve democracy in this country. [Applause.]. Because of the fact that the Progressives have supported much of the legislation which has put additional burdens upon the shoulders of the President, we are willing to go along and give him the assistance necessary to carry out the mandates of Congress. When we create new agencies and increase the responsibilities of the executive branch of the Government, it is our responsibility, we believe, to give the President the assistance he needs to carry out the mandates of the Congress and to carry out a program which is in the interest of the people of this country. [Applause.]

My distinguished friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE], in interrogating the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], made some reference to the President of the United States accepting the advice of the senior Senator from Wisconsin, BOB LA FOLLETTE. There is an incident I should like to recall to the gentleman from Ohio.

The first time I sought any national public office it was in only a minor way, of course, as a delegate to the Republican national convention in 1928. I was elected as a delegate to that convention from my congressional district, and went to Kansas City. The Senator from Wisconsin, BOB LA FOLLETTE, was at the convention, and I can recall some advice he gave to the Republican Party at that time in the form of a minority report from the committee on resolutions. The advice he gave to the Republican Party was in the form of a progressive political platform. Had the Republicans at that convention accepted the advice of BOB LA FOLLETTE there would be a Republican administration here in Washington at the present time and the country would have been a great deal better off. The trouble is that they turned down that advice because it was progressive.

I may say to the gentleman from Ohio and to his Republican colleagues in this House that if the rank and file of the people of the United States could express themselves in regard to whom they would like to have advise the President, I dare say there would not be a citizen in the United States who would receive such a popular acclaim and demand as an adviser to the President as the Senator from Wisconsin, BOB LA FOLLETTE [applause], because he understands the problems of the rank and file of the citizens of the Republic.

Most of the Progressive and Farmer-Labor Members of this House will support this measure, because we believe it is in the interest of good government to give the Chief Executive such assistance as he may require in order to perform his duties and carry out the responsibilities of his office.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Would the gentleman be willing to see Senator LA FOLLETTE the Presidential nominee of the majority party in the next Presidential election?

Mr. BOILEAU. So far as BOB LA FOLLETTE'S candidacy for public office is concerned, I am personally for him for any office he may seek. His fine public record is one which commands the respect and confidence of the entire country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is not in order. A motion to strike out the enacting clause is pending.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah and Mr. COLLINS rose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the motion that it is not in order at this stage of the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state that motions to amend take precedence over a motion that the Committee rise.

The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: After line 7, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. (a) The joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates', approved January 25, 1923 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 92), is amended by striking out 'to one or two persons' and inserting in lieu thereof 'to two or three persons.'

"(b) Section 2 of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 60 (b)) is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 3. The clerk hire of each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner shall be at the rate of $6,800 per annum and shall be paid in accordance with the joint resolution of January 25, 1923, as amended: Provided, That no person shall receive a salary from such clerk hire at a rate in excess of $3,900 per annum.' "

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane and call the Chair's attention to the fact that the amendment pertains to the legislative branch of the Government, while the bill under consideration pertains wholly to the executive branch of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PATMAN). The gentleman from Utah makes the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the joint resolution creating the Joint Congressional Committee on Government Organization in part is as follows:

> It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate the organization and activities of the departments, independent establishments, bureaus, boards, commissions, divisions, services, offices, and other agencies of the Government.

This is about as broad language as it is possible to put in a resolution. Pursuant to this authority this committee has brought in a bill which undertakes to add additional personnel to a certain agency of the Government. The purpose is to add additional personnel. This may not be what some of you may call them. You may call them clerks or executive assistants or by any other name, but, in reality, they are additional personnel.

If the Chair will read the amendment I have offered it will be seen that my amendment merely adds additional personnel to the legislative branch of the Government along with the executive, and I contend that under the rules of the House the amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants. The gentleman from Mississippi has offered an amendment for the purpose of permitting Members of Congress to hire additional personnel as an amendment to the bill. The gentleman from Utah makes the point of order it is not germane.

In examining the precedents, in volume V of Hinds' Precedents, page 427, the Chair finds that to a paragraph appropriating for a clerk to one committee, an amendment providing for a clerk to another committee was held not to be germane. This decision was made on April 16, 1904. The general deficiency appropriation bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the Clerk read:

> For clerk to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, during the fiscal year 1905, $2,000.
> Mr. George W. Smith proposed an amendment to amend the paragraph by adding a provision so that it would read as follows: "For a clerk to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions and for a clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims during the fiscal year 1905, $2,000 each, in all, $4,000."

This was held not to be germane.

In another precedent, in volume VIII of Cannon's Precedents, at page 525, the Chair finds that to a proposition to pay employees of the House and Senate extra compensation, an amendment proposing to include clerks of Members was held not to be germane.

There are other precedents that could be cited, but the Chair believes these precedents to be sufficient.

This bill involves the executive branch of the Government. The amendment involves the legislative branch of the Government. It is the opinion of the Chair, after examining the precedents, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is not germane.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Committee?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the Chair to rule that a motion to lay the appeal on the table is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to table is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 168, noes 58.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the Committee.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS: Page 1, line 3, after the word "appoint", insert "by and with the consent of the Senate."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the amendment is too clearly understood to take the time of the committee in outlining it. I might point out that in all of the minor bureaus there are men at the present time employed at much lower salaries than $10,000, even in the W. P. A. administration, outside of Washington, wherein the appointees are obliged to have their names submitted to the Senate before appointment. Of course, that does not prevail in the case of the three Presidential secretaries; and, with no argument about the bill, one way or the other, it seems to me that the members of the majority should be in favor of the adoption of this amendment, for it is quite conclusive that such an amendment will, at any rate, be adopted when the bill gets to the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDREWS) there were—ayes 48, noes 145.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments to the bill close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for that purpose?

Mr. McLEAN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. McLEAN: Page 1, after line 7, insert a new section, as follows:
> "SEC. 2. That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby proposed to the several States, and when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the said States shall become and be a part of the Constitution, namely:
> "In lieu of the first paragraph of section 1 of article II of the Constitution of the United States of America, insert the following:
> "'SECTION 1. The Executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. Beginning the 20th day of January 1941 the President and Vice President shall hold office during the term of 6 years. No President nor Vice President, either by election or succession, shall be eligible for reelection. The President and Vice President shall be elected as follows.'"

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. McLEAN. I do. A moment ago the ruling of the Chair was that this bill pertained to the Executive Department. Certainly the amendment I propose pertains entirely to the executive department of the Government and is therefore in order. Much has been said about the physical and mental strain upon the Executive. The proposal for the election of the President for a term of 6 years, without eligibility to succeed himself, would relieve it. It would take the Presidential office entirely out of politics. The amendment reflects in no way upon the present occupant of the White House, but embraces a principle which is directed to our system of government pertaining entirely to the executive branch. It has as one of its purposes the relief of the mental and physical strain on the occupant of the Executive Office, enabling the President to give his entire time to the duties of the Presidency.

Now is the time to submit this proposition to the people for their consideration. There should be no opposition to it, because from time to time the principle has been included as a recommendation in the political platforms of both of the present-day major political parties.

Last Tuesday I submitted some observations on the subject which are included in the RECORD of July 20, and it has been my hope that all Members who are interested in relieving the physical and mental strain on the President would read those observations and see the way by which we can make a great reform in our system of government. It becomes more and more necessary because of the increasing complexity and magnitude of our affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the gentleman thought of providing that Representatives shall be elected for 4 years instead of 2 to help the thing along?

Mr. McLEAN. I cannot agree to that. A Representative's term should be limited to 2 years. The House of Representatives should be always immediately responsive to the people. A Representative is expected to reflect the wishes of his constituents. It was the theory of the framers of the Constitution that through the House of Representatives the voice of the people should be recorded, and it should be so recorded, even though it may take on some of the aspects of mob psychology. There are other means provided by our system to check it—the Senate, the President, with his veto power, and the judiciary. It was on this theory the term was made 2 years, and it should remain so.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PATMAN). The Chair is ready to rule. The bill proposes that the President shall be allowed to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] proposes a constitutional amendment.

In volume 8 of Hinds' Precedents, page 542, appears this precedent:

To a proposition to effect a purpose by one method, a proposition to effect such purpose by another method, wholly unrelated, is not germane.

The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: On page 1, line 7, after the word "prescribe", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no person appointed to any of these positions shall be over 70 years of age."

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were ayes 48 and noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PATMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants, directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were ayes 227 and noes 73.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 260, nays 88, answered "present" 1, not voting 82, as follows:

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. GREEVER, of Wyoming, was absent on important business at one of the departments. I am paired with the gentleman. If the gentleman from Wyoming were present, he would have voted "aye." I have voted "nay." Because of the gentleman's absence, I am compelled to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. WELCH. I was on the first call, and did not hear my name. I was not present on the second call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE LATE SAMUEL ROBINSON

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, throughout the whole Government service there are men and women of great efficiency and great faithfulness to duty.

I rise to announce the death of an employee of the Government Printing Office who was, in that capacity, a servant of the House of Representatives. Samuel Robinson, for 57 years, with the exception of 3 months and 2 days, was an employee of the House of Representatives. When he died he was 77 years of age, all but 20 years of his life having been spent in the Government service.

For many years it has been my privilege and my pleasure to know this man, and of all the men I have ever known I can say without reservation that Sam Robinson was one of the most faithful and one of the most efficient men in his capacity that I ever knew.

We will miss him dreadfully. His place will be hard to fill. I thought it was only fitting, Mr. Speaker, that someone at this time should say a word in memory of this splendid servant of the people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

THE PROPOSED PARTITION OF PALESTINE

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer protest against the breach of trust just manifested by the British Government in its recent decree to divide Palestine.

On July 24, 1922, as the reconstruction period following the World War was being inaugurated, in London there issued forth the mandate over Palestine, which was approved by the Council of the League of Nations on September 16, 1922.

In this manifesto the British Government voluntarily assumed the guardianship of the homeland for the Jewish people of the world, and in this mandate, which was approved as previously referred to, it was agreed with the other signatory powers of the League of Nations and also with the consent of the Congress of the United States, to protect and enforce the rights and privileges given for the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine.

As a result of this mandate the Jewish people throughout the world, and especially the Jewish people of the United States, harkened to the call of those Jews residing in persecuted lands, and, believing in the integrity of the British Empire, gave freely to the establishment of the Jewish homeland, known to the world as Palestine.

From a land of desolation and barrenness the Jews of the world, trusting in the fairness and honesty of the British Empire, built a new Palestine which is now on its way to being the "land of milk and honey" so expressly stated in the recordings of ancient history, Biblically and politically.

Millions of dollars contributed by the American Jewry to this cause went into the rehabilitation of Palestine. Today the British Empire is attempting to destroy not only its integrity toward the rest of the nations of the world but also to retard the rehabilitation of this land which has so remarkably taken place in the last 15 years.

In reviewing the preamble of the mandate we find that the allied nations of the world agreed to establish in Palestine a national home for the Jewish people, and that in so doing they recognized the ancient rights of the Hebraic people in Palestine; that the British Empire and His British Majesty solemnly accepted this as an evident truth and undertook, in carrying out this agreement, to exercise mandatory powers in accordance therewith.

This mandate was fully discussed and approved by the rest of the nations of the world sitting in the Council of the League of Nations, as well as the United States by resolution of the Congress. There was no compulsion or necessity for Great Britain to accept this responsibility; it was her voluntary act which placed Palestine under her mandatory power.

In these days of international uncertainty, in these times when every nation, including Great Britain, is claiming international law for the protection of the rights of nations in international affairs, it comes with bad grace for England to attempt to shirk its solemn obligations given in good faith by the rest of the world to Great Britain.

I strongly protest this action in view of the fact that the United States, through the Congress, had given its approval to this mandate, and I urge that the United States, by suitable resolution, take a position at this time which will cause Great Britain to recognize its duty and carry out the mandate as agreed to.

To that end I am today introducing a resolution protesting against the proposed partition of Palestine by the British Government.

Whereas under the mandate over Palestine given to Great Britain by motion of the League of Nations, under which mandate there was to be established a Jewish homeland in Palestine; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States under date of June 30, 1922, passed a resolution, which was signed by the President, favoring the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people; and

Whereas as the result of this action by the Congress citizens of the United States, both Jews and gentiles, have contributed millions of dollars toward the rehabilitation of Palestine: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States views with disfavor the proposed partition of Palestine by the British Government, as contained in the report of the Palestine Royal Commission. And we hereby respectfully petition that Great Britain fully and fairly fulfill the obligations of the trusteeship under which the administration of Palestine is held.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, and Mr. SHORT asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

PRICE CONTROL OF ELECTRIC CONSUMPTION

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking on the Bonneville bill before this House on July 23 I placed before my colleagues on the blackboard a very impressive table showing how electric consumption increases under low rates. The purpose of this table was to show clearly the relationship between the average residential consumption in kilowatt-hours per consumer per year and the average price in cents per kilowatt-hour. There have been many valuable tables incorporated in the RECORD during the discussions of public power projects. These should be preserved for reference, and I add my table to that collection for the benefit of my colleagues who are making studies of power, especially in its relation to public ownership

The following table gives the residential average rate and the average kilowatt-hour consumption per meter in 14 communities in the United States and Canada These communities, partly unnamed, were selected to cover the whole range of consumption in relation to price. These citations help to establish a definite economic law in relation to power. This law may be stated, "The cheaper the price the larger the use." This is fundamental in all discussions of electric power in relation to the public. The names of the cities having the high rates were purposely omitted.

These figures cover both public and private power distribution systems. The publicly owned systems are indicated with an asterisk.

City	Average sale price per kilowatt-hour	Average annual consumption
	Cents	Kilowatt-hours
An Arizona city	11.5	150
Do	10.5	300
A Missouri city	8.7	250
National average	4.8	710
Washington, D. C.	3.25	965
Southeastern utilities	3.20	1,050
Portland, Oreg.	2.80	1,110
Tacoma, Wash.*	1.68	1,565
Tupelo, Miss.*	1.78	1,864
Windsor, Canada*	1.60	2,130
Niagara Falls, Canada*	1.20	2,150

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the gentleman from Oregon just received permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand the gentleman's request.

Mr. PIERCE. That is the request I made, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, inasmuch as the gentleman from Oregon has received consent to extend remarks "at this point" in the RECORD, I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I am opposed to that principle and I would have objected to the request of the gentleman from Oregon had I realized what he had asked. I serve notice now that I shall object to every similar request in the future.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the Democratic majority in limiting drastically the debate today is unexplainable. The bill is an important piece of legislation. It is a distinct departure from established custom. It vitally affects the operation of the executive branch, and its relation to the legislative branch. It should have the careful, painstaking, and deliberative consideration of the Congress.

All efforts on the part of the minority to secure adequate time have been in vain as steam-roller methods have been resorted to for the purpose of shutting off debate. It need not be argued at great length that this procedure is indefensible. If this legislation has merit, if this bill is warranted, what is it, Mr. Speaker, that prompts the majority to refuse the minority a reasonable opportunity to be heard? Can it be that the majority is afraid of the possible unfavorable reaction of the country? Must the bill be slipped through the House surreptitiously to avoid possible criticism from the country? Shall it be said that the alleged merits will not withstand the searching light of noonday or be justified if subjected to the deliberative consideration of the House? The excuse of time cannot be made. Days, weeks, and months have been frittered away here during which frantic efforts have been made to make a pretense to the country that the legislative machinery was in operation when all of us knew that it only amounted to shadow-boxing. Now an important bill is before us, and debate is closed off in an arbitrary, autocratic manner in order to prevent the minority from expressing its opposition.

The bill has not been justified by its proponents. Much has been said to excuse its presentation, but nothing as a reason for its enactment. Only vague generalities have been given as to the duties of these six Presidential assistants. They have been called dignified errand boys, sleuths, snoopers, and exalted office boys. While their duties and powers have not been well defined, the majority has been careful to provide a generous stipend for their hire. No uncertainty is present with reference to salary. Six assistants, not to mention their secretaries, clerks, stenographers, and what nots, are to be created. Sixty thousand dollars for the six assistants is the salary scale. The taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, can be sure of this figure, even though they are left in the dark as to how these assistants are to earn their income.

Some sweet words have been spoken here today. There have been outbursts of eloquence. Much of it seems like soothing sirup. There have been forensic opiates, opiates to dull both reason and conscience. They have been most interesting to me, as I recalled events of the last few weeks. May I remind the majority of its catastrophic experiences of the last fortnight? Not from the minority; not from the opposition—but from your own party there has come a rebuke which left no doubt of its purpose and its meaning and against whom it was directed.

It was a revolution in your party against the effort of the President to extend his power, to exercise powers which were characterized in the N. R. A. decision by Justice Cardozo as "unconfined and vagrant." Leaders of your party were fearful of the consequences of ambition. No words were spared in denunciation and warning. Some wounds were made. Some sores were opend. Today the salve was generously applied here in the House to heal the wounds, to bind up the sores. They might well be called Balms of Gilead.

There are features in the present proposal which are difficult to understand and hard to explain. What will the reaction be on the distinguished members of the President's official family? How will the Cabinet members take to this idea of a super-Cabinet group, to this group of assistant Presidents? Can it be that they will welcome their intrusion? Of course, it may be that no objection will be heard because it will give a greater opportunity for political activities and propaganda programs by some holding Cabinet posts. This may be the explanation.

Again I find it hard to understand the frenzy of the majority to grant this additional power to the President, especially after the recent experiences of your party. A week or so ago you asserted a spirit of independence. Today you supinely invite dictation and accept domination. I fear you will regret the support you have given the measure. In the absence of justification statements and in view of the vague, uncertain commitments as to the powers and duties of these appointees, these six assistant Presidents, and in view of the tremendous potential undetermined cost, I cannot do otherwise than oppose the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Has consent been granted to all Members to extend their remarks on the bill H. R. 7730?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I intend to make that request.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] is entitled to be recognized for 30 minutes.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 30 minutes.

NAZI STATE OF GERMANY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House on a subject which I believe to be not only timely but of transcendent interest today. The prime minister of the government of a nation for whom the people of this country have profoundest sympathy was recently in the United States on an official mission to solicit our cooperation as a nation to stave off and, if possible, prevent the war, fear of which fills the air in every chancellery of Europe. We are told this danger of war is the outgrowth of disorders, the major part of which are of an economic character. We are reminded that we are a wealthy people, prosperous in a world in which almost everywhere else national economy is in danger of collapse. We are asked to come to the rescue of a world which is faced with revolution at home and international war because of unbalance in matters economic.

I do not subscribe to the theory that the world situation today is the product of economic factors alone. Other factors today are even more controlling than economic factors.

For nearly a year the daily press throughout the world has, in headlines and news reports, been proclaiming the imminence of a new world war, which would be a clashing not precisely of territorial or other economic interests but of idealogies that are irreconcilable one with another. Men, particularly statesmen, do not fail to see that a war between conflicting idealogies might easily degenerate into a confusion and welter of civil strife and revolution, which civilization would find difficult to survive.

In the world situation today the totalitarian state, communism, or nazi-ism, or fascism, is the outstanding serious phenomenon. The totalitarian state conceives of the political power as subject to no law other than its own notion at a given time of what is best for the welfare, not of its citizens as individuals directly, but of the nation as a community. To the community the individual must subject his physical well-being, his property, even his life when called upon. He must stand prepared to subject to the will of a political party and even to sacrifice completely, when that party demands the sacrifice, his liberty as a man, his conscience, his notion of right and wrong, his intellect, his liberty of speech and expression, every right that through the centuries men have held to be inseparable from human personality and which among us are held to be inalienable.

Characteristic of the totalitarian state is the domination of national life by a minority which, highly organized, has been able in a time of national calamity to seize the controls of power, the armed forces, the legislature, the courts, and thus perpetuate itself in office. In the totalitarian state a minority of the people hold dominion over every phase of national life, over the well-being and liberties of the citizen, and dictate what is best for the community.

I propose today to confine myself, in the main, to the Nazi State of Germany in view of the recent courageous utterances of Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, and the false, vicious attacks made upon this great churchman by the controlled press of Nazi Germany.

National socialism—

Writes Otto Dietrick, Reich's press chief of the German National Socialist Party—

started to rebuild from the bottom * * *. The primary concept of our thinking and the key to our understanding of human society is not the individual but the community. The community is the foundation of our economic thought.

This is the opposite of the fundamental principles of democracy.

The supreme concept of its (national socialism's) program, therefore, is not through self-interest to the common good—but the opposite—through the common interests to the individual good.

National economy, the economic organ of the nation, must be served by all its members * * *. The individual cells, of which national economy is composed, are the factory units in which all, employers (shop leaders) as well as employees (shop followers), know that they are dependent on one another, and conceive of their work as a service to the national organization which supports them.

Thus the citizens of a totalitarian state are divided into two categories: Leaders—that is, the governing class—der Fuehrer and his lieutenants and followers; the laborers, the masses of the people. In such a system the right to property becomes a myth, government no longer representative, bound by no doctrine of human rights, subject to no constitution, with absolute dominion over the individual, can do whatever, at a given time, it deems to be conducive to the common good. That power was seized by the National Socialist Party in Germany at a time of national calamity. Recent elections had shown, beyond possibility of dispute, that at that time the National Socialist Party was far from representing a majority of the German people.

In seizing power the National Socialist Party had the help of big business, of the German trusts, its allies. That help was given not, perhaps, in good faith, but by men who, having found it possible to manipulate absolute government in the past, hoped to find state socialism unable to resist it. The trusts, for the time being at least, have found a master in Hitler. They are the victims of their own foolhardiness in preferring intrigue to open defense in the interest of economic justice.

Today the National Socialist Party in Germany has adopted the methods of monopolistic capitalism. It has adopted the morals and methods of monopolistic capitalism as they had developed in Germany under the imperial Reich. Today it is employing the methods of monopolistic capitalism not in the sphere of economics alone; it is applying the methods of monopolistic capitalism in the management of the national socialist dictatorship.

We have subjected monopolistic capitalism under our antitrust laws. We have not forgotten, however, the ruthlessness, the total disregard for human rights, the contempt for moral principles which characterized monopolistic capitalism even in our country.

We have not forgotten the merciless, ruthless wiping out of competitors who were too weak to offer opposition or to defend themselves. The glorification of race in Germany today is nothing more than a smoke screen and camouflage under the shelter of which religion is being wiped out by national socialism under Adolf Hitler.

The glorification of the nation and the national tradition by national socialism in Germany is the smoke screen and camouflage in the shelter of which national socialism has sought to achieve dominion over other powerful influences.

What are those powerful influences? They are chiefly the churches—Lutheran, Evangelical, Catholic, Jewish. In connection with the Christian church, whatever its denomination, it cannot abandon its doctrine of the twofold nature of man. The church that would abandon faith in man's spiritual nature would be Christian no longer. Just as true as the church preserves its Christian faith in man's dual nature, attributing immortality to the soul, the church must maintain faith in the doctrine that because of that dual nature and immortal destiny, man, as a person, has rights which he receives not from society, nor from any political state, but from the author of his creation.

This Christian faith in the natural rights of man cannot be reconciled with any theory of absolutism which divides men into categories giving dictatorial undefined power to the leaders, and subjecting the masses, body and soul, without recourse, to the whims of judgment and caprice of that minority which happens to be in control.

Foreseeing the fight that, if the doctrine of national socialism were applied with all its implications in Germany, and knowing that no sound system of economic and social justice could be in unavoidable conflict with the truths of the Christian religion, the Catholic Church negotiated with national socialism an agreement under which Hitler and his lieutenants would have a free hand in what pertains exclusively to the economic and political state, the church would have her liberty in what pertains to the religious sphere, and matters of common interest would be the subject of friendly conference and adjustment.

In 1933, while those negotiations were being conducted, Chancelor Hitler in a widely publicized statement gave assurance that the program of national socialism could and would be carried out without conflict with Christianity. The Catholic Church in Germany accepted that statement and the bishops of Germany in a masterful joint pastoral statement called upon their people to cooperate with the Hitler administration in everything, respecting always the essential teachings and principles of the Catholic faith.

As these negotiations progressed there was a feeling of relief, not in Germany nor among Catholics alone but throughout the Christian world. The Protestant and Lutheran Churches seemed willing, even desirous, to undertake similar negotiations to insure religious peace in Germany. An attempt was made to impose nationalization on the Protestant and Lutheran denominations. These denominations, to their credit, refused to make of their religion an instrument for the promotion of the political ambitions of national socialism. Hitler found it impossible to seduce the church. Smarting under defeat, he abandoned all negotiations.

Thwarted thus in his design to reduce religion to the status of an instrument of the political state, Hitler and his government took brutal steps to prevent the opposition from organizing. The press was either destroyed or made to subject its editorial policies to the dictates of the dominant political party. Freedom of the press was at an end. Freedom of assembly was treated in the same manner. Spies were sent to the churches all over Germany to report on the sermon of the pastor and even on the conversations of the parishioners. Gatherings suspected of being political were ruthlessly suppressed. Even the life of opposition leaders was not respected.

Much of what happened in the early days of national socialism was in open violation of the laws of Germany. These laws were not repealed. New laws were not enacted. The National Socialist Government recognized no law but its own interpretation of the National Socialist platform and its own judgment of how that platform should be carried out. A year did not pass before the courts of Germany, under pretext of reorganization, were made subservient to the will of national socialism represented by Hitler. The Parliament sat only at the call of the party. Indeed it has met only twice since the access of Hitler to office, and then only to ratify acts of the National Socialist Government.

National socialism is, as its name implies, a nationalist movement. The German Republic had functioned as a representative federal republic under the Weimar Constitution. The National Socialists ignored the constitution, substituting for it their own party platform as the supreme law of Germany. They then suppressed the federal system which the German nation after long deliberation had approved at the constitutional convention of Weimar. State governments were ruthlessly suppressed. Even the powerful State of Prussia was forced to surrender the last vestige of state sovereignty. Germany became a centralized, nonrepresentative, totalitarian state governed by an autocratic dictatorship bound by no constitution or law, subject only to its own interpretation of the party platform.

It soon was apparent that in undertaking negotiations with the church, national socialism had been sparring for time. With big business coerced into cooperation, the federal system converted into a centralized autocracy, the courts manned with men whose only loyalty was to Der Fuehrer and whose only law was the platform of the National Socialist Party, having consolidated the party ranks behind him, Hitler now proclaimed a new religion for the German nation.

Denouncing Christianity as an oriental invasion that had perverted the teachings and moral principles of the Aryan races, agents of the Hitler administration appointed a commission to redraft the theology, dogma, and ethics of Christianity to bring it into line. Thus did Hitler attempt to set up the platform of national socialism as the religion of the German nation.

A pamphlet recently published by the German Faith Movement, sponsored by national socialism, has the following to say:

> Has Christianity brought us salvation? The German lived vigorously, racially conscious, and in harmonious accord with his god before international Christianity by brute force saddled him with the Jewish national god. Until then the German people knew nothing of religious or interchurch strife. Since Christianity was introduced into Germany there have been religious quarrels without interruption. For between Christianity which poceeds from the south and the Nordic knowledge of god there is an insoluble contradiction. Just as healthy blood must continually seek to expel injected foreign matter, so does the healthy, unspoiled German soul continually rebel against this alien faith. * * * Christianity has destroyed innumerable precious German values, racial as well as cultural and political * * *. Nearly all great German leaders, artists, thinkers, as well as millions of unknown Germans, have repudiated Christianity. Let us, therefore, tread worthily in their steps. More than once the German people were on the verge of shedding their blood on behalf of this alien belief. Shall the obscurantists of any creed once more be able to injure the German Reich? No! Resolve that it shall not be! Acknowledge the totality of German life! Accept the God-given endowments of people and race. Accept the value of German faith and German morality! Free yourselves from false training and sluggish custom. Be German in your creed also!

The device of the German Faith Movement is the swastika. The swastika is emblazoned on the pamphlet from which I have just quoted. Bearing in mind the severity with which the Hitler administration prohibits "misuse of the national symbol", can anyone doubt that this doctrine permitted to be published under the aegis of that emblem is evidence that the National Socialists recognize the new paganism of the German Faith Movement as completely attuned to their own conceptions?

Where terrorism is the order of the day; where public assemblies are suppressed; where everyone is subjected to a spy system; where the press is not free; where organized opposition is not possible; where the laws make escape beyond the country difficult, if not impossible, it is not surprising that, seduced by the hope of safety and promise of advancement, timid souls in Germany accept the grotesque preachments of the German faith movement. The morale of the German people is being destroyed. There still remain in Germany leaders willing to face national socialism. Among them are the Bishop of Paderborn and the Reverend Martin Niemoeller, who has recently been placed under arrest—as has his brother, Rev. Wilhelm Niemoeller, within the past few days—for their courageous opposition to the attempted establishment of a pagan state and the attempt to nationalize religion. In sermons both of these courageous spiritual leaders have denounced in detail the outrages committed against religion by national socialism. At the conclusion of a recent sermon the Bishop of Paderborn said:

> With regard to these numerous and disgraceful acts of sacrilege, which shock you no less than they do myself, and which may all be attributed primarily to the widespread intensification, by both written and spoken word, of anti-Christian propaganda and incitement of the people against religion, we shall rise as one man and unite under the glorious and ringing appeal of our church: Oh, cross, our sole hope, we hail you! However much the enemies of our faith may blaspheme, however loudly they raise their battle cries: "The crucified One shall not rule us! Away with the crucifix; away with it from private as well as from public life, from the home as well as from the school"—we shall not be intimidated. We shall stand as did the early Christians. Neither the deception of the hellish enemy, nor persecution by the heathen emperor, could restrain them in their reverence for the cross. In the cross is salvation! In the cross is victory!

In these words he spoke, in particular, the position of the Catholic Church and, in general, of all religions.

I would not, however, exaggerate or overemphasize the political significance of religious opposition today. The faithful Catholics and the loyal Protestants and Jews are, in the main, all that remain to defend conscience against the National Socialist dictatorship. How great are the odds against them becomes more and more apparent. Not a week passes without a report of some new outrage against the German clergy.

On June 24 the Berlin bureau of the New York Herald Tribune reported that seven pastors, affiliated with the confessional movement, which is an anti-Nazi opposition group in the Protestant Church, were arrested by secret political police at the Friedrichswerder Church in Berlin. One of their legal advisers was arrested at the same time. These arrests, the report says, brought to about 50 the number of Protestant pastors jailed by the Nazi authorities. Since then others have been arrested.

The men arrested are charged with having violated recent decrees of Dr. Wilhelm Frick, Minister of the Interior, forbidding the reading from pulpits of the names of persons resigning from membership in the church and another forbidding the taking of collections except at divine service.

At the same church on the same day 30 other pastors were detained and searched for incriminating evidence.

In the same dispatch it is reported that the bank account of the Council of Brethren, a religious organization, was seized.

It is reported further that the church conflict has spread to Berlin University. There theological students were arrested for having uttered expressions of sympathy for the confessional movement. Over 50 students have announced that they will not return to classes.

To further illustrate the seriousness of the situation in Germany and the profound consideration it is receiving here and elsewhere, I call attention to the fact that several years ago Rev. Dr. Charles S. MacFarland, venerable general secretary emeritus of the Federal Council of Churches, after a visit to Germany and talks with Chancelor Hitler, returned home prepared to break a lance for the Hitler regime. In particular he was convinced that, so far as Germany was concerned, Americans ought to exercise restraint, sympathy, and patience. He saw and talked with the Chancelor. As one outstanding writer, Barnet Nover, said in a recent article—

> He conferred with church leaders of many denominations. And, while perturbed by certain of the developments taking place in the Third Reich, he was assured that they were only temporary.

He thereafter wrote and spoke in favor of restraint, sympathy, and patience.

He has since become disillusioned. This venerable minister has discovered, as Mr. Nover said—

> That his first optimtistic conclusions regarding the religious situation in Germany were without basis.

In a recent letter to Chancelor Hitler he has sorrowfully but courageously admitted this fact. "You have violated", he said in his letter, "every assurance that you made to me."

He further made this righteous and severe condemnation:

> In the 4 years you asked, whatever you may have done for the economic life of Germany, you have wrecked its Christian ideals. As the conclusion of my study, I can only say that you have, by consenting or approving, permitted the desecration of ideals of honor, integrity, truth, and humanity associated with the Germany of my student days; that you are forgetting the respect of the civilized world, and that you are leading your adopted nation to an abyss, for you cannot build an enduring nation upon force and hate.

Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, a member of the Hitler cabinet, described as "the supreme head of German neopaganism", recently revealed, according to a news item contained in the New York Times, a very reliable publication, "that the National Socialist church policy aims at the slow but steady absorption of Christianity." That assertion contains a challenge that believers of religion of all forms, particularly Christianity, and all persons who believe in the right of a free religious conscience, cannot permit to pass unheeded and unnoticed.

I further quote from the article of Barnet Nover that appeared in the Washington Post of June 10, 1937, a powerful article, well presented, which shows the insincerity of the pledges of Chancelor Hitler:

> The Reverend Dr. MacFarland is not the only one disillusioned by developments in the religious life of the Third Reich during these 4 years. Within Germany itself there are a great many clergymen, Protestant and Catholic, who have discovered what ropes of sand the verbal and written promises of the Fuehrer regarding religious freedom have turned out to be. They know now, if they did not before, that the Nazi regime has been engaged from the outset in a war on organized religion; that having failed to bend the churches to its will, it now is seeking to break them; that at bottom there can be no real harmony, no permanent peace, between Hitlerism and Christianity.

It must be remembered that when the Nazi Government came into being the great majority of churchmen of all creeds indicated their readiness to give it their full support.

In discussing this great and serious question we must keep in mind the difference between the German people, as such, and the Nazi Government. The responsibility for what has occurred is definitely upon those in control of government. The German people, as such, do not approve of such policies. They no more favor this movement than the Americans of German blood in the United States favor any such movement in this country.

Not only does national socialism seem determined to destroy the influence of the Christian and Jewish clergy with the people; it has from the first directed its attack on the liberty of education. Under a regime in which the personality of the individual is denied, in which the individual is in everything subservient to the group, the community, and the state, it is not surprising that education should be made an agency for the drilling of youth in mind and body to make him conform to the pattern as a leader or as a follower to which he is destined by those who control national life.

Control of the universities was seized as early as 1933. From the faculties of the venerable universities of Germany the National Socialists expelled every professor and instructor who by his racial origin or personal convictions was not acceptable to the National Socialist Party The vacancies thus made were not filled. The Hitler government instead reduced the number of students by about 50 percent. In this manner applicants for entrance at the professional schools and institutions of higher learning were more numerous than vacancies. Those to be admitted had to be selected. The National Socialist Party abrogated to itself the power to pass on the credentials of all students. In this manner the venerable institutions of Germany have been thrown down from the lofty pinnacle to which their achievements in science and research had lifted them and today they are degraded to the level of institutions for the drilling of a National Socialist militia subject in everything to the will of Der Fuehrer.

More recently control of the education of the child is being taken from the family. The church schools are being suppressed. The campaign of slander and persecution to which the members of the religious orders are being subjected is nothing more than a cloak for covering up the wholesale seizure of schools and the subjection of childhood in Germany to an anti-Christian education designed to build up a nation that will worship the National Socialist state.

Democracy has been on the defensive in Europe. It has fallen here—on the Western Hemisphere—before the onslaught of absolutism in Mexico, our southern neighbor in America. The battle between absolutism and democracy for control of other American States has already begun.

We cannot with safety remain indifferent to the conditions which confront the world today.

The time seems to be approaching, perhaps it is at hand, when we, as a nation treasuring our free institutions under representative federal constitutional democracy, must assume with vigor and courage the role of leadership in world affairs for which our natural resources and high cultural achievements so well equip us. We cannot, with safety to ourselves, leave to the threatened democracies of Europe the task of saving our free institutions from the insidious attacks to which they are exposed.

It is the hope of all tolerant-minded persons that reason and sanity will return to the leaders of those countries where the exercise of a religious conscience is either denied or persecuted. World public opinion is opposed to the persecution or suppression of religion and to persecution in any form. History has shown that no nation can destroy religion, or the religious sentiments of its people. History has also shown that where it continued to do so, where it did not heed the lesson of experience, that such a government came to grief.

The happenings in other countries where absolutism and dictatorship exist, with the destruction of religious liberty in one country, as a result of its antireligious policies, Soviet Russia, and the attempt to nationalize religion in other countries, the return to the days of paganism, with the destruction of all great human liberties that constitute personal liberty, which comes not from government but from the Creator Himself, is a lesson to each citizen of our country. It brings to our attention the meaning of democratic processes of government; it is the best evidence that we could have of the genius of the framers of the Constitution in planning and creating the institutions of government that we possess; of conferring upon us as a right the political liberties that we possess, and protecting them against encroachment or destruction by even government itself. The conditions existing elsewhere convey to us in a forcible and effective manner the meaning of the phrase that we have so often heard, "The blessings of liberty." It is our duty to see that such conditions never exist in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH and Mr. BOREN asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized.

THIRD- AND FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein five letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have been trying for several weeks to secure time in order that I might reveal to the Members of the House of Representatives what is going on in the State of Pennsylvania and over this Nation through the effort that is being made by politicians to take the civil service away from third- and fourth-class postmasters. We have in this country 40,675 third- and fourth-class post offices and 4,361 first- and second-class post offices. These postmasters of the third and fourth class were to be excluded from all political interference.

Let me call your attention, ladies and gentlemen of the House, to the fact that there has been one organization, the National League of District Postmasters, who hold annual meetings in each State of the United States, and they also hold a national meeting annually at some point in the United States. This is a voluntary organization and has over 17,000 voluntary members. It is composed of third- and fourth-class postmasters. This organization, as I said before, is voluntary. Any postmaster can join it, or he does not have to, but they operate and maintain this organization for the purpose of bettering the service and for their social gatherings and entertainment. That is as it should be, as we want to eliminate politics from the Post Office Department and the Post Office Service.

But I often wonder how you can eliminate it when you have as Postmaster General one who is now in the person of Mr. James Farley, of New York, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, as well as chairman of the Democratic State organization of the State of New York—a funny combination to keep politics out of the Post Office Service, it seems to me.

Now, I want to call your attention, Members of the House, to the copy of a letter supposed to be written on the stationery of the United States Senate Committee on Finance of Washington to Mr. Joseph F. Gallagher, president of the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters and present postmaster of Philadelphia, Pa., and at the end of this letter appears the name of Senator JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania, urging membership in the new Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington January 26, 1937.

Mr. JOSEPH F. GALLAGHER,
President, Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters,
United States Post Office, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR JOE: As you know I was employed in the Postal Service some years ago. While in the Service I gained a real insight into its needs, and the opportunity afforded postmasters to serve the public in such a manner as would reflect credit upon themselves and the Service.

I feel that all postmasters of the State of Pennsylvania should be members of the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters. Their membership in such an organization brings them together at various intervals and gives them an opportunity to consult with each other about and exchange ideas on betterments in the Service. It gives them an opportunity to obtain information which will help them better the service in their own communities. I, therefore, think that it is really the duty of every postmaster in the State of Pennsylvania to belong to the organization and I hope that you will be successful in obtaining applications for membership from all those who are not now members of that body.

With kindest regards,
Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH F. GUFFEY.

Then, I also want to call your attention to the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters stationery—a letter written by Ramsey S. Black, who is secretary and treasurer of this organization, calling attention to the fact that the postmasters of Pennsylvania should join the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters. This is a new organization, and what for? That seems to be the question in the mind of those who are not on the inside.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ASSOCIATION OF POSTMASTERS,
Harrisburg, Pa., February 15, 1937.

MY DEAR POSTMASTER: In keeping with the policy of improving the Service and bettering the condition of postmasters, it is of vital importance that every postmaster in the State of Pennsylvania become a member of both the National Association of Postmasters and the Pennsylvania State Association. These organizations need the moral and financial support of every postmaster in the State and every postmaster needs the backing of these organizations.

No man ever traveled the roadway to success unaided and alone. No organization can achieve its purpose without the united help of those who believe in its fundamental necessity, its purpose, and its ideals. Therefore we ask for your enthusiastic support as we develop and broaden our ambitious plans for a greater State and national organization which shall be truly representative of all postmasters of every class.

As to what the Post Office Department thinks of organization, I want to refer you to a quotation from an address made by our chief, Hon. James A. Farley, who, in September 1935, at the Convention of the National Association of Postmasters in Chicago, said: "I congratulate you on your splendid organization, which is most helpful to the postmasters and to the Postal Service. We postmasters must be great believers in organization. It was by organization under efficient leadership that this great Government of ours was established."

Your attention is also invited to the attached letter from Senator GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania, who was at one time in the Postal Service, and is now 100 percent behind the postmaster's organization. While it was a personal letter to our president, Hon. Joseph F. Gallagher, postmaster, Philadelphia, Pa., it contains a message for every postmaster of the Keystone State.

The bill for your dues for 1937 is enclosed, and it would be appreciated if you would make your returns immediately.

In the State of Pennsylvania we have 2,614 postmasters, and it is the intention of the officers to have each and every one attain membership. For 1937, 2,614 members is our goal. We start today. Don't wait for the other fellow. You do your part and the others will follow. Watch pending legislation in Congress. Your association will watch it was keen interest and do everything within the bounds of propriety that will be beneficial to postmasters.

I said before the organization needs you and you need the organization, and please subscribe at once.

With best wishes and looking for your whole-hearted cooperation, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

RAMSEY S. BLACK,
Secretary-Treasurer.

It is claimed that it is a branch of the National Association of Postmasters, whose president is Mr. Alexander Graham, of Kansas City, Mo., the present postmaster, and whose vice president is Mr. I. A. Smoot, postmaster of Salt Lake City, Utah. The editor of their Official Gazette is Mr. W. H. McCarthy, postmaster of San Francisco.

In California they send a circular to the postmasters asking them to join the New Deal organization. I also call attention to the fact that in a State close to the District of Columbia, a fourth-class postmaster was called to the phone and told he should see every postmaster in the county, and this voice over the phone demanded of him that he secure every postmaster in the county to join the National Association of Postmasters—this new organization whose dues are $3 to $7 a year, depending on the size of the office. Either get the membership or someone will be ousted from office.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE POLITICAL MACHINE IN THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the House, let me call your attention to another iniquitous letter written on the stationery of the Democratic State Committee of Pennsylvania located at 306 Keystone Building, Harrisburg, telephone no. 7255. I take this data from the heading of the letter which contains the following names:

David L. Lawrence, chairman; Mrs. Edith B. DeWitt, vice chairman; George H. Earle, national committeeman; Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, national committeewoman; Carl K. Deen, resident secretary; Paul B. Noftsker, treasurer; and Ralph M. Bashore, State secretary.

David Lawrence is the chairman of the Democratic State committee; George H. Earle is Democratic Governor of the State of Pennsylvania; Emma Guffey Miller is the sister of Senator GUFFEY; and Ralph M. Bashore is secretary of the Department of Forests and Waters of the State of Pennsylvania, all Democratic offices.

Now, I insert the letter referred to, dated May 5, 1937:

DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE, PENNSYLVANIA,
Harrisburg, Pa., May 5, 1937.

MY DEAR POSTMASTER: Postmaster General James A. Farley, United States Senator JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, and myself, are interested in having you become a member of the National Association of Postmasters and the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters.

Your interest—and the interest of all postmasters—can best be served only by a strong organization. Therefore, I cannot too firmly urge the importance of you becoming a member.

I am advised that a bill for membership dues has been sent you by the Honorable Ramsey S. Black, secretary and treasurer, Harrisburg, Pa. I would suggest that you send your remittance for dues without further delay, and shall be interested in noting the result of this membership campaign.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID L. LAWRENCE,
Chairman, Democratic State Committee.

Mr. Speaker, on May 18 I wrote Postmaster General Farley a letter which I now insert; also his reply on the stationery of the office of the Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

MAY 18, 1937.

Hon. JAMES A. FARLEY,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FARLEY: There has come to my attention a letter written on the letterhead of the Democratic State committee of Pennsylvania and addressed to postmasters in Pennsylvania, dated May 5, 1937, copy of which is herewith enclosed.

Since the letter states that you as Postmaster General, and others, are interested in urging postmasters in Pennsylvania to become members of the National Association of Postmasters and the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters without giving any reason for joining such organization, excepting that the interests of all postmasters can be best served only by a strong organization, quite naturally postmasters are interested in knowing in what manner their interests can be best served by joining such organizations.

It is noted further that considerable urge is placed on the prompt payment of membership dues in these organizations.

My purpose in writing you is to inquire whether you have authorized the use of your name as Postmaster General in the solicitation of memberships and funds through what are obviously political channels.

There is no doubt that many postmasters are already members of the National League of District Postmasters, and this fact prompts further inquiry as to why postmasters are being urged by the Democratic State organization to join the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters for the purpose of strengthening their interests.

Now, many of the postmasters—and particularly those of the third and fourth class—receive small salaries and can ill afford additional and unnecessary expense. The receipt of communications such as is described herein quite naturally give rise to concern on the part of postmasters and must be regarded as important coming as they do at the suggestion of the Postmaster General and others in high political places.

I will appreciate a frank reply, which I am confident will enable me to make intelligent response to inquiries on the subject directed to me as a Member of Congress.

Thanking you, I am,
Very respectfully,

ROBERT F. RICH.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 21, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RICH: Your letter of May 18 inquiring whether I had authorized the use of my name as Postmaster General in the solicitation of memberships to postmaster organizations received.

I have no objections to postmasters and other postal employees belonging to the various postal organizations to which they are eligible, but I am not directing or insisting on their belonging, and any claim that anyone may make that I am is unauthorized.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. FARLEY,
Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker, I just received an invitation to the third annual convention reunion of the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters, to be held August 19 and 20 at Scranton, and the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters claims to be the largest chapter connected with the National Association of Postmasters. Is the reason for this great organization the fact that the Democratic State committee has been fostering it, and also that Postmaster General James A. Farley will be in attendance—the largest chapter in Pennsylvania sponsored by the Pennsylvania Democratic State committee? What they want me there for is difficult to conceive. I am not a Democrat, and I promise you I never will be.

After reading this, ladies and gentlemen, do you think for a minute that this National Association of Postmasters and the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters has anything to do with politics when it claims that Postmaster General James A. Farley and United States Senator Joseph F. Guffey and David Lawrence, of the Democratic State committee, are all interested in having them become a member of the National Association of Postmasters?

If there is not a sting of politics in this such as has never been applied to the postmasters of Pennsylvania, then there is something "rotten in Denmark." Any man who would be fooled by anyone stating that there is not any politics in it must think we are all real dumb in Pennsylvania that do not belong to the Democratic Party. Mr. Speaker, I inserted above the letter from Ramsey S. Black, which the third paragraph of the Lawrence letter refers to, stating that bill for membership dues has been sent to the postmaster by Ramsey S. Black, of the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters. Why does this National Association of Postmasters and Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters want to put out of existence the National League of District Postmasters? They may claim they do not, but why should postmasters want to belong to three organizations in the State of Pennsylvania? Could anyone give a satisfactory answer to that? It simply is ridiculous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I took the occasion on May 18 to write a letter to Hon. James A. Farley, Postmaster General, and I insert this letter, as I want to be fair to everybody and am only desirous of trying to keep politics out of the Postal Service.

I also insert copy of letter I received from Postmaster James A. Farley, and you can see that he says he has no objections to the postmasters or postal employees belonging to various postal organizations to which they are eligible. Certainly he has not any desire to keep them from belonging to organizations set up for Democratic political propaganda. He was never known to keep anybody from doing such a thing that I know of. But I would like to ask the Postmaster General why does he permit David Lawrence, the Pennsylvania Democratic State chairman, to intimidate the postmasters of Pennsylvania into joining the Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters. It is political and nothing else. The fact that the letter is signed by David Lawrence, of the Democratic State committee, notifying them their dues are wanted and that the writer will watch with interest their joining,—O Mr. Speaker, if it is not political, then black is white and green is red.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a list of the daily changes in fourth-class postmasters already made for 1937, more than 100 typewritten pages of changes in the fourth-class postmasters over the United States that are sent out to Members of Congress from the Post Office Department. If there is not politics in the Post Office Department, why would all these fourth-class postmasters be requested to resign? Why would their places be filled by somebody else? Anyone who would cause you to believe that this is not the case certainly does not want to give the true facts. And, Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, if the Postmaster General is interested in keeping politics out of the Post Office Department, he will see that such letters are not sent out by the Democratic State committee of Pennsylvania or any other State intimidating the postmasters. I have received letters from postmasters in the State of Pennsylvania stating they belong to the National League of District Postmasters and that they have not the money to spend to belong to this Pennsylvania State Association of Postmasters, and they do not want to join any more organizations; but this great Democratic State committee is insisting they do.

Mr. Speaker, it is wrong to urge the civil-service postmasters to be intimidated and harassed by a State political set-up such as we have in Pennsylvania by the Guffey-Earle-Lawrence combine—worse ever than a Penrose or Vare machine could have been. You never heard of Penrose making such demands of postmasters as Guffey is trying to make on the postmasters of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, I also make an appeal to the Attorney General of the United States to make a thorough investigation of this charge of political corruption in the Post Office Department. It is vital to our laws to keep political activity from this branch of the Government service. I also request, yes, demand, that the Civil Service Commission take proper steps to check such ruthless political activity that is going on over the country to play politics with the postmasters who are under civil service.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard the membership of the House state they are for civil service, especially those on the Democratic side, but every time we have a vote on something that is in favor of civil service the Democratic Members of the House try to keep from having a record vote. They do not want to be recorded and up to this time have kept from being recorded. Actions speak louder than words, and when they state they are for civil service, and then vote to put appointees into various Government organizations without coming under the civil service, as I said before, their actions speak louder than words and they do not mean what they say. It is about time that the Attorney General and the Civil Service get busy on this proposition and get action to stop it.

I was invited to be at Mansfield, Tioga County, today to attend a Republican picnic, but I felt I should remain here in Washington and attend to the duties incumbent upon the office rather than be looking after the political set-up in Pennsylvania. While I am a Republican, more so today than ever in all my life, because when I see the things being done in the Government service by Democratic politicians and when the people of Pennsylvania and other States of this Nation wake up to the things being done contrary to the civil-service laws and contrary to good business in government, they will oust this great Democratic political machine we have in Washington and Pennsylvania, and place men back in the offices of government who will give them clean representation, men who will put forth efforts toward those things which are for the best interests of our country, and will eliminate from the ranks men whose sole object in holding office is to keep their political henchmen on the Federal Government pay roll. Let us take politics out of government and put in sensible, sane people who have the welfare of our country at heart and not any political party.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is recognized for 20 minutes.

LET US KEEP OUR BOYS OUT OF FOREIGN WARS—AN URGENT APPEAL TO MEMBERS TO SIGN DISCHARGE PETITION NO. 11

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this brief allotment of time today in order that I may make a special plea to Members of the House to sign discharge petition no. 11, which I have filed at the Speaker's desk to bring my war-referendum peace resolution before the House for debate and a vote.

Premier Mussolini, one of the outstanding archtyrants of the world, has just issued a statement which it seems to me ought to challenge the instant attention of every thinking person in America and arouse the Congress of the United States as it never has been aroused before to the necessity of doing something to keep our beloved country from being dragged into another world war.

Dispatches from Rome carry an editorial from Mussolini's newspaper, Popolo d'Italia of Milan, which in effect serves notice on the world that it may expect another war soon. In this editorial the Italian tyrant warns Europe "to abandon its illusions and face realistically the prospects of war." I quote from the editorial:

"Europe must come to its senses or perish", it says. "Some day these fictions will be overwhelmed by a reality that has ever been known by one irreplaceable name."

The dispatches say that Mussolini's defiant outburst has created a sensation in the worried chancelleries of London, Paris, Moscow, and other major capitals. It ought to create a tremendous sensation in the Congress of the United States by showing on what a tenuous thread world peace hangs at this moment.

Tyrants like Mussolini and Hitler and Stalin have recruited and whipped into shape all of their manpower for the coming war and are now reaching down toward the cradle for cannon fodder.

Sometimes a whole sermon is contained in a cartoon. I saw such a cartoon the other day in a newspaper published away up in Manchester, N. H. I want to compliment Mr. Shoemaker of the Manchester Union for giving us the finest example of the cartoonist's art I have seen in many a year. His cartoon, entitled "In Europe Any Day Now", ought to be displayed on every billboard and fence post in America. It presents a graphic heart-appealing illustration of the crime against humanity that is being committed by tyrants in organizing the children of their countries to kill and to be killed. All of the fathers and mothers in America should see this cartoon. It would sear their souls with pain, but it would do good by bringing them to an upstanding realization of what is going on in the nations where citizens are mere puppets and bloodthirsty tyrants are training even the children to kill and destroy.

If it were permissible to print cartoons in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I would ask unanimous consent to include this cartoon with my remarks.

In this master cartoon a helmeted general with beetled brows and bulging chest, armed cap-a-pie and with sword dangling at his side, yells "Atten—shun!" as he proceeds to call the roll of his recruits.

"DA-DA" AND "GOO-GOO"

The recruits are barefooted babies lined up in a row, each baby wearing a diaper and a helmet so large it drops almost to his chin. [Laughter.] One by one the big general calls their names "Snookums", "Honey Pie", "Lolly Popsy", "Sugar", and "Tootsy Wootsy" and as their names are called "Snookums", "Honey Pie", "Lolly Popsy", "Sugar", and "Tootsy Wootsy" perform their full duty to their sovereign by responding "Da-Da" and "Goo-Goo." [Laughter.] This cartoon is a withering revelation showing how tyrants are violating the sacred rights of childhood in their conscienceless efforts to build up military machines to override the world.

The other night I witnessed a movie entitled "The Road Back." I wish every Member of this House could see that picture. It vividly illustrates the realism and cruelties of war, not only in actual conflict but in its aftermath. Its characters are fine examples of young men who are drawn into war overseas, where they see so much of horror and of blood-letting that when the war is over those who are fortunate enough to have escaped death return as miserable misfits in the society which they once adorned, nervous and mental wrecks, having always the noise of cannon and machine guns in their ears and terrifying visions of death before their eyes.

While as a whole it is a wonderful picture for those who want to know what war does to our precious young men it was the climacteric scene of the play that impressed me most. In a grand, soul-stirring finale the screen presented in rapid succession vast marching armies of the various countries whose tyrannical leaders at this time are panting for war, the climax of the play being intended to bring home the fact that 20 years after the war that was to save civilization we are facing the horrifying prospect of another world war of indescribable proportions and destructiveness.

WOULD KEEP OUR BOYS OUT OF FOREIGN SHAMBLES

My war-referendum peace resolution, which I am seeking so earnestly and sincerely to bring before this House for debate and a vote, is intended to prevent our precious boys—the flower of American manhood—from being drawn into another world war which appears at this moment to be looming over the world horizon. In any event under its provisions our boys would not be dragged into foreign slaughter pens to die in the settlement of quarrels of alien origin until the people of America have a chance to vote on the question in a Nation-wide referendum, the women having equal voting rights with the men. And why should not the women have a right to vote on a declaration of war?

Women go down into the valley of the shadow of death to bring our boys into the world. Why should not the mothers of America have something to say as to whether their flesh and blood shall be hurled into the hell of a foreign conflict? My war-referendum resolution is based on the philosophy that those who have to suffer and, if need be, to die and to bear the awful burdens and griefs of war shall have something to say as to whether war shall be declared. What could be more elementally just than that? [Applause.]

War at this moment broods over three-quarters of the globe. With the world in a state of ferment and a general conflict likely to break out at any time we, as legislators, are under a tremendous responsibility to find some way to keep our country from becoming involved. I contend that the war-referendum plan I have proposed is sane and practical, and that it would be effective in protecting America from entanglement. Why do I say this? Because it is inconceivable that the fathers and mothers and the women of America would send their sons, their husbands, and sweethearts away to die in foreign shambles in wars generated by the age-old hatreds and rivalries of foreign governments where war is a perennial pastime. If my proposed amendment is adopted it will have to be a mighty good cause that will lead America to declare war. A declaration of war is no idle and inconsequential thing. It signs the death warrant of our fine young manhood. It breaks up happy homes and tears heartstrings asunder. It is a question of such preeminent magnitude that it should be submitted to the entire Nation for decision, the vote of every citizen having equal weight with the vote of every other citizen. When that time comes the principle of equality so sedulously nurtured at the birth of the Republic and so proudly proclaimed in our basic law and literature will become more than ever a living reality and an object lesson for all the nations of the earth to behold and emulate.

SOUND AS THE BILL OF RIGHTS

There is nothing chimerical about this plan to let the people decide whether or not they want their sons sent into foreign wars. How can any one who is steeped in the genius and spirit of our free American institutions say that it is unsound? It is as sound as Magna Carta is sound. It is as sound as the Bill of Rights is sound. It is as sound as "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" is sound. It is in entire harmony with the philosophy of the Bill of Rights, and if adopted it would round out and complete that immortal code of liberty. I firmly believe that if it had not been for defective means of communication in the pioneer days, which obviously made a referendum on war impractical at that time, a provision for a war referendum would have been included in the Bill of Rights.

In no way, shape, or manner does my proposed referendum amendment impair the national defense. In case of attack or invasion it would not apply. It merely changes the constitutional war-declaring mechanism so that the decision on a declaration of war will be by a national referendum to all of the people, whose combined verdict will be the verdict of the judgment and conscience of America on each particular war proposal.

Now, when the airplane, the railroad, and the telegraph and telephone annihilate time and space, and the President, sitting before the microphone in Washington, can talk to all of America, the means of communication have attained such perfection that there is no longer any reason on earth why our citizens should be denied the right to vote on declarations of war. In a Government whose cornerstone is liberty founded on the philosophy of Jefferson, who wrote into the great Declaration the precious doctrine that "All men are created equal", there is no reason why our people should longer be deprived of equality in reaching the greatest of all decisions—the decision that means war or peace.

NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT

With the red flames of war flaring up in both the Occident and the Orient and threatening to engulf humanity everywhere, let us not permit lethargy and laissez faire to lull us into lethal slumber at this critical period when civilization so much needs us to set an example of peace and stability in a war-torn world.

Let us get this great peace proposal up for debate in the House and for amendment, if deemed necessary to perfect it, and let us pass it and send it out for ratification to the 48 States where, if I sense public sentiment correctly, the people of America, worried by insecurity and the omens of trouble visible on every hand, sick of war and the depression and train of evils that follow in the wake of war, are yearning to act favorably on this peace measure. With humility born of a realization of my feebleness as the champion of so great a cause, my dear colleagues, I plead with each and every one of you to sign discharge petition no. 11 if you have not already done so. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Have we not the same condition here to which the gentleman referred in his speech; that is, where the German youth is being brought in and forced into military work in this country and we are sitting doing nothing?

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is much more familiar with that than I. I thank him for his contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CRAVENS (at the request of Mr. MILLER), for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PHILLIPS (at the request of Mr. SMITH of Connecticut), for 2 days, on account of death in his family.

3048. Also, resolution of La Solidaridad Filipina, petitioning the Congress of the United States for the withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippines; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1937

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 22, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, July 27, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] have been appointed members of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France and are, therefore, necessarily absent.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

APPOINTMENTS TO CERTAIN COMMITTEES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] as a member of the Special Committee on the Reorganization of the Executive Agencies of the Government, created by Senate Resolution No. 217, Seventy-fourth Congress, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Joseph T. Robinson, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

The Chair also appoints the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] as a member of the following committees, to fill the vacancies therein caused by the death of Hon. Joseph T. Robinson, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas:

Select Committee on Government Organization, created under Senate Resolution No. 69, agreed to January 29, 1937; and Joint Congressional Committee on Government Organization, established by House Joint Resolution No. 81, approved February 3, 1937.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Lumber Clerks' and Lumbermen's Local No. 2559, of San Francisco, Calif., favoring the carrying out of the present W. P. A. program without reductions in personnel, and also favoring the making of further appropriations when current appropriations for the W. P. A. become exhausted, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the fifty-first annual convention of the Arizona Wool Growers Association at Flagstaff, Ariz., protesting against ratification of the Argentine Sanitary Convention, and favoring retention of the present embargo against the importation of livestock and its products from countries where either rinderpest or foot-and-mouth disease may exist, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Eugene Younghawk, Francis Bullhead, Thomas Crow Necklace, and Julian Long Elk, members of the resolutions committee of an Indian conference held June 26, 1937, at Bullhead, S. Dak., transmitting the memorial of that conference, with the names attached of George Red Fox, Willis Mountain, William Knocks Him Down, Leo Little Eagle, Luke Speaks Walking, and sundry other Indian World War veterans of Bullhead and vicinity, S. Dak., remonstrating against the terms of the so-called Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, and praying that emancipation be granted them; that they be made free from wardship, and that a commission be created to transfer, as a Government agent, to such Indians (ex-service men with honorable discharges and borne on the tribal rolls) any and all assets, real and personal property belonging to Indian ex-service men, which, with the accompanying memorial, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by Boro Park Branch of the American League Against War and Fascism, of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against the making of increased appropriations for the Army, and favoring the diversion of such appropriations to relief purposes, the W. P. A., and constructive health projects, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Local No. 1199, United Retail Drug Store Employees Union of Greater New York, and the Central Labor Council of Buffalo, both in the State of New York, endorsing the so-called Schwellenbach resolution, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) favoring employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by a meeting of the board of direction, American Society of Civil Engineers, at Ann Arbor, Mich., favoring the liquidation of W. P. A. and P. W. A. activities as expeditiously as possible, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Chautauqua County (N. Y.) Pomona Grange, endorsing the so-called Ludlow joint resolution embodying a constitutional amendment requiring a vote of the people before the declaration of war, except in the event of invasion, and favoring an early report on such resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local No. 103, American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, of Buffalo, N. Y., endorsing the so-called Wagner-Steagall low-cost housing bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

RESOLUTIONS OF YOUNG DEMOCRATIC CLUB OF DUVAL COUNTY, FLA.

Mr. PEPPER presented resolutions adopted by the Young Democratic Club of Duval County, Fla., which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BARKLEY, and a vote of confidence to our great President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, our great leader and unequaled and unparalleled friend of the people, for his help, his guidance, his beliefs, his courage, and his leadership; be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY, Democratic majority leader of the United States Senate, Florida's two Senators, Hon. CHARLES O. ANDREWS and Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER, to Duval County's Representative in Congress, Hon. LEX GREEN, and to the press.

Done and ordered in executive session at Jacksonville, in Duval County, Fla., on this the 22d day of July, A. D. 1937.

YOUNG DEMOCRATIC CLUB OF DUVAL COUNTY, FLA.,
By H. W. DESAUSSURE, Its President.

Attest:

MRS. CHAS. L. FOLZ, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2260) to provide for appearance on behalf of and appeal by the United States in certain cases in which the constitutionality of acts of Congress is involved, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 963) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was recommitted the bill (S. 1567) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act authorizing the conservation, production, and exploitation of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense, and to the development of commercial aeronautics, and for other purposes' ", reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 964) thereon.

Mr. LODGE, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the views of the minority on the bill (S. 1567) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act authorizing the conservation, production, and exploitation of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense, and to the development of commercial aeronautics, and for other purposes' ", which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. RADCLIFFE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6145) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to accept title to a certain parcel of land at Gaithersburg, Md., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 965) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 21) authorizing the printing of the report of the subcommittee on technology to the National Resources Committee entitled "Technological Trends and National Policy, Including the Social Implications of the New Inventions" as a document, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 966) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7127) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 14 to May 21, 1938, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 967) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) relative to determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 984) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4527) for the relief of Luther Jennings Workman, a minor, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 968) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 593) for the relief of Emily Hyer LaVergne, executrix of the estate of W. K. Hyer, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 969) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1114. A bill for the relief of Agnes Ewing Harter (Rept. No. 970);

H. R. 4775. A bill for the relief of D. E. Sweinhart (Rept. No. 971);

S. 2851. A bill to authorize the reservation of minerals in future sales of lands of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma (Rept. No. 987).

INTERFERENCE WITH UNITED STATES MAILS (S. REPT. NO. 885)

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, some weeks ago the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads conducted an investigation pertaining to Senate Resolution 140, relative to the delivery or nondelivery of mail to establishments where industrial strife is in progress. The committee filed a report. The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] filed a statement of his views. I am now filing a statement of my views.

After conference with the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], I request unanimous consent to have the report of the committee, the statement of the views of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], and the statement of my own views printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, would the Senator object to having all three printed not only in the RECORD but also in pamphlet form as one document?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be very glad to agree to that. Let us have them printed in the RECORD and also in pamphlet form as one document.

There being no objection, the report of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and the views of Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. BAILEY were ordered to be printed in the usual form of Senate reports and also to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, submitted the following adverse report (to accompany S. Res. 140):

The Post Offices and Post Roads Committee of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 140, introduced by Senator BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, and an amendment thereto, introduced by Senator GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania, begs leave to report the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that what is known as the Guffey amendment, referring to the strike situation, be referred to the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor now investigating such strike conditions in Illinois, Ohio, and perhaps other States; and insofar as the Bridges resolution refers to the conduct of the Post Office Department, that the same be not agreed to.

Your committee further reports that it has carefully investigated the charges in the resolution of Senator BRIDGES concerning the failure of the Post Office Department to do its duty in reference to the rejection and nondelivery of mail in the strike area, and from the evidence adduced at the hearings before your committee, the committee makes the following findings of fact and conclusions:

1. That the Post Office Department has not taken sides in the strike controversy.

2. That by reason of the strike and the attitude of the strikers on the outside and the armed conditions existing on the inside of the several steel corporation plants, the unusual service demanded of the Post Office Department could not be safely carried on; that to have done so would have subjected the postal carriers to jeopardy of life and limb.

3. That normal mail service was maintained by the Post Office Department.

4. That mail of an unusual or abnormal character was refused by the Post Office Department, by authority of the law.

5. That a proposal was openly made by the employers to the postmasters in the several strike areas that if the Department would take food and clothing into the plants and enter these in the employers' own plants, the employers would furnish the equipment and personnel to carry this unusual mail.

6. That the Post Office Department refused this proposal because the Department had no legal authority to enter into such an agreement, and such agreement would be contrary to public policy.

7. That the mail routes into the several plants were dangerous to the mail carriers.

8. That the pickets not only threatened to interfere with the delivery of mail but on several occasions did interfere with the prompt delivery of the normal mail.

9. That in every instance which constituted an interference with the mails, facts thereof were assembled by the post-office inspectors and by the postmasters, and said facts as soon as they could be obtained with accuracy were turned over to the Department of Jutice for its action, consideration, and attention.

10. That several cases are now in the criminal section of the United States courts.

11. That no agreement existed between the postal authorities or any postal employee and any other person or persons as to the delivery or nondelivery of the mail.

12. That no agreement whatsoever was entered into by the Post Office Department or any of its employees with any person or persons as to the censoring of the mail.

13. That there were instances where strikers tried to scrutinize the mail, and that these instances, where accurately ascertained, have been turned over to the Department of Justice for its action.

14. That the Republic Steel Corporation, through its legal division, has questioned the legal authority of the Postmaster General to refuse abnormal and unusual mail and has filed suit where the legal phases of the matter will be adjudicated.

15. That the Post Office Department bases its action in the matter on existing law as follows, to wit:

"Whenever, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the postal service cannot be safely continued, the revenues collected, or the laws maintained on any post road, he may discontinue the service on such road or any part thereof until the same can be safely restored" (39 U. S. C. 493).

16. That the said matter being in the courts, your committee is of the opinion that no further investigation should be made by this committee or any other committee of the Senate.

17. Your committee further reports that it was conclusively shown that a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate is now investigating the strike situation in several States and strike areas, and that the amendment to Senate Resolution 140 by Senator GUFFEY be referred to that committee, this committee seeing no reason to appoint a special committee to examine into the same strike situation that the Subcommittee of Education and Labor of the Senate is now investigating.

Mr. BRIDGES, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, submitted the following minority views (to accompany S. Res. 140):

It was resolved that a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, three from the majority political party and two from the minority political party, be authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation (1) of all cases of alleged interference by any persons or organizations with the acceptance or delivery of mail tendered to or accepted by postal authorities for delivery to addressees within any business or industrial establishment in which industrial strife may be occurring and (2) of all cases of agreements between postal authorities and persons or organizations whereby such authorities agree not to accept mail tendered for delivery to addressees within any such business or industrial establishment. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

The minority challenges the majority claim that the committee has carefully investigated the charges in the Bridges resolution concerning the failure of the Post Office Department to do its duty in reference to the rejection and nondelivery of mail in the strike areas. The minority feels that although the hearings resulted in bringing to the public view some of the unlawful conditions existing in the strike areas and some arrests and prosecutions for violation of United States statutes, nevertheless the hearings could not by the nature of things have the beneficial results of an investigation as called for by the resolution. From the evidence adduced at the hearings before your committee, the minority of your committee makes the following findings of fact and conclusions:

(1) The Post Office Department has taken sides in the strike controversy because it has refused to deliver packages, parcels, newspapers, and magazines properly offered, properly addressed, and properly stamped. This refusal to carry out its proper business caused grievous harm to one of the parties to the strike. This unprecedented departure from its activities as a transportation system for the carriage of United States mail constitutes an affirmative act on its part which favors one side of the controversy and therefore amounts to taking sides.

(2) That the Post Office Department could have safely carried on its proper business despite the attitude of strikers on the outside of the several plants by calling upon other departments of the United States Government whose duty it is to protect the employees of the Government and the property of the Government from harm.

(3) That normal mail service was not maintained by the Post Office Department, since the post offices at several cities in the strike area refused to deliver and in some cases refused to accept or deliver mail matter properly offered, properly addressed, and with proper postage paid by the offerers, who were in most cases private individuals offering packages containing clothing, nonperishable foodstuffs, newspapers, and magazines, and were not a business concern offering a trainload.

(4) That mail was refused by the Post Office Department under claim of being unusual or abnormal in character, although nowhere in the United States Code Annotated or the Postal Laws and Regulations is mail so classified or characterized or is the Post Office Department or Post Office officials given any right to make such a classification or characterization as a reason for refusal to accept or deliver United States mail.

(5) That the majority report makes so much importance of the fact that one of the strike-bound companies offered to carry United States mail which the Post Office Department had refused to carry, whereas such an offer is absolutely irrelevant and immaterial to the questions called for investigation in the resolution, except insofar as such an offer further substantiates the fact that the Post Office Department was not transporting the mail, since if the Post Office Department was properly performing its duty and transporting United States mail, in all probability such an offer would not have been made.

(6) That the majority report goes on the assumption that the agreements charged in the resolution include this offer to carry United States mail made by one of the strike-bound companies when the Post Office Department refused to properly function, whereas in fact the agreements charged in the resolution are agreements not to accept mail tendered for delivery to addressees within the strike-bound plants. The minority is well aware that the Post Office Department has no authority to enter into agreements with outside persons for the carriage of mail and that such an agreement would be contrary to public policy, and if such an agreement were to be made the minority would be as incensed as the majority.

(7) That the evidence presented at the hearing showed that the interference with the United States mail was wholesale on numerous occasions and included not only threats of bodily harm to post-office carriers but actual handling of United States mail and blocking of United States mail trucks.

(8) That, while in a few instances of interference with United States mail, prosecutions by the Department of Justice have resulted, the interferences were so numerous and on such a large scale as to constitute a challenge to the Post Office Department and to the authority of the United States and should be the subject of investigation.

(9) That there was substantial evidence introduced to show the existence of an agreement or agreements between postal officials and outside persons as to delivery or nondelivery of the mails and as to the censoring of United States mail by the outside persons.

(10) That a witness testified that a postal official admitted strike leaders had passed on or censored United States mail.

(11) That a telegram was introduced which strike leaders had sent to a member of your committee in which the strike leaders admitted an agreement or understanding existed between themselves and postal officials as to the character of mails which would be permitted to pass through the picket lines.

(12) That the Post Office Department bases its action in the matter on existing laws as follows, to wit:

"Whenever, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the postal service cannot be safely continued, the revenues collected, or the laws maintained on any post road, he may discontinue the service on such road or any part thereof until the same can be safely restored (39 U. S. C. 492)."

(13) That the Postmaster General is now involved in litigation as a result of his classification of United States mail but that the said litigation can have no bearing on whether the investigation called for by the resolution is warranted or not.

(14) That the section of the United States Code upon which the Post Office Department relied for its right to deliver certain packages and parcels and to refuse to deliver certain packages and parcels clearly does not apply in a situation where the Post Office Department makes some deliveries of mail on a post road at all times and refuses to make others and at no time discontinues all service.

(15) That the Postmaster General, in making a distinction between the type of mail matter rather than the place of delivery as a ground for his refusal to perform the services of his Department is in fact legislating and thus usurping the function of Congress.

(16) That the Postmaster General did not order the proper delivery of United States mail and did not order the discontinuance of delivery of United States mail by authority of title 39, section 492, of the United States Code, but did order delivery of some parcels of mail and nondelivery of other parcels of mail which amounts to censorship of United States mail on the part of the Postmaster General, an act he is given no right to commit in any United States Code or postal regulation.

(17) That the Postmaster General was not called upon to testify or to explain his actions or the basis upon which he relied for his right to censor United States mail although the minority of your committee on divers occasions urgently requested that he be called.

(18) That the resolution calls for a committee, not only to investigate interference with United States mail and agreements made between outside persons and postal officials but also for its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

(19) That if it is not the desire of the Congress that the Postmaster General be permitted to make such deliveries of United States mail as his whims may dictate under presumed authority of section 492 of title 39 of the United States Code, legislation is necessary, and since your committee refused to call the Postmaster General so that information might be obtained it is urgent that the resolution be approved so that a complete investigation may be made possible.

(20) That public respect for the Post Office Department has suffered a severe blow which can only be remedied by a complete and thorough investigation of all interference, all agreements, and all censorships made by outside persons and all orders amounting to legislation and censorship ordered by the Postmaster General.

The minority of the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee of the Senate respectfully requests that the resolution be agreed to.

H. STYLES BRIDGES.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, submitted the following individual views:

The undersigned does not agree with the report of the committee on Senate Resolution 140. The report of the committee states:

"That by reason of the strike and the attitude of the strikers on the outside and the armed conditions existing on the inside of the several steel corporation plants, the unusual service demanded of the Post Office Department could not be safely carried on; that to have done so would have subjected the postal carriers to jeopardy of life and limb."

It is true that by reason of the strike and the attitude of the strikers and so-called picketers the unusual service demanded of the Post Office Department could not safely be carried on, and that to have undertaken to carry it on would have subjected the postal carriers to jeopardy of life and limb. However, the fundamental conception of the Government is that the Government will make it safe for its servants to perform their duties in the functioning of the Government. Agreed that armed men threatened to kill carriers of the mail, it was the duty of the Government of the United States, primarily the duty of the Post Office Department, so to protect their postmasters and carriers as to make it safe for them to carry the mail notwithstanding the threats of violence.

A government must function notwithstanding men in violation of the law make it dangerous to do so. The primary obligation of a government is safety. It is no excuse for failing to carry the mails to say that it was unsafe to carry them. If it was unsafe on the first day, it should have been made safe the second day, and it was the clear duty of the Post Office Department to call upon the Department of Justice for the means of preserving the law, and thereafter upon the President, to the end that the full power of the Government should be employed without delay to make it safe to carry the mail. This might have required the calling out of the Army, but if this were necessary, the Army itself should have been called out in order that the mail might be carried. If it be said that such a course might have caused bloodshed, the answer is that any other course is likely to cause much more bloodshed.

Attention is called to the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States (In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564), from which I quote:

"But there is no such impotency in the National Government. The entire strength of the Nation may be used to enforce in any part of the land the full and free exercise of all national powers and the security of all rights entrusted by the Constitution to its care. The strong arm of the National Government may be put forth to brush away all obstructions to the freedom of interstate commerce or the transportation of the mails. If the emergency arises, the Army of the Nation, and all its militia, are at the service of the Nation to compel obedience to its laws."

When a government suspends its functions simply because lawbreakers make it unsafe to perform them, it is surrendering the law to violators of the law. It is abdicating in favor of those who would take the law into their own hands.

Suppose the example set here by the Post Office Department should be followed. Of what function of the Government would we be assured?

A government can afford to weaken before a mob no more than it can afford to weaken before a highwayman.

The proper course for the Post Office Department was to have had warrants sworn out for the known offenders and have them brought at once before a United States commissioner and placed in jail or placed under bond pending trial, and if this procedure failed, then it was the clear duty of the Post Office Department to call upon the President of the United States to exert such force as was necessary to overcome the violent interference with the functioning of the Government. The evidence shows it delayed action 2 weeks, having in the meantime agreed to withhold lawful mail which the picketers objected to. The action in refusing to take the mail, taken under circumstances of duress, was calculated to encourage others to demand that the Government proceed with its functions according to the will of private citizens rather than according to law. The strike leaders first made it unsafe to carry the mail, then stipulated what mail might be carried.

I have little patience with the effort to make a distinction between normal mail and abnormal mail; but, if made, it must be made freely by the authorities and not under duress. An American citizen has a right under the law to transmit mailable matter through the post office upon the payment of the postage required by law. A citizen pays his taxes, renders his general service as a citizen, in order that he may receive the benefits of the Government; and the carrying of the mails is a monopoly enjoyed by the Government for the benefit of its citizens. It is a benefit to which they are entitled as a matter of right.

Wives were undertaking to send packages of food, medicine, and clothing to their husbands who were in industrial institutions making their livings. The wives were peaceful. The husbands were peaceful. Men who had taken the law into their own hands undertook to say what mail should go through and what mail should not go through. This was in violation of the law. Agreed that the amount of mail was abnormal on account of the unusual conditions, agreed that the character of the mails was abnormal, it is nevertheless true that the carrying of the United States mail is a function of the Government and the mail was lawful. No one else may carry the mail. An American citizen has a right to mail a package of food or clothing to another citizen, designating his address, and upon paying the postage has a right to demand the delivery of the mail. If it is unsafe at the moment to deliver it, it is the clear duty of the Government to make it safe to deliver it, and that without delay.

The failure of the Post Office Department to take steps to make it safe to deliver the mail cannot be condoned and ought not to be overlooked by the Congress. We have at our command always the processes of the courts and when these fail, we have the armed power of a great Government. If we shall not use this armed power when necessary to preserve order or to enable the Government to function, when do we propose to use it? Under what circumstances is it to be used?

The heart of the matter is not the carrying of the mail but the preservation of law by the Government charged with the duty of preserving the law. Civilization is always struggling for its life. There are many lawless men at large and there are many men who ordinarily are law abiding but who become lawless under exciting conditions. It is always the duty of the Government to cope with those who take the law into their own hands. It is always the duty of the Government to maintain the public peace. It must command respect for itself and its statutes. This is fundamental. It is true that it is primarily the duty of the State governments to maintain public peace within the States, but the carrying of the mails is a function of the Federal Government, and the last particle of power of the Federal Government must be employed whenever occasion demands. If men taking the law into their own hands make it unsafe for the humblest servant of the Government to perform his functions, it is the duty of the Government instantly to make it safe and to exhaust its powers to make it safe for him to function.

The humblest man in America, as well as the greatest, has the right to have his mail carried upon the payment of the postage required by law, and it is no excuse that men taking the law into their own hands have made it unsafe to carry the mail, or that the mail was unusual in quantity or character. The Government may wait when floods destroy roads or bridges until the roads are restored and the bridges shall have been rebuilt. In event of war, the Government may have to win a war in order to carry mails to its citizens, but when a mob or individual, whether a picketer or a highwayman, makes it unsafe for the Government to function, the Government must without a moment's hesitation make it unsafe for him and safe for itself and its citizens. To do less is to invite destruction of the Government, is to destroy the faith of the people in the capacity of their Government to perform its functions and to maintain order, and the maintenance of order is the fundamental function of the Government. Whenever it fails others must meet violence with violence. They have no choice.

I hope that the Post Office Department will never again undertake to excuse itself before the Congress by the plea that lawless men had made it unsafe to carry the mails. On the other hand, I hope that hereafter when lawless men or highwaymen or picketers or others interfere with the mails, instant action will be the rule and all the power necessary will be invoked in due season.

I may say that the evidence showed that the men who were interfering with the mails and making it unsafe for the Post Office officials to carry them were representatives of a labor organization known as the C. I. O. If this organization is to invoke the law, it ought to respect and obey the law. It cannot expect to be recognized as an agency for collective bargaining under the law unless it proposes to observe the law in other respects. An organization which makes a rule of disregarding the law cannot ask for the recognition of the law, nor may it expect the recognition of men and women who respect the law and look to it for their security. Government employees ought not to join an organization that does not respect and observe the laws of the Government.

Under the amendment to the resolution the committee heard testimony as to the Chicago riot. The testimony was consistent with the verdict of the coroner's jury that the homicides in that riot were justifiable. No representation is made here that it was all the testimony that might be produced. The police were dealing with an armed mob proceeding to a plant where peaceful men were at work. The police warned the mob as required by law. It would not yield, but continued in an attitude of menace. Missiles were thrown. A shot was fired. Then the conflict. A mob must disperse upon orders from police authorities. To refuse to do so and continue in an attitude of menace is to invite and become responsible for consequences. In this view the question of which side first attacked is of secondary importance.

Peaceful citizens expect peace officers to maintain the peace. Their actions as to the use of force are not to be "weighed in golden scales"—to use a phrase from the Supreme Court of North Carolina. In stopping the progress of the mob and then in breaking it up, the question whether they used excessive force arises, but this is a question which is referred, in the first instance, to the discretion of the police officers. They were charged with the duty of employing all the force necessary. They were on the ground; they had to deal with the situation as they saw it. Opinions may differ as to the amount of force necessary, but the police officers are entitled to the benefit of the presumption that they acted in good faith and were in the best position to determine what was necessary. In such a position "judicial temperament" is not expected.

Suppose they had run before the mob? If this is intolerable, who will say that in resisting and subduing it, after fair warning, they did more than their duty? Bloodshed is deplorable, but if the public peace requires it we must pay the price.

I may add that I question the policy of congressional investigations in matters of this character. Are police officers under Federal supervision? Are they to be informed that their actions are to be reviewed by us? Congress investigates solely with the view to legislation. What legislation is in contemplation concerning police officers in Chicago or elsewhere? What legislation is in contemplation concerning civil servants in the State of Illinois? And if there are wrongs to be remedied, what is proposed to be done? If murder is committee in Chicago, does Congress propose to take jurisdiction?

Is the power of Congress to be invoked under the fourteenth amendment? If so, it may be well to recall the famous Slaughter-house case (16 Wallace, 36), and to quite the following:

"It would be the vainest show of learning to attempt to prove by citations of authority that up to the adoption of the recent amendments no claim or pretense was set up that those rights depended on the Federal Government for their existence or protection beyond the very few express limitations which the Federal Constitution imposed upon the States—such, for instance, as the prohibition against ex-post-facto laws, bills of attainder, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But, with the exception of these and a few other restrictions, the entire domain of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the States, as above defined, lay within the constitutional and legislative power of the States and without that of the Federal Government. Was it the purpose of the fourteenth amendment by the simple declaration that no State should make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States to transfer the security and protection of all the civil rights which we have mentioned from the States to the Federal Government? And where it is declared that Congress shall have the power to enforce that article, was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States?

"All this and more must follow, if the proposition of the plaintiffs in error be sound. For not only are these rights subject to the control of Congress whenever in its discretion any of them are supposed to be abridged by State legislation, but that body may also pass laws in advance limiting and restricting the exercise of legislative power by the States in their most ordinary and usual functions as in its judgment it may think proper on all such subjects. And, still further, such a construction followed by the reversal of the judgments of the Supreme Court of Louisiana in these cases would constitute this court a perpetual censor upon all legislation of the States, on the civil rights of their own citizens, with authority to nullify such as it did not approve as consistent with those rights as they existed at the time of the adoption of this amendment. The argument, we admit, is not always the most conclusive which is drawn from the consequences urged against the adoption of a particular construction of an instrument. But when, as in the case before us, these consequences are so serious, so far-reaching and pervading, so great a departure from the structure and spirit of our institutions; when the effect is to fetter and degrade the State governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character; when, in fact it radically changes the whole theory of the relations of the State and Federal Governments to each other and of both these governments to the people, the argument has a force that is irresistible in the absence of language which expresses such a purpose too clearly to admit of doubt.

"We are convinced that no such results were intended by the Congress which proposed these amendments, nor by the legislatures of the States which ratified them."

I disavow the remotest reflection upon any other committee, but bring the matter forward to suggest that the power of Congress to sit in judgment upon acts of local police—or, for that matter, of Governors or mayors—is very slender indeed. As yet this is not a centralized Government, and the principle of local self-government is yet a fundamental principle. The Federal Government may interfere only where Federal functions are involved, or strictly Federal rights are in question, by reason of State action, or the maintenance of a republican form of government in any State requires the exercise of Federal powers. As to what are the Federal rights, i. e., one's rights as a citizen of the United States as compared with his rights as a citizen of a State, I suggest a reading of the Slaughterhouse case cited above.

The assembly was manifestly unlawful. It had gathered for an unlawful purpose and was proceeding to execute that purpose, to wit, to invade the property of others, take charge of it and expel workers from their posts of duty. It was armed with deadly weapons. The police had no choice; they had to uphold the law; to resist the mob and to disperse it. It was their duty to protect peaceful citizens at their work—in their right to work. They exhausted peaceful methods, and then met force with force. They are not responsible for the consequences, but the responsibility rests clearly upon those who were proceeding outside the law. If blame must be imposed for the bloodshed, it must be imposed on the mob that resisted the law and made bloodshed unavoidable.

To take any other view is to impose upon the guardians of the law condemnation for doing their duty, and to encourage the lawless accordingly. So long as this is a Government of law, and not of men, those who uphold the law, and those who execute it, ought to be supported.

There is nothing in the Wagner Labor Relations Act to justify or encourage violence. That act was intended to encourage lawful procedure. It is to be regretted that some agitators operating in the name of the organization known as the C. I. O. seem to have taken the opposite view. There is nothing in this act to encourage efforts of strikers to prevent others from working; nothing in it to encourage agitators to compel workers to join any organization or their organization; nothing to justify the resort to violence for the purpose of compelling employers to agree to or to sign contracts. Workers who desire the benefits of the act must proceed lawfully and within the clear spirit of the legislation. Those who proceed otherwise are doing more than any others to destroy the legislation. If workers desire the repeal of the Wagner Act, the sure way to proceed is to interpret it as authorizing methods which some of their leaders have persisted in following since it was enacted. If any labor organization would have the sympathy of law-respecting citizens, it must uphold the law.

I am fortunate in being able to conclude this expression of my views with a clear statement of the elementary law upon these matters by a distinguished North Carolina jurist, the Honorable N. A. Sinclair, supporting a judgment of his court in a recent case, as follows:

"There is nothing in this case that calls for injunctive relief. The law is plain. Employees have a right to stop work, to join a labor union, and to strike. On the other hand, employees have the right to work and to refuse to join a union or a strike. And it is the duty of the police authorities to protect both classes of employees in the exercise of such rights. Members of the union have a right to persuade other employees to join the union or to join a strike by use of methods that are peaceful and not calculated to disturb the peace, but they do not have the right to resort to methods of intimidation or annoyance. An employee is entitled to the same protection in his right to work as another is to his right to strike. The strikers have the right to picket in a lawful manner, and they have the same right to the public streets for that purpose that any other citizen has; but they do not have a right to intimidate or obstruct or annoy an employee going to or from his work or while he is actually engaged in work, nor do they have any right to invade or trespass upon any property or premises of the employer.

"It is the duty of the police authorities to protect striking employees in their effort to induce other employees to join a strike or that of members of the union to persuade others to join the union, as long as they pursue lawful means to such ends, but it is no less their duty to protect every man in his right to work and to protect such workers from insult, intimidation, obstruction, or annoyance while at work or when proceeding to or from their work. They are entitled to free ingress and egress to and from their work without interference, intimidation, or annoyance from anyone. If any member of the law-enforcing authorities refuses to furnish such protection to the rights of any employee, whether a member of a union or not, and whether a striker or not, he would be amenable to the law and subject to prosecution for neglect of official duty—and the courts are always open to anyone who has a complaint to make.

"But it is the duty of the police authorities to maintain peace and order upon the streets and prevent any conduct calculated to produce a breach of the peace, and this must be left to their sound discretion. It is not only impossible, but the courts have no power under the Constitution to control or direct the police authorities as to when and how they shall exercise their discretion in the performance of these duties. If for any reason the local authorities, after exhausting their resources, cannot maintain law and order and protect the lawful rights of all concerned, both workers and nonworkers, as well as the property owners, then it will become their duty to call upon the State to furnish such force as may be necessary for that purpose.

"But in the midst of the industrial strife and bitter controversies with which certain portions of the country are torn today, it is well to remember that North Carolina has not abdicated its duty nor surrendered its power to protect the rights of all alike—the employee and the employer, the union member and the nonunion member, the striker and the worker; others may do as they may, but in North Carolina the law is supreme and the State must exercise such authority as may be necessary to maintain law and order within its borders and to protect human rights and property rights and the right of every free man to work without molestation or hindrance by anyone."

A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is essential to the preservation of our liberties. (Bill of Rights, Constitution of North Carolina.)

Respectfully submitted.

JOSIAH W. BAILEY.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 27, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 2067) to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer; to establish the National Cancer Institute; and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 2853) to amend an act entitled "An act to refer the claim of the Menominee Tribe of Indians to the Court of Claims with the absolute right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States", approved September 3, 1935; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 2854) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain Indians of the Prairie Band of Pottawatomie Indians against the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER:

A bill (S. 2855) to amend the Revenue Act of 1932 with respect to the gift tax; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2856) for the admission to citizenship of aliens who came into this country prior to February 5, 1917; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. HAYDEN):

A bill (S. 2857) to provide for a modified 5-year building program for the United States Bureau of Fisheries; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RADCLIFFE:

A bill (S. 2858) authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Sinepunxent Bay, in Worcester County, Md., at Ocean City, Md., to replace a bridge already in existence; and

A bill (S. 2859) authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Cambridge Creek, in or near Cambridge, Dorchester County, Md., to replace a bridge already in existence; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DAVIS:

A bill (S. 2860) to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act entitled "An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2861) for the relief of Elizabeth Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 2862) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Worley, Idaho, in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children in the town of Worley and county of Kootenai, Idaho; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. POPE:

A bill (S. 2863) to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) to provide medical aid for the needy and the stricken with illness who are unable because of poverty to provide treatment and hospitalization; also to establish all licensed medical practitioners as civil officers of National Government; to the Committee on Finance.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. DIETERICH, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. MCADOO, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. MOORE, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, and Mr. VANDENBERG each submitted an amendment, and Mr. DAVIS and Mr. MURRAY each submitted three amendments, intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

IMPROVEMENTS OF RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BYRD submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7051, the river and harbor authorization bill, which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 23 after line 4, to insert the following:

"Brazos River, Tex., a comprehensive survey with a view to preparing plans, estimates of the cost of improvements for navigation, flood control, water conservation and reclamation, excluding therefrom work now in progress under the Works Progress Administration. The expense of such survey shall be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors."

AMENDMENT OF RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1936—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 5, after line 9, to insert the following:

"Brazos River and its tributaries, Texas."

ACTIVITIES OF AMERICAN COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. MCKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution (S. Res. 137) to investigate certain activities of the American Cotton Cooperative Association in connection with the marketing of cotton financed by the Federal Government, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. CONNALLY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 160), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That resolution no. 111, Seventy-third Congress, agreed to January 19, 1934, and continued by subsequent resolutions through the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

REORGANIZATION OF COURTS AND REFORM OF JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

Mr. HATCH and Mr. BURKE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 161), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation and study of all matters relating to the reorganization of the courts of the United States, the appointment of additional judges for any of such courts, and the reform of judicial procedure, with respect to which any bills or resolutions (including resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States) have heretofore been introduced in the Senate or may hereafter be introduced therein during the Seventy-fifth Congress, and to report to the Senate from time to time its recommendations with respect to such matters. The committee so appointed is further authorized and directed to make a special report to the Senate and to the Committee on the Judiciary with respect to any such pending bill or resolution, if such report is requested by the Committee on the Judiciary.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $7,500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—EDITORIALS FROM NEW YORK POST

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two editorials with reference to the reorganization of the Federal judiciary, published in the New York Post of Tuesday, July 20, and Wednesday, July 21, 1937, which appear in the Appendix.]

NEW ENGLAND FLOOD COMPACT—EDITORIAL FROM HARTFORD TIMES

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial on the New England flood compact, published in the Hartford (Conn.) Times of July 26, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7730. An act to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants; and

H. R. 7949. An act to exempt State liquor-dispensing systems from the requirement of keeping certain records and rendering transcripts and summaries of entries with respect to distilled spirits.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 7730. An act to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants; to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

H. R. 7949. An act to exempt State liquor-dispensing systems from the requirement of keeping certain records and rendering transcripts and summaries of entries with respect to distilled spirits; to the Committee on Finance.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

The amendment of Mr. MCNARY was, on page 51, line 3, after the word "agriculture", to insert a semicolon and the words "or any person employed in connection with the canning or other packing or packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges, fruits, maple sugar, or vegetables, when the services of said employee are of a seasonal nature and do not extend over total periods of more than 6 months in any one year."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present three amendments intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill, and ask that they be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer, for the purpose of having printed, an amendment which I desire to offer to the pending bill at some time during its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

When the Senate took a recess last evening the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to move an executive session. The Senator from Michigan is entitled to the floor this morning and is recognized.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the pending measure is vitally important not only in its text but in its very serious implications. The able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor reporting the bill, made a very patient, persuasive, and temperate presentation yesterday of the entire subject, and, as I intend presently to indicate, I think that he and his committee are entitled to substantial credit for the great improvement they have made in respect to the bill. But many fundamental phases of the question of maximum hours and minimum wages were not explored in the address of the Senator from Alabama, nor in the discussions and debate upon the floor of the Senate.

I emphatically concur, as I am sure all other Senators will concur, in the notably humane objectives the Senator from Alabama voiced and to which this bill is addressed. But, Mr. President, good intentions and high motives alone are not enough. Practical legislators must ask themselves practical questions in respect to a practical matter of this nature. To begin with, will the bill do what it purports to do? Then, in the attempt to do what it purports to do, will it not create more problems than it solves? Does it not involve bureaucratic hazards suggestive of a tyrannical industrial dictatorship which threatens more harm than good? These are some of the fundamental questions to which no attention has as yet been directed and to which I wish briefly to address myself before introducing another and even more imminent phase of our contemporary industrial problems.

If by the magic of a vivid wish or by the mandate of a pious statute I could universally give American labor—all American labor—a 40-hour maximum workweek and a 40-cent minimum hourly wage, I would do it with unrestrained enthusiasm and approval. American workers are entitled to this advantage. But that is not what happens under this bill. True, these objectives are painted as an incentive and a goal. But what actually happens is that five men, within these boundaries and according to certain vague criteria and subject to many degenerating exemptions, are delegated the authority to decide for themselves what they conclude to be the proper minimum wage and maximum workweek for all the varied interstate industry of a vast, diversified nation.

Manifestly this can be a power of incalculable portent. It can hurt quite as easily as it can heal. It can hurt labor itself. Indeed, on the basis of erroneous wage and hour differentials as set by these five men, no matter how nobly meditated, it can build up one section of an industry to the destruction of another section and it can decimate one community to the advantage of another.

I doubt if Congress was ever asked to delegate a larger, wider, more potentially dangerous power to a bureaucracy. The glory of its dedication, the virtue of its purpose—these commendable values are not entitled to blind us to these ultimate implications nor to dismiss these fundamental considerations of democracy.

Let me hasten to one or two other preliminary statements. So far as these prospective and controlling differentials are concerned, I think my own State of Michigan, which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, would stand to gain from such a law. I doubt if our interstate industry, in any appreciable degree, falls short of the 40-cent wage minimum and the 40-hour maximum workweek. But I am not entitled to assess the measure from this provincial viewpoint. The national welfare is the thing at stake. Indeed the national system, which has been known as the American system of industry, may well be at stake.

Let me hasten to say another thing. It seems to me the committee and its able chairman are entitled to great praise for the prudent statesmanship which is represented in the substitute which has been recommended for the original bill. In rewriting the original bill an excellent piece of work has been done. If any such bill were feasible at the present time this one would be.

But the bill frankly recognizes its own menace and courageously seeks to circumscribe it. It recognizes its own menace in its own text. We do not often find such frank admissions, in any piece of legislation. I read from page 58 of the bill, beginning at line 5. I quote the text of the bill:

Whereas it is impossible to achieve such results—

Referring to the development of American commerce and the protection of American workers described in the previous paragraph—

Whereas it is impossible to achieve such results arbitrarily by an abrupt change so drastic that it might do serious injury to American industry and American workers, and it is therefore necessary to achieve such results cautiously, carefully, and without disturbance and dislocation of business and industry.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say in the earlier part of his remarks that he would favor a bill providing for a 40-hour week and 40 cents per hour minimum wage?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan made no such statement. He favors the objective heartily. But the Senator is about to develop the theme that he does not believe sufficient information is available at the present time to determine what the appropriate limitations should be; that when such limitations can be determined they should be permanent limitations and should not be subject to the vicissitudes and whims of bureaucracy down Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. WALSH. I must have misunderstood the Senator. I thought in the earlier part of his address he said he would favor a law which would specifically and definitely, so it would be known to all industry, fix a limited number of hours per week and a minimum wage per hour.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan said he would be glad to do it whenever possible, but that it is impossible under the existing proposal, as I shall presently undertake to prove.

Mr. WALSH. My reason for rising at this time was to seek to have the Senator correct me if I had misunderstood him, and also to point out that whatever dangers may be left in the bill because of bureaucratic control and management there would be brought about overnight the collapse of hundreds of thousands of small industries in the country if any attempt should be made suddenly and quickly to establish a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I completely agree with the Senator's observations.

Mr. WALSH. In my own State of Massachusetts—and this is why I agree with the Senator that great caution must be exercised in the administration of the provisions of the bill if it should become a law—there are tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of men and women who are working more than 40 hours per week at wages from $8 to $12 per week.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The only difference between the Senator from Massachusetts and me is that he thinks he has circumscribed or eliminated that hazard by permitting this bureaucracy a wide latitude to approach gradually to the goal. I am unwilling to trust the bureaucracy. I think it is equally fatal. That is the difference between us.

Mr. WALSH. I am in sympathy with the difficulty to which the Senator has given consideration, but I am concerned with another alternative, of leaving the millions of human beings employed in industry without any agency or any effort being made to relieve them from the conditions under which they have been forced to live.

Mr. VANDENBERG. We will discuss that a little later and in greater detail.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Just a moment, if the Senator please. The distinguished and able Senator from Massachusetts, in whose sound judgment I have tremendous confidence, himself very frankly said in yesterday's debate, at page 7652 of the RECORD—and I quote the Senator's exact words:

> I fear, as many other Senators do, the manner of administering the power which we are creating. I can see the possibility of it operating to great disadvantage and harm.

Then he said further:

> As one of the Senators favoring legislation of this kind, I want to say that I pray that the bill may be administered with the care and caution, as one of the witnesses said before our committee, "of a physician and not with the club of a policeman."

The problem which confronts the able Senator from Massachusetts and me is one of frank concern respecting the manner and form in which this bureaucratic control shall be exercised. The Senator from Massachusetts has resolved his doubts in favor of bureaucracy for the reasons he has indicated. I have resolved my doubts against the bureaucracy for the reasons which I shall now present.

I yield now to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. Having in mind the Senator's colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], in which he was asked concerning the 40-hour week and 40-cent per hour minimum wage, in his answer the Senator from Michigan referred to limitations, and I presume he meant the 40-hour week. I gathered from that, in the absence of any reference to the 40-cent per hour wage, that the Senator probably would be willing to support a simple bill favoring the 40-hour week?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Upon the base of available information, and with a complete lack here of sustaining data, I am unable to say what the week should be or what the wage should be. I am unable also to say at the present time whether it is a wise proceeding to attempt nationally to standardize hours and wages, whether or not it might be preferable to use the formula, let us say, of the Johnson-Wheeler Act to attempt to develop a stronger interstate protection of hours and wages fixed by State statutes. I shall undertake to demonstrate, at least to my own satisfaction, that there is not as yet a sufficient conviction in the country as to the methods that can be appropriately pursued at the present time.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I think I appreciate the Senator's feeling and his position; and I seriously doubt, with him, that there is sufficient information available on which to draw at this time. I should like to call the Senator's attention, however, to the fact that I have offered an amendment in the form of a substitute which will provide the information which the Senator has so long desired, and which will leave to the economic force of labor the matter of wage adjustment. The amendment, as so drawn, is designed to give labor an economic force based upon a proper investigation by the board before it undertakes to do anything.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his observations. I have not seen his amendment. I am familiar with his general theory of the need for an authentic unemployment census and the related information that would flow from it; and I do not need to testify that I completely and cordially agree with his feeling as to the necessity for this authentic information. I have been vainly trying for many sterile months to get it, but it always has been denied.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I seek information from the Senator from Michigan. When he remarked but a moment ago that he found himself in disagreement with the provision of the bill which indicates varying, shifting action by a temporary board constantly repeating the process of adjustment, did the Senator mean that he favors, as a permanent policy of our Government, that there should be a permanent board for such objects as are described in the bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I favor no board at all with a delegation of fatal discretion to deal with this fundamental industrial factor in the United States.

Mr. President, before I was interrupted—and I am very happy to be interrupted at any time—I was undertaking to say that the bill itself textually confesses the existence of the menace in attempting to proceed down this new road. I desire to repeat my quotation from page 58 at line 5 of the bill, so that the continuity of the observation may not be destroyed.

I repeat that the bill says that it is impossible to achieve the development of American commerce and the protection of American workers—

> Arbitrarily, by an abrupt change so drastic that it might do serious injury to American industry and American workers, and it is therefore necessary to achieve such results cautiously, carefully, and without disturbance and dislocation of business and industry.

I assert that this quotation from the bill is an exact statement of the thing with which we are dealing. No critic of the bill could more candidly define the issue. I commend this candor and caution; but the textual assertion in the bill cannot relieve the Senate itself from the necessity of applying the same rule to its consideration of what the bill subsequently proposes and implies.

Again, from the text of the bill, the same page 58, line 18: The new board must find, before it acts—

> That the application of the minimum-wage provisions of this act to any occupation or occupations will not curtail opportunities for employment.

Mr. President, there are the danger signals in the text of the bill itself. Here is a Federal industrial control which, improperly administered, according to the text of the bill itself, could "do serious injury to American industry and American workers" and could "curtail opportunities for employment."

Will it do these things, Mr. President? Manifestly, the committee thinks not and hopes not; but manifestly the real answer cannot be given until this new bureaucracy determines the manner of the use of these enormous new powers.

For myself, Mr. President, I cannot accept these risks. Frankly, I do not believe it is humanly possible, granted a commission free from all bias and rich with wisdom and equity, for any five men successfully and satisfactorily to make the thousands of decisions which will govern the tens of thousands of industries and the hundreds of thousands of workers that must receive separate affirmative action from the commission under this proposal. It is more power than any bureau should have, and it is much more power than any bureau could hope appropriately and equitably to use. The country is simply too big, and so is the contemplated job.

Mark you, the passage of the bill really settles nothing. It does not create a minimum wage and a maximum workweek. It creates a commission to create a minimum wage and a maximum workweek. Nothing actually happens until the commission acts. No American worker can know, by consulting the text of the bill, what his minimum wage or maximum hours will be.

Grant—and I repeat it again and again—grant the bill all credit for asserting a noble, worthy, infinitely just and desirable objective; but the objective is not reached until this new bureau has exhausted all of its discretions. The commission, not the law, finally decides. The commission may, if it pleases, go lower than 40 cents as a minimum wage, and as much lower as its judgment indicates, within the definitions of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the criticism which the Senator is now making one which may be leveled against every State minimum-wage law?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I think not.

Mr. WALSH. Namely, is it not a fact that all the State minimum-wage laws set up a commission to take into consideration certain factors, study conditions, and fix a minimum wage suitable to particular industries?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts will be the first to agree with me that the problem of an intrastate commission in Massachusetts, intimately related to and familiar with Massachusetts, and intimately responsive to Massachusetts necessities and repercussions and reactions, is a totally different contemplation from five men brought to Washington from across this great Nation and expected to be familiar with the varying, diversified conditions and requirements in all the 48 States of this great, broad land. I see no analogy whatever.

Mr. WALSH. There is no disagreement between the Senator and myself that a commission set up in Massachusetts, such as we have, can deal very much better with the question of fixing minimum wages in the industries of Massachusetts than could a Federal commission. The Senator, however, is criticizing the elastic power that is given this commission; and I point out that it is the same character of power that is given to every State commission. It is true that a Federal commission will have more difficulty, because it has a Nation-wide scope of activities and industries to take into consideration; but the same elasticity that is provided for in this bill applies in every State.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is not any doubt in the world about that; but I again respond that elasticity within the boundaries of one State and elasticity extending to the boundaries of 48 States are as different as day from night.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As one who would like to see the jurisdiction kept in the States, and not placed in the hands of a Federal Government commission, nevertheless this thought occurs to me:

Suppose a State has high minimum standards. Is it not at a disadvantage when it sends out its goods in competition with those produced in another State which has low minimum standards? I should like to know whether there is any way short of Federal action by which a State having high labor standards will not be penalized by having its products come in competition with those of States that have low labor standards.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The able Senator from Maryland has presented the unanswerable question. The correction of this competitive difficulty finally may be impossible without Federal action; but that is no reason why we should rush pell-mell into Federal action before there is any settled conviction as to the formula which should be pursued. There is such a thing as making haste too rapidly, as we found out when we wrote N. R. A.; and I am undertaking to develop, and I shall presently attempt to prove to the Senate, that there are some forward steps that we can take immediately, but that we should not undertake to move into this utterly tyrannical field of dictatorial bureaucracy in the name of the fine ideal which the bill contemplates.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has answered the question I had risen to ask by saying that he is going to point out, later in his remarks, how the situation which I present may be dealt with. My own position is that I do not like this way of doing the thing; I do not like the elasticity that is provided for in the bill, and I do not believe that a commission of five men in Washington can handle this problem satisfactorily in many respects. On the other hand, I should like to do something to protect the State which has a fair minimum-wage law from being penalized for its progressive and forward-looking position.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am inclined to agree with the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. A point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WALSH. There is so much confusion in the Chamber that we cannot hear the very able speech of the Senator from Michigan on one of the most important subjects that has been before the Congress at the present session. I hope we will have an opportunity to hear the splendid and exceptionally able presentation that is being made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. When I was diverted by the last exchange of interruptions, which were quite welcome, I was undertaking to demonstrate that the bill settles nothing; that the commission settles everything. I repeat that the commission can, if it pleases, within the instructions of the bill, go lower than 40 cents as a minimum wage; it can, if it pleases, go higher than 40 hours; it can exempt industries; it can exempt individuals; it can regulate overtime; it can set up all-controlling differentials as between sections and cities.

This power is vastly more than a power to deal abstractly with hours and wages; it becomes, in its lengthened shadow, a power involving commodity prices and price fixing, and a power of life and death over industry itself, if improperly or ill-advisedly administered. Therefore, the power involved is a power over the very creation and existence of jobs. Long before it can be a boon to labor it may be a deadly threat to labor.

I submit that the substitute bill itself demonstrates in its own text the extreme difficulty of nationally standardizing these industrial factors, and confesses the inadequacy and incompleteness of our present thinking upon the subject, because, in the final analysis—and I make this observation with the greatest respect for the zeal of the authors—it practically says, "We just could not put it down on paper, so we have created another Federal bureau to put it down on paper for us."

Mr. President, it seems to me that the basic trouble at the moment is that there is no conclusive thinking on the subject as yet. We are not ready to proceed, however much we wish to proceed. If there were any way that I could completely emphasize my wholehearted sympathy with the objectives so eloquently described upon yesterday by the Senator from Alabama, I should like to do so. But this is a situation, it seems to me once more, as I have already indicated, where haste may well make waste, as we found, I repeat, in N. R. A.

Speaking of N. R. A., Mr. President, I think those who read the section of the bill on page 69, which creates commodity advisory committees, will find therein a substantial reminiscence of N. R. A., and those who remember the way in which the commodity code committees operated in N. R. A. will recall that when the big fellows in an industry were able to control the committee they were able to control the code and the net result of the law, to the everlasting devastation of the little fellow and the independent fellow in the field of business.

I do not know whether the same hand that wrote the code section of N. R. A. may have had something to do with writing the advisory committee section of the pending bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I can inform the Senator very definitely that the same hand did not. It happens that I voted against the N. R. A., and that at the time we were considering it I pointed out this particular objection, and offered an amendment on the floor of the Senate to obviate it; and I hope the Senator voted with me.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hope so.

Mr. BLACK. I have forgotten how the Senator voted. I know the Senator wants to be fair in the discussion——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Entirely so.

Mr. BLACK. And if there is any better method of framing a provision so as to develop the information from various groups than the particular method proposed, I should be glad to have it suggested, because the committee gave a good deal of thought to that.

I also desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the proposed commission would not have the power, as I am sure he will agree, that was lodged in the committees under the old N. R. A.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from Alabama for his statement, and I shall welcome any other statement from him at any time, because if I have one anxiety more than another today it is to deal with this problem literally within the facts, because it is too important to be submitted to any passion or idle conversation.

Let me confirm what the Senator from Alabama says to the effect that the advisory committees would not have the power the code authorities under N. R. A. had. Let me completely accept his statement that the same hand did not write both sections, but let me add that it could well have written both sections, from my point of view, because I find at least substantially the same power and the same hazard in the advisory committees that I found in the N. R. A. code authorities.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator if he has considered whether or not it would be advisable to write a simple penal statute prescribing maximum hours of employment, with proper exemptions, as contained in the philosophy of the pending bill, and stating definitely a minimum wage, as against the proposal to leave those questions to the commission.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish I could answer the Senator conclusively. I am very frank to say that I do not know. I would wish it might be done, and that is all I can say in reply.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think we could with comparative ease write a bill dealing with maximum hours, with proper exemptions, and one that would not bear unfairly upon anyone. The difficulty would be to write a minimum wage bill. But it seems to me that is what the commission is going to do anyway, and I would much prefer to have Congress do it than to have the commission do it. Certainly we can get every bit of information which the commission can get, and we might eliminate a bureau and much expense for inspectors by doing the job ourselves, as we used to do it, rather than have a commission do it for us.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. May I suggest that we might at least require that no order of the commission respecting hours or wages should become effective until it had been referred to and approved by the Congress? It seems to me that would be a very simple answer to the difficulty in which the Senator from Maryland finds himself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is now discussing what the committee discussed for many hours and many days. As the chairman of the committee knows, I was of the opinion that we ought to write a general minimum-wage law, basing a minimum wage upon what we would call a fair, decent standard of American living. It was my view that whether North or South, East or West, there was a standard of American living, and we ought to recognize that and fix a minimum wage upon that basis, and write it into the law. But I was met by the proposition that it was impractical, impossible to do that thing.

I wish to say that, in my opinion, the logical discussion of the pending bill will range around the question of whether it is practicable to do that thing, or whether it is necessary to have a board such as that provided for in the bill. The committee divided on that proposition. I know that members of the committee who were at once in favor of such a general law changed their minds because they thought it was utterly impracticable. I should like to have the Senator from Michigan discuss that as fully as he feels he ought to. Do the conditions with which we have to deal necessitate a board? I have contended for a general law, but I am told conditions are so varied we must have a board.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder whether the Senator from Idaho—if the Senator from Michigan will yield the necessary time—would care to make an observation as to whether or not it is as impracticable to write a law dealing only with hours as it is to write one dealing with both hours and minimum wages.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I understand the question. I think we could write a law dealing with hours without very much difficulty, but I am frank to say that I think when we come to deal with the question of minimum wages there are strong arguments against it generally applying to the entire United States. I have not yet surrendered my view, but I must say that I have great respect for and have had some difficulty in answering the arguments presented by those who think it cannot be done, that it is not practicable.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan permit me to make an observation?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to conclude my colloquy. I have made no particular study of the matter, and am merely seeking information, but from a review of the situation, and listening to the debate, it seems to me we could very definitely write a bill at least touching the question of the hours of labor; and if we could do that, I see no reason for leaving that part of it up to a board. We should at least give the board no more authority than we have to give it, and if we can write a maximum-hour bill with the proper exemptions, we ought to take the hour provision out of the pending bill and not have that feature subject to the regulation of a board here in Washington.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I wish that could be done. I wanted it done. However, I was confronted with evidence that in some States every small industry would go out of business, because there are States in which there are large numbers of employees working from 40 hours a week to 56 hours a week, and even 72 hours a week in a few cases, which were called to the attention of the committee. We were confronted with the proposition of passing a law which overnight would compel such industries, now working their employees 48, 52, and 56 hours a week, to come down to 40 hours a week; and, of course, with that situation we would be enacting a law which would mean immediate destruction to those industries.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why could not provision be made that where concerns are now working their employees more than 40 hours a week there should be a gradual reduction every 3 months until the 40-hours-a-week basis was set up?

Mr. WALSH. That is the language we have provided in this bill. That is why we have issued warnings to the commission that it should not act hastily, that it should proceed with caution, and that its ultimate aim should be to bring all wage earners employed in industry to a basis of 40 hours a week, but only by gradual reductions covering a reasonable period of time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield for one observation?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Maryland for one observation.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have heard nothing in this debate as yet which would show the impracticability or impossibility of writing a definite law pertaining to hours of labor. I appreciate that when we come down to the question of wages the matter is more difficult; but I think I can see how we could write a bill dealing with hours and providing a sliding scale in cases where the situation which the Senator from Massachusetts suggests exists and gradually eliminate such conditions and have a national standard-hours bill.

Mr. WALSH. It would be much easier.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I doubt whether we are going to be able to rewrite this bill on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to a bill, known as Senate bill 2776, which I introduced at this session, which, in a straightforward manner, and with no delegation of authority, does expressly what he desires to have done. I propose to discuss it before the debate is ended.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before this most recent skirmish interrupted me, I was about to observe that our difficulty is that there is as yet no conclusive thinking upon the problem which we are addressing. There has not yet developed a conclusive conviction as to the best legislative method of dealing with maximum hours and minimum wages. This fact is amply illustrated by the sharp differences of opinion developed in the Senate committee hearings on the pending bill, even among the most earnest advocates of legislation of this character; and it was illustrated again in the action of the committee itself in almost completely rewriting the original proposal between the time it was introduced on May 24 and the time it was reported back on July 8. It is further illustrated by what appears to be an equally sharp division of opinion between those who advocated the bill recommended by the Senate committee and the reported viewpoint of the House committee of similar jurisdiction. There simply is no meeting of minds, and as a result we are necessarily speculating in the destiny of American labor and commerce.

This fact is again illustrated by the basic controversy over differentials, to which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] adverted a few moments ago. Some high administrative spokesmen insist that industrial advantages incidental to geography and climate must be recognized and preserved; but other high administrative spokesmen—and I understand that this largely includes the dominant influence in the Department of Labor—insist that these standards must take one Nation-wide level, regardless of the sectional casualties which would be thus produced. Indeed, the whole problem still rests in controversy, and I am talking about sincere, good-faith controversy which has the ultimate welfare of labor directly at heart.

For example, there is a strong case to be made for the theory of a uniform basic Federal standard to equalize competitive conditions; but there is an equally strong case to be made against a national strait jacket in these matters, and a still stronger case against the creation of a new and additional Federal bureaucracy with large discretionary and dictatorial powers. There is doubt even of the effect upon labor itself, I repeat, and labor itself is divided in its opinion respecting it. Yes, and there are other doubts.

Before we may proceed with prudence and reasonable security to establish wages and hours by Federal fiat, the whole related economic problem must be painstakingly explored, lest our zeals lead us unwittingly astray. These related economic problems include new dislocations in relative agricultural parity, for example. They include the deadly menace of an ultimate consumer who will one day himself strike against commodity prices which are driven too swiftly upward by artificial means. They include the probability that Federal wage fixing, once initiated, may lead to Federal price fixing, which, as a general proposition, never worked and never will. They include the probability that Federal wage fixing and price fixing together will lead to compulsory arbitration in labor relations, not voluntarily but by sheer force of necessity as we are driven closer and ever closer to the centralized, authoritarian state with its tyranny of oppressive government-blessed monopolies. They include the probability of an enforced return to the exploded economics of "controlled scarcity" which vainly promises more wealth by producing less wealth—a sort of "share the poverty" movement.

There are other equally vital relationships which require to be thought through to their ultimate conclusion before we set our feet upon these even newer roads. The whole fabric of the Nation is ultimately involved. When we have thought these things through, I bespeak the willingness and the courage to proceed, though it be an undiscovered country. But we have not yet reached any such degree of conclusive or persuasive exploration.

But, Mr. President, there are social and economic advances in this field which we can safely make immediately. I am referring back now primarily to the able address made in the Senate yesterday by the distinguished junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], supported as he was in it by the distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Here is the so-called Johnson-Wheeler bill resting upon the calendar of the Senate, bearing the approval of a standing Senate committee, and generally conceded to be a measure which will substantially reach the child-labor problem through interstate controls and substantially cure it. There is not any speculation about it. There is not any geography in it. There is not any delegation of power in it. There is not any administrative discretion in it. It is a cold, blunt mandate which in its ultimate net result is calculated to do precisely what the able Senator from Colorado indicated, namely, stop child labor.

Not only that, Mr. President, but there is pending upon the Senate Calendar a new antichild labor constitutional amendment. It has the unanimous approval of the Senate Judiciary Committee, regardless of party. I have the honor to be its author. I know about the negotiations which proceeded its introduction. I know that in its terms it substantially achieves every desire to curb the commercial exploitation of children in industry, and I know, further, that practically all the organized opposition which has prevented previous action upon constitutional amendments of this character is prepared to be withdrawn, and that this constitutional amendment, waiting on the calendar of the Senate at this hour for action, in all human probability could be ratified within 12 months and go into the Constitution of the United States.

It seems to me that if we want to deal with the child-labor problem, at least the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has pointed the primary way, that the thing to do is to pass the Wheeler-Johnson bill, and I should be delighted to vote for it this afternoon, and to pass the constitutional amendment which I have proposed and, of course, I should be delighted to vote for that.

But, Mr. President, the particular phase of the labor relationship which I wish especially to emphasize today lies in a different but definitely related field. We have already committed labor relationships, including hours and wages, to the legalized process of collective bargaining under Federal direction; and until this process is standardized in practice and perfected in statute, I submit that it is unwise to attempt to inject a new and added Federal formula.

The question of hours and wages is at the true base of collective bargaining insofar as this process at the moment is not a sheer and naked reach for arbitrary power. It is involved in today's whole problem of equitable labor peace, which is antecedent to labor prosperity or prosperity for anybody else. It is a grave question of public policy whether this latter sector is not already so belligerently or so bewilderingly complicated that no good purpose for anybody is to be served by opening up new and added legislative regulations and resultant controversies at the moment, no matter how inherently persuasive.

There is such a thing, unfortunately, as economic indigestion; there is also such a thing as economic suicide. In the final analysis, the prosperity of the Nation, the provision of jobs for its workers, does not rely upon statutory formula; it relies upon the genius and ability and the capacity of American business itself to provide the jobs. I sometimes wonder how American business is going to find any time left to provide jobs if we are to persist in loading upon it these everlastingly multiplying governmental mandates and delivering it to the mercies of multiplying and hampering Federal bureaucracy.

I repeat, Congress has recently committed hours and wages to a statutory code of collective bargaining, and the Supreme Court has recently validated the process. The best welfare of collective bargaining, and of labor under it, calls for a period of adjustment to this new process before a new and additional code dealing with some of the same industrial factors is precipitated upon American industries.

The committee itself, in the initial stages of its consideration, recognized the close relationship between this bill and the so-called Wagner Act. It later decided upon a severance of the two propositions. But I revert to its earlier wisdom. It seems to me that the greatest present service we can render is to review a few fundamental phases of the so-called Wagner Act, not only to expand its equities but also to protect it against excessive reprisals if some existing vicissitudes much longer persist. The basic theory of collective bargaining, under statute, and of outlawing employer coercion and employer exploitation is, and should be, here to stay. I would not consciously weaken it. But it will fatefully weaken itself, Mr. President, unless it is speedily protected upon its own exposed flank. There are still employer practices and attitudes which are wrong, and there is law with which to deal with them. But it would be folly, so far as legitimate organized-labor progress is concerned, not equally to recognize that there are labor practices which cannot persist, which will not be condoned, and which threaten the best welfare of organized labor itself and the perpetuation of statutory collective bargaining.

Mr. President, the right to conclusive written contracts, after a voluntary process of collective bargaining, must be established; but, equally and simultaneously, some tangible degree of subsequent contractual responsibility must be established with it. The two things go together, and it is silly to pretend otherwise. The right to strike must be protected, but no less the right to work must be protected. The employees' right to initiate collective-bargaining elections must be preserved, but the employers' right and the public's right to invoke this peaceful instrumentality must be comparably recognized. And all the time, Mr. President, first, last, and always, the voice of government must be the voice of impartiality, the voice of equality under law, and there must be no doubt left in anybody's mind about it.

I believe these things, properly evolved, mean infinitely much to labor itself. Labor is entitled to a constantly broadening share of the fruits of its own production, but it does labor no good to achieve these benefits if an orderly society and a profitable economy in which to enjoy them is destroyed.

The labor relationship under the so-called Wagner Act is a four-party affair. These are the four parties: A majority of employees, a minority of employees, the employer, and the public. The Wagner Act speaks effectively for the first. It ignores the other three. It should deal equitably with all. Until it does it is in jeopardy itself.

Mr. President, I regret the unavoidable absence of the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], for whom I have the highest possible regard. He holds a unique position of his own in the confidence of American labor, and in many aspects he richly deserves his prestige. Last Sunday, in the magazine section of the New York Times, the able, distinguished junior Senator from New York contributed a brilliant defense of the Wagner Act and a most persuasive and temperate reply to the critics of the act. The article is entitled "WAGNER Challenges Critics of His Act." The subhead is, "The Senator replies to charges of unfairness and to demands for amendment of the law."

The chief text of his discussion is the series of amendments which I offered to the Wagner Act in the Senate on June 15 and which since that time have been lingering in the pigeonholes of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. Therefore, I have especial interest in this particular exhibit. I intend to quote from it, Mr. President, but, in fairness to my friend the Senator from New York, and in his absence——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator from Wisconsin thinks that would bring in the Senator from New York, I will yield, but my understanding is that the Senator from New York is not available.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My information is that he is in the city. Will the Senator yield for the purpose indicated?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me finish what I was saying, and then I will yield.

Concluding what I was saying, I think, in complete fairness to the Senator from New York, so that the full text of this exhibit may be available for subsequent consideration, and furthermore, because of the fact that on its own merits it is well entitled to study, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the full article by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] be inserted in the Appendix to the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan now yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Copeland	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Schwartz
Austin	Dieterich	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Donahey	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Ellender	Lonergan	Shipstead
Berry	Frazier	Lundeen	Smathers
Bilbo	George	McAdoo	Smith
Black	Gerry	McCarran	Steiwer
Bone	Gillette	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Green	McNary	Townsend
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	Maloney	Truman
Brown, N. H.	Hale	Minton	Tydings

Capper	Hughes	Overton	White
Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Clark	King	Pope

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, referring now to the article in the New York Times by the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I quote first his description and definition of the purposes and achievements of the so-called Wagner Act in general to date.

I may say to the Senator from New York, who has just entered the Chamber, that I have just expressed publicly my great appreciation of his services in the cause of progressive labor legislation and that I have taken the liberty of presenting for publication in the RECORD the exceedingly able article which the Senator contributed to the magazine section of the New York Times last Sunday in response to the critics of the so-called Wagner Act. I am now speaking briefly in respect to some excerpts from that article.

I quote from the definition and description of the act and at least a partial statement of its results:

It—

did, however, give explicit recognition to the right of workers to bargain collectively and it established the sanctions necessary to safeguard that right. It provided that the right of workers to organize should not be interfered with by the "yellow dog" contract, the company-dominated union, or the discriminatory discharge; and that through majority rule workers might choose their spokesmen who would be entitled to bargain collectively with the representatives selected by their employer.

Events since the passage of the National Labor Relations Act have proved conclusively that it is directed against the anti-democratic practices which still remain the underlying cause for bitter industrial strife.

I interrupt the reading to express my complete and cordial agreement with that statement, although it is far from inclusive of all the subversive factors.

I continue the reading:

The recurrent trouble in industry has been the product of industrial espionage, discrimination, and discharge for union membership, and the flimsy pretenses of company-dominated unions. The five cases which reached the United States Supreme Court a few months ago disclosed in a wide variety of industries the same malpractices. They were roundly condemned by the Court in decisions which public opinion applauded.

To which, may I say, I should like to add my plaudits. I have no quarrel whatever with the statement. In this statement I think the Senator has conservatively and temperately stated a reality.

However, when he proceeds to analyze those who feel that the text of the law can and should be appropriately changed, he seems to decline to believe that one may propose amendments to the Wagner Act without being desirous in some way, directly or indirectly, of tearing down this great objective. Inasmuch as he particularly refers to my proposed amendments and those which I shall again offer this afternoon, I assume that my own motives and purposes fall under that general indictment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. Did the Senator say "motives"? I never did and never will question the Senator's motives.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. We hold different views, and we have differed from the very beginning in respect to this matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I voted against the bill because I thought at the time it was unconstitutional. I was mistaken. I also thought at the time that it was not sufficiently mutualized, and I now know I was not mistaken in that respect.

However, if there is any question about the good faith with which one may propose changes in the law—and I think I can demonstrate from the Senator's text that there seems to be a lurking suspicion in his mind upon that score—I should at least like to say parenthetically for myself that for 25 years when I was an employer I dealt exclusively with labor unions under the American Federation of Labor. I was happy to do so. I considered it was to my advantage as an employer to do so because as a result of that contract I received complete disciplinary responsibility in the working sections of the particular industrial operation over which I was presiding. I am happy to testify that in all that 25 years there was never a moment's disagreement respecting a union contract. So that in a small way I think I have demonstrated my willingness to live in harmony with the union problem. I practice as well as preach.

I repeat that the thing which was so invaluable to me in those relationships was the complete disciplinary responsibility which I found in those American Federation of Labor unions. I think that is the greatest labor asset. I think that anything which contributes to disciplinary responsibility is a contribution to the advancement and advantage and welfare of the legitimate labor union movement. I want to commend the American Federation of Labor for its insistence upon disciplinary responsibility in respect to its contracts.

I want to go further and commend those localized officers of the C. I. O. in Michigan who are endeavoring, against odds within their own organization, to reach some similar basis of responsibility. But I insist that it is not inimical to the objectives of collective bargaining under the Wagner Act to strive for progressive and constructive statutory changes which trend in these same directions.

Again, reading from the Senator's article in the New York Times, I quote:

Under the pretense—

Note the invidious word—

of making the National Labor Relations Act "fair" there are those who inadvertently or otherwise would destroy all the fair gains which the worker has so painfully won in his fight for equality of bargaining power.

I hope the Senator, under his recent generous statement to me, would not include my effort in the category of pretense. At any rate, I deny that it is pretense. I deny that it is anything except to the advantage of statutory collective bargaining of a character that can defend itself against ultimate reprisals from organized society to put within the statute the ways and means fairly and equitably to create responsibility. Indeed, the able Senator from New York answered himself, so far as I am concerned, in the same article, in the following paragraph, to which I cordially and completely subscribe:

What I have said does not imply that labor has lived up fully to the responsibilities which the body of our law and public opinion place upon it. The exercise of collective bargaining involves necessarily the exercise of collective discipline. Workers should know that the most serious danger with which their newly won rights are beset may be of their own making.

I consider that a statesmanlike assertion.

Should they demonstrate a lack of capacity to exercise these rights they will find themselves running the gantlet of unfavorable public opinion—and public opinion is the final arbiter in a democracy.

The right to organize without interference by the employer, and the right of the majority to bargain collectively for all, are now protected by law. Where either right is denied it can be vindicated by recourse to law. Resort to violence or to violation of the employer's property rights, always unlawful, can no longer be justified, even by the most zealous of labor's advocates, as grounded in necessity.

Labor cannot have its cake and eat it too. If it wants the help of the law, it must be sure to take primary recourse to the instrumentalities of the law. There is no way for any statute to force such tactics without running the risk of keeping a minority group in compulsory servitude. But public opinion is stronger than law. Labor faces no greater hazard than that of cutting off its line of communication between its advance guard and the force of public support, for that way lies new restrictive legislation or regression from the progressive legislation already enacted.

Mr. President, I think that is as sound a statement upon the general relationships as I have ever read; but it seems to me equally that under that statement it is possible, without being charged with pretense, to seek the advantage of legitimately organized labor as well as the advantage of the rest of society through rational efforts sympathetically to amend this fundamental charter in the right of collective bargaining, to correct proven weaknesses. I desire to add parenthetically, inasmuch as the Senator in his discussion referred to the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act, that I was very happy to support and vote for that measure.

But, Mr. President, the article continues—and here we again drop into the field of controversy:

The plea for greater "legal responsibility" of unions is therefore largely specious. Its true character is well displayed in the fanfare about the violation of contracts by labor. The enforcement of labor contracts, like the enforcement of all other contracts, is in the hands of the courts of the country.

Mr. President, that is true, too; but that is specious, too, in view of the experiences which some sections of the country have sustained within recent sanguinary memory. This process of law and order, this process of reliance upon the courts, frequently has broken down, apparently under the mistaken notion in some quarters that all Government is now exclusively on the side of particular unions and particular strikes.

That may be a total misconception. I charge nothing. I assert what appears to be the inevitable reaction in some sections. It seems to me it is a favor to labor to correct any such misapprehension if it does exist.

Furthermore, courts alone are not enough. When a collective-bargaining contract under the so-called Wagner Act is broken 181 specific times within 90 days, each instance involving a suspension of work, as was the case with General Motors, it cannot be said that a contract under the act yet mounts to the dignity which it must achieve in order to have the substance and the permanence which I join the Senator from New York in hoping it may one day have. So it is not enough to talk about reliance on the courts for the preservation of these rights.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator collected any statistics to show how many employers in the country have broken collective-bargaining agreements and how many cases have finally reached the courts?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No, Mr. President; but I would join the Senator in any sort of discipline he would propose in that aspect.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator will recall, in my article I also referred to the fact that in only one-half of 1 percent of the contracts made between industry and labor has labor been guilty of a breach. Labor has a remarkable record for living up to the responsibility of its obligations under collective-bargaining contracts.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator over what period those statistics run?

Mr. WAGNER. Over a period of at least 10 years; perhaps longer.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. If I may inform the Senator—perhaps I ought not to inject myself into this discussion, however.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is very welcome.

Mr. WAGNER. I prefer not to do it. I was about to speak of my own experience upon the bench in relation to these contracts.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think it is very significant, Mr. President, that the statistics which the Senator quotes are for a period of 10 years. I should like to see the statistics since the so-called Wagner Act was passed 2 years ago. It is under the implied license which has been improperly read into the law by some labor influences that the difficulties to which I have reference have arisen; and I am perfectly confident that the contract casualties since the passage of the act in respect to relationships directly under statutory collective bargaining would be infinitely larger than those which the Senator indicates. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, the acknowledgment by employers of the right of labor to collective bargaining is a very recent matter. Up to the time of the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act, in all of the large industries, because of the economic power of the employer, not only was labor not permitted to organize but if employees used the word "union" they were at once driven out of town.

We have a history back of all this. I was about to suggest to the Senator that there are two Senators in this body who, I think, are more conversant than I am with the facts because of their close relationships with labor organizations as well as employers. They, perhaps, might supply the facts with greater authority than I can. One is the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who has had a great deal of experience along that line. The other is the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY]. I do not see the Senators here just now. I think they know something about the responsibility of labor organizations in the observance of their contracts. I have never discussed the subject with either of them, but I am sure they can speak with some authority in regard to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me say again that I think no greater contribution can be made to the perpetuation of the legitimate objectives of the so-called Wagner Act than to amend it in such a way as to make it plain that it is not a one-way street, and that industrial rights in America under collective bargaining are not a one-sided prerogative. The difficulty is that in many sections of the country the possession of a so-called right has apparently run into what some are trying to translate into license. That is not chargeable to the Wagner Act; I specifically say so; yet it is one of the coincident repercussions from this new formula to which we are trying to accommodate American industry, and it is a very serious matter, because it involves finally the sanctity of law and order itself, and it ultimately becomes almost a matter of sovereignty. Certainly it involves civil liberties.

The able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is the chairman of a special Senate committee which has been investigating the violation of civil liberties in respect to labor disputes. The disclosures of the La Follette committee in respect to some employer practices in regard to espionage, in regard to coercion and duress, must have been shocking to every citizen in the land, and the necessity for corrections in that behalf is not only obvious but imperative. But, having recognized that necessity in regard to civil liberties, Mr. President, I decline to close my eyes to the fact that there are other people in America who have civil liberties, too, and they are equally entitled to a protection of their civil liberties.

The able Senator from Wisconsin has been criticized in some quarters because of the fact that his committee is charged with not having been as assiduous in developing violations of civil liberties in the employer and nonunion field as in the union field. Before I go on I wish to testify on that point, as a matter of fair play.

I have been to the Senator from Wisconsin time and time again with complaints of the nature to which I advert, and in every instance the Senator from Wisconsin not only has welcomed the complaint, but has immediately proceeded to investigate; and if he has failed to produce publicly the net result, it is simply because in the very nature of the situation he was unable through his investigators to find the exhibits in tangible testimony; and I want to absolve him, so far as I am concerned, from any charge that he has not sought to do his whole job. I know nothing about the prejudice of his agents, as has been charged; I know nothing about the field operations of his representatives, but I know that it is unfair to say that the Senator from Wisconsin has a closed mind on the subject of civil liberty. I am very happy to make this testimony public.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I very much appreciate the Senator's statement, and I should like to amplify it by the further statement that the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor, which conducted the investigation authorized under Senate Resolution 266, has investigated every charge and complaint of undue interference with the right of labor to organize or bargain collectively, or interference with civil liberties, which has come to its attention. The committee has endeavored to investigate each charge thoroughly, the only exceptions being in the cases of charges of an anonymous character, which did not contain sufficient internal evidence to enable the committee to investigate, not having the benefit of contacting the individual who wrote the letter or submitted the communication.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to say, however, in connection with the problem of civil liberties, that unless the existing situation as it discloses itself in many constituencies is corrected, the inevitable reaction and repercussion, often in terms of violent vigilantism, are calculated in the long run to do the legitimate labor cause an infinite harm, and any statutory effort to stabilize the situation and to correct the difficulties I shall have to insist is in the interest of legitimate labor-union organization.

The civil liberties of the steel-mill worker who testified that he was stripped and degraded by the C. I. O. are just as precious as the civil liberties of the outraged mine worker in Kentucky who fell afoul of an equivalently dastardly employer tyranny.

The civil liberties of those workers who do not want to strike—and I have heard from hundreds of them who are too terrorized to dare to complain publicly—are just as sacred as the civil liberties of those workers who do want to strike. Majority rule is no less majority rule because the majority happens to disagree with some particular labor chief.

If it is finally conclusively shown that recent Chicago riots disclosed bitter brutality on the part of the police against peaceful strikers, there is no penalty too extreme to visit upon such violators of civil liberty. By the same token, if and when it is shown, as charged by a responsible Chicago newspaper, that some of these rioters were drilled in battalions in the strategy of war for days before the fateful event, and that it was the direct fruit of communistic instruction, it is no less important to the civil liberties of all of us, legitimate American labor included, that the facts should be impartially disclosed and the evils impartially corrected.

It is an outrageous violation of civil liberties if great industrial plants are armed as arsenals, as has been charged. It is no less an outrage upon civil liberties if the mayor of Johnstown, Pa., was entitled to wire the President of the United States on June 16 for the withdrawal of "the murderous element that now infests our city", adding, "The situation has grown so bad that strikers have resorted to the most dastardly crime in our Nation today, that of kidnaping." Or when Governor Davey, of Ohio, wired the mayor of Canton on June 19 that the reported seizure and detention of seven men seeking to return to work was "a clear violation of State laws pertaining to kidnaping."

What I am trying to say, Mr. President—and I repeat it again and again—is that this industrial relationship and these civil liberties are not and cannot permanently be a one-way street, no matter who controls the street, and it is not to the advantage of legitimate labor unionism to pretend otherwise.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is dealing with a very tragic situation, and I agree with the Senator that everything possible should be done to prevent the repetition of such an occurrence. But has the Senator followed the history of that whole tragedy? I think no one will deny that it resulted after a labor organization, representative of what they believed to be the majority of the workers, offered a contract to the head of the Republic Steel Co., on behalf of the workers. I think 90,000 men were involved, and therefore the contract must of necessity have been complicated, dealing with hours of labor, wages, and other conditions. The labor representatives have testified, and I think it has not been denied, that there was no objection to the terms of the agreement, but there was a refusal to sign it. The labor leaders took the position, as I recall, that there was not any memory on earth that could remember overnight the provisions of such a large and complex contract. But the employer refused to put his signature to the contract and said he would never sign a written agreement with any labor organization; and thus started this terrific tragedy.

My opinion is that if he had obeyed the Labor Relations Act, which the Senator is discussing, he would have signed that contract, and all these tragedies would have been avoided. They were avoided in many cases in the Senator's own State, like that involving the Packard Co., where the company agreed to an election and everything was settled very peaceably. And there have been thousands of other cases similarly settled since the enactment of the law.

I say that that is something which we ought to consider in connection with this tragedy, which I regret as much as the Senator does, and, as I emphasize in my article, I am opposed to any type of violence.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his observation, and that is precisely what I would expect him to say.

Mr. WAGNER. Am I incorrect as to the facts?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not familiar with all of the facts. But before I have concluded, which will be very shortly, I shall make it completely plain that I agree that if there is any sense on earth in having any kind of a contract, it ought to be in black and white, so that everyone can tell what all are talking about. But, at the same time, I add that there is no sense in any contract at all unless contractual responsibility is established.

Before the Senator from New York interrupted me I was speaking about the fact that these breaches of law and order have occurred at least coincidentally with the development of this new collective bargaining technique. One does not flow from the other, but the circumstances surrounding each make them inevitably interlocking and invite a consideration whether or not it is not the responsibility of the Government and of Congress to endeavor to do something about it by way of clarification and restraint.

I am unable to believe that there is anything inimicable to rational and legitimate labor unionism in seeking these restraints. On the contrary, it is the one and only way for legitimate unionism, and for stabilized collective bargaining, to protect the advanced ground which they are legitimately entitled to occupy.

The force of American public opinion finally controls such an equation as this; and public opinion will not indefinitely tolerate the spectacle of a handful of B. M. T. workers who happen to be in control of key machinery summarily tying up a transit network serving 2,000,000 people.

It will not tolerate the spectacle of a few strikers in possession of a few key places summarily prostrating all the electrical resources of some 400,000 innocent bystanders in the Saginaw Valley of Michigan. Whatever may have been the inciting folly of arresting the picket wife of a union leader in the night, public opinion will not tolerate the reprisals of a mob which took and ruled Michigan's capital city of Lansing for one whole day. It will not tolerate a march on Monroe, Mich., by an outside army which proposes to deprive the citizen workers of Monroe of their publicly expressed and inalienable right to earn their own livings as they see fit. It will never tolerate defiance of the courts.

It is this sort of thing—not the rule, but the exception to the rule—which invites a temperate, dispassionate, intelligent, constructive effort to see whether the so-called Wagner Act cannot be modestly amended, not in derogation of any existing right under the collective-bargaining statute, but in the protection of that right through the creation of new guideposts and new landmarks which will help save collective bargaining itself from these fatal repercussions.

Mr. President, it is in that spirit that I offer an amendment to the pending bill to be known as title II. It is in form practically the same as Senate bill 2712, which I introduced on June 15. I submit it, to lie upon the table, to be called up at the proper time.

In conclusion, I simply want to define very briefly what this amendment undertakes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator offering the so-called amendment to the Labor Relations Act as an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am.

Mr. President, the first thing this proposal does is to amend the first paragraph of section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act so that it will read as follows:

The denial of or interference with the right of employees to organize, the refusal to accept the procedure of collective bargaining—

And this is the new language—and the failure to perform the terms and conditions of collective-bargaining agreements lead to strikes and other forms of industrial unrest.

Just as a matter of elementary candor, Mr. President, if this statement in the first section of the first paragraph of the National Labor Relations Act intends to be a truthful statement of reality, it must now be conceded that the failure to perform the terms and conditions of collective-bargaining agreements is one of the factors leading to strikes and other forms of industrial unrest. Why not say so?

We now come down to the second amendment; and this deals with a key situation. The second amendment permits the employer the right of appeal to the National Labor Relations Board for the purpose of seeking an election to determine bargaining representatives for collective-bargaining purposes.

I can fully understand the original complaint that if that privilege had been originally inserted in the law, it would have given a large number of existing company unions a quick opportunity to crystallize a company-union situation before there was an opportunity for regular union organization to make its appeal and to present its formula; but I submit that if that hazard did originally exist, it certainly does not exist today, because labor is collective-bargaining-minded and Wagner-Act-minded from coast to coast; and now, as a matter of sheer elementary equity, the situation in which the employer wants to have an election to find out what his employees want to do in the way of collective bargaining is a proposition too obvious in equity to be denied.

The vice of many of the situations which have recently been created, Mr. President, is that this elective instrumentality of collective bargaining has not been invoked. Nobody has invoked it. Employers could not. Frequently unions would not. When there is failure to invoke it to determine the first and fundamental fact as to who is entitled to speak under the terms of the Wagner Act in behalf of the majority of the employees, the balance of the act falls to the ground; and I submit that it is strictly in line with promoting the elemental realities of the act that this amendment should be accepted.

The next amendment, Mr. President, deals textually with the insertion of the word "organizations" in paragraph (1) of section 2, simply for the purpose of bringing labor organizations within its purview.

Then we come to an essentially important proposal. Mr. President, Senators will recall that the Wagner Act includes a code of unfair employer practices. I subscribe to every single inhibition which is written in that employer code of unfair practices, and I would have every section of that unfair practice code rigidly enforced. But, Mr. President, why is it that in simple American fair play there should not be an equivalent code of unfair practice for labor also? My conception of the dignity and the authority and the rights of American labor is such that I do not believe it will object to the assertion of fundamental equities in regard to its responsibilities. It wants equality. It does not want special privilege.

Let us see what are these unfair practices which it is proposed to insert. First, Mr. President:

(b) It shall be an unfair labor practice—

(1) For any person to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7, or to induce or compel or attempt to induce or compel any employee to become a member of any labor organization by means of any threat, intimidation, or coercion, or by the use of physical violence.

Mr. President, I realize that we had a vivid battle on this particular proposition when the original act itself was submitted, and I realize that this language at that time was excluded. But neither at that time nor this, have I been able to understand how it is possible to defend threats, intimidation, coercion, physical violence, in any of the relationships between American citizens one with the other, or in the industrial relationship between the employer and the employee reciprocally. I think that amendment stands and speaks for itself. It can handicap no one who does not rely upon threats, intimidation, coercion, and physical violence to obtain by revolution that which cannot be obtained by law.

What is the next section in the fair-practice code?

It is—

It shall be an unfair labor practice—

* * * * * * *

(2) For any person, in connection with any labor dispute, to interfere with the free exercise or enjoyment by any person of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or to damage or destroy the property of any person, or to violate or interfere with the exercise of any person's rights in real or personal property.

If you want to deny the justification for that amendment, you have got to take the ground that the defense of legitimate labor unionism in the United States requires an interference with the free exercise of enjoyment of rights and privileges under the Constitution and the law, and requires the privilege of damaging or destroying the property of other people. I deny it. Who says otherwise? I deny that the American labor movement rests upon any such hypocritical basis as that.

What is the next proposition?—

It shall be an unfair labor practice—

(3) For any labor organization to make any compulsory assessment, or require any contribution, for political purposes.

What is the objection to that? Corporations cannot legally make contributions for political purposes. An employer can be criminally prosecuted for making a contribution of this general character. Of course, I realize a way has been found to get around that recently, and that all that is necessary is to get the President to autograph a few old, worn convention books and sell them at $250 apiece to the corporations of the country—and usually not deliver them. The fact remains, however, that the theory of the American law is that corporations shall not make political contributions, and they ought not to make political contributions.

Under the terms of the Wagner Act the employers and the organized unions are parties in interest to whom are accorded equivalent rights and authority, and having accepted equivalent rights and authority they ought to accept equivalent responsibility and restraint. I know of no reason why political contributions from labor organizations, as such, should be permitted under the circumstances or under the spirit of the so-called Wagner Act; and I doubt whether very many who hear me, and who may think they are the beneficiaries of some of the notorious union contributions in the last campaign, would not freely admit that they were and are a source of embarrassment. They ought not to be tolerated.

Mr. President, what is the next unfair labor practice?

It shall be an unfair labor practice—

(4) For persons other than citizens of the United States to act as officers, agents, or representatives of labor organizations.

That means just what it says. It seems to me that elementary vigilance warns a country that it cannot tolerate alien leadership in mass movements. After all, this is America; it is not a polyglot boarding house. Naturalized citizens, many of whom are among the very flower of our citizenship, are welcome to all the rights accorded our natural citizens, but unnaturalized aliens are merely visitors; the place does not belong to them as yet; and I think it is appropriate to say so.

It has been suggested in some quarters that this requirement does not apply to the officers of corporations. That is true; but it can be applied to everybody, so far as I am concerned. "America for Americans" is good enough for me.

What is the next unfair labor practice? I wish particularly to call attention to the fact that I have eliminated paragraph 5, on page 3, of Senate bill 2712, as originally presented. That paragraph reads as follows:

(5) For any person to engage in any strike unless such strike has been voted for by a majority of the employees in the appropriate unit for collective bargaining.

Mr. President, I think that is a sound proposition, but I also think it is subject to misinterpretation, misconstruction, and misapplication. I think it might be deemed an effort to delimit the basic right to strike. I would not undertake, directly or indirectly, to delimit the basic right to strike. Therefore, pending a larger survey of that phase of the matter, I eliminate paragraph 5 from the proposal as submitted.

What is the next unfair labor practice?

It shall be an unfair labor practice—
(6) For any person to engage in any strike for the purpose of inducing or forcing any person to violate any contract or any law of a State or the United States.

It seems to me that is elementary.

Now comes a very important and interesting provision:

It shall be an unfair labor practice—
(7) For any person to refuse to sign a written contract or agreement embodying the terms and conditions of any agreement between an employer and employees, or their representatives, reached as a result of collective bargaining, or to violate the provisions of any such written contract or agreement.

In other words, I am in complete concurrence with the Senator from New York that if an agreement is voluntarily reached, by every elementary conception of common sense it ought to be in black and white so that the parties can ascertain what it is they are talking about.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, is that amendment separate and apart from all the other amendments suggested by the Senator, so that it could be voted upon separately?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No, I think not; but I presume the Senator could ask to divide any amendment that he wanted to.

Mr. WAGNER. Then there are other provisions connected with that amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There are other provisions to which I would not expect the Senator's assent.

I should not think that this particular amendment should stand by itself, Mr. President, because unless the contract which is to be reduced to writing is worth something it not only is not worth while to have it reduced to writing but it is not worth while to make it at all, in the first instance.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will yield in a moment. So that the proposal to reduce it to writing is inevitably linked with a subsequent proposal, to which I shall shortly advert, to put at least a minimum of disciplinary responsibility behind these contracts after they are written. I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I fear that several of the proposals of the Senator would have a tendency to rob a minority of wage earners of their civil rights. Take the proposal to which the Senator just called attention, providing that it is an unfair labor practice for a wage earner not to sign an agreement when entered into by collective bargaining. Suppose a majority of employees have entered into an agreement for collective bargaining and a minority have not. Is it going to be an unfair labor practice for a worker who does not want to accept that collective-bargaining agreement not to sign it? That is one of the difficulties I find with this and other proposals. It is being assumed that when a majority of employees have an organization and make an agreement with their employers and put the agreement in writing, the minority of men and women who do not believe in it are obliged to sign the contract or be accused of an unfair labor practice.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I could not agree to that interpretation. I would consider those who had negotiated the agreement were those who had signed and were those who were bound.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator that if every person employed in an industry was in a union and a part of the organization, and a collective-bargaining agreement was entered into, all might be compelled to enter into a written contract, but I cannot see in the case of minorities who do not belong to a union how they could be compelled to make a written contract with their employer.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I doubt if they could.

Now, let us come finally to that paragraph in the proposed amendment which approaches the mechanics of creating a new element of responsibility. Of course, there is a widespread demand in the country among certain types of industrial thinking for the incorporation of labor unions. I think there are legitimate reasons against the incorporation of labor unions, at least for the present; but I do not believe it is necessary to abandon the quest for contractual responsibility simply because the labor union does not incorporate. It is upon this point that section 5 of the proposed amendment is written. I read:

SEC. 5. The third sentence of subsection (c) of section 10 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended to read as follows: "If upon all the testimony taken the Board shall be of the opinion that any person named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, then the Board shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such unfair labor practice; and if, in the opinion of the Board, it is necessary in order to effectuate the policies of this act, such order may also (1) require reinstatement of employees with or without back pay, (2) suspend any right or privilege conferred upon such person by this act, and (3) in the case of a labor organization, suspend or prohibit the collection or receipt of any dues, assessment, contribution, or other thing of value.

Mr. President, it is in that last section of the proposal that the teeth are found. I submit that if any labor union, recognized as such by the National Labor Relations Board, has made under the so-called Wagner Act a contract which has been reduced to writing, and it has been signed voluntarily by the employer and by the representatives of the employees, and if subsequently that contract is violated, and the National Labor Relations Board finds that it has been violated and orders the union to live up to it, and the union declines to submit, the National Labor Relations Board should shut off the union's source of supply.

It has a right at that point to prohibit the collection of assessments, revenues, and other means of financial support. In that fashion I respectfully submit that in this relatively simple way we have given the National Labor Relations Board, if it sees fit to do its duty, the weapon with which it can enforce the validity of a contract.

Mr. President, I simply wish to call attention that in addition to the language printed in S. 2712 I have added one additional amendment, which reads as follows:

The National Labor Relations Board shall submit no employee ballot which does not contain the names of all labor organizations qualified to carry on collective bargaining.

The obvious purpose is to prevent a monopoly of opportunity in the hands of one labor organization as against others that might be eligible to compete for consideration.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say upon the subject. The Senate has been exceedingly generous and tolerant. I apologize for the time I have consumed. I have told the Senate why I think the pending measure should not be passed. I have submitted to the Senate the reasons why I think, if it is passed, title 2 should be added for the purpose of amending the so-called Wagner Act.

I want to conclude in words of Samuel Gompers. I think Mr. Gompers was the greatest labor statesman who ever lived. He was a very warm personal friend of mine, I am proud to testify. It was under his able leadership that the great American labor movement took its great initial strides. He stands so highly in the annals of labor history that he is immortalized down yonder on Massachusetts Avenue with a great bronze statue. If those who are dealing with labor relations want to consult the greatest labor statesman who ever lived, I suggest they go down the avenue and read the words of Samuel Gompers which are found upon the pedestal of his statue. This is what they will read:

So long as we have held fast to voluntary principles and have been actuated and inspired by the spirit of service we have sustained our forward progress, and we have made our labor movement something to be respected and accorded a place in the councils of our Republic. Where we have blundered into trying to force a policy or a decision, even though wise and right, we have impeded, if not interrupted, the realization of our own aims.

Mr. NYE obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I should like to proceed at this moment; but in the light of the circumstances, and knowing the wishes of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I shall waive my right at the moment and yield the floor in order that he may proceed.

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WAGNER. There is a good attendance here now, and I prefer to proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I hope the Senator will yield as I have requested.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULKLEY in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Copeland	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Schwartz
Austin	Dieterich	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Donahey	Logan	Sheppard

Clark	King	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences announced upon the previous roll call, and for the reasons then stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I did not anticipate that the pending amendments would be offered to the proposed legislation now before the Senate. These amendments are so vital to the working people of the country that it seems to me unthinkable that the Senate, with this short discussion of an hour or two, would adopt them. In effect, these amendments would destroy all the rights which the laboring people of the country won by the enactment of the Labor Relations Act.

Mr. President, I have never taken the position that there may not come a time when, because of experience, amendments to the act may be required. My mind has been open upon that subject; but certainly I do not believe that time has yet arrived.

The laboring people of the country are alive to this situation and are frightened lest Congress may take away from them their well-earned gains of 20 years' struggle. They regard these amendments as inimical to their interests and destructive of the rights gained; and I speak with authority.

I am not going to speak at length, except to analyze some of the amendments. First, however, I desire to have read by the clerk a letter which was sent by Mr. Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the leader on our side. I have not yet read the letter carefully, but I am willing to rely upon it. I think it expresses the wishes of the working people of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read the letter, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1937.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: According to press reports, Senator VANDENBERG proposes to submit from the floor amendments to the fair labor standards bill which is to be considered by the Senate this afternoon. These reports indicate that the amendments proposed by Senator VANDENBERG are designed to modify the National Labor Relations Act and are substantially the same as those incorporated in S. 2712 introduced by Senator VANDENBERG on June 28.

The American Federation of Labor regards these amendments as a bold attempt to restrict the freedom of self-organization of the workers, to enhance rather than mitigate the inequality of bargaining power between the employers and the workers, and to nullify the effectiveness of democratic self-government of our unions through Government interference.

The "unfair labor practices" contained in section 3 of the Vandenberg bill are clearly designed to carry out such a purpose. The first unfair labor practice is identical in purpose with the language of the amendments sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers prior to the passage of the Wagner-Connery Act, the language which Congress had rejected without reservation.

Next, the amendment makes it an "unfair labor practice" for any person to interfere with rights secured by the Constitution or to damage or destroy property. I submit that under the American system of law enforcement this is a matter under the jurisdiction of our courts and not of the National Labor Relations Board.

The unfair labor practices (3), (4), and (5) provide for an extent of regulation of unions by the Government that falls little short of the example set by Fascist Germany. The amendment next makes it an unfair labor practice "for any person to engage in any strike for the purpose of inducing or forcing any person to violate any contract or any law of a State or the United States." Here again we find that such matters as the breach of contract and the breach of law are taken from the jurisdiction of our courts, where they properly belong, and placed in the hands of the Board.

The last unfair labor practice prevents any person from refusing to sign a written contract embodying the terms and conditions of any agreement between an employer and employees, or their representatives, reached as the result of collective bargaining, or to violate the provisions of any such written contract or agreement. This makes it possible for employers, under the guise of collective bargaining, to freeze the existing wages, hours, and conditions in his establishment by compelling their employees to sign agreements negotiated with dummy company unions.

When collective bargaining is carried on in good faith between a union and an employer, the mutual objective of both parties is an agreement. Such an agreement protects the rights and imposes duties on both the employer and the union. When an employer bargains collectively in good faith there is no reason for him to refuse to sign the union agreement. Any agreement, however, signed as a result of legal compulsion would be of questionable validity in law and of little usefulness in cementing a lasting industrial peace and good will. And again, as I already have pointed out, the breaching of a contract is a matter for judicial determination that does not fall within the jurisdiction of an administrative agency operating under a Federal statute.

Section 4 of the amendment makes it possible for the Board to determine representation or hold elections at the request of the employer. Such a provision would nullify section 8 (1) of the National Labor Relations Act, which forbids the employer to interfere with the rights of self-organization and collective bargaining guaranteed by section 7 of the Wagner Act. Union affiliation of his employees is not a matter for determination or interference by an employer.

The amendments proposed by Senator VANDENBERG are but a first step toward Government control of unions—a step similar to that which led to the elimination of free trade-unionism in Germany, Italy, and Soviet Russia. A justification of these amendments is attempted on the ground that they give the needed protection to employers and correct the alleged one-sidedness of the National Labor Relations Act. Only a minority of employers have contended that the Wagner-Connery Act is biased in labor's favor. The people of America today have been given an unchallengeable answer to the question of whether or not the National Labor Relations Act is equitable. The answer was given them in the decisions of the United States Supreme Court rendered April 12.

We protest the proposed amendments because we cannot accept restrictions jeopardizing the future freedom and democracy of the membership of the American Federation of Labor—restrictions which result from a reaction to sporadic acts of irresponsible alleged labor organizations. The American Federation of Labor stands for freedom, democracy, and the principle of voluntarism in every relationship of life, and it is our duty to resist any infringement upon democratic ideals and institutions.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think that letter expresses the view of the American worker better than anything I could say.

I said before that it was unthinkable that we in a few moments should vote for these amendments without a thorough hearing and discussion at a place where both sides would have a chance to present their views and where a committee of the Senate would have a chance to study the effect of the proposals. It is utterly unreasonable to ask us in a few moments to vote, as President Green has said, to destroy the rights which culminated in the National Labor Relations Act, fought for by labor over a period of 20 years.

I inquired of the chairman of the committee having the amendments in charge whether there had ever been a request by the Senator from Michigan for a hearing upon his amendments. Certainly the Senate would want at least the considered judgment and opinion of one of its standing committees before which these amendments are pending. No such hearing has ever been requested; and here, as I say, without consideration and without a clear understanding of the effect of the amendments, we are asked to incorporate them in a bill to which they are not at all germane.

To justify my statement, let me say that, as much as I admire the intellectual capacity and integrity of the Senator from Michigan, these are not new suggestions. Many of them were made at the time the National Labor Relations Act was before the committee. Those of us who were interested in the legislation fought for over 2 years to enact it into law. We had hearings before the committee lasting for months, during the time the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] was chairman of the committee; and he, I am sure, can testify that everybody who wanted to be heard upon both sides of the question was heard.

Of course, we could not accede to the views of the anti-union gentlemen who appeared before the committee, who offered amendment after amendment, some of which are incorporated in those now offered, which would have frustrated our efforts; and if such amendments had been included in the bill then pending, those representing the workers of the country said they would not have wanted the bill enacted at all. One of those amendments later came before this body, was offered in the Senate, and was defeated; and I was authorized to state upon the floor of the Senate that if that amendment had been incorporated in the bill, labor would have preferred no legislation at all.

Progress has been made under this act in organizing the workers of the country. Those organized are still far short of a majority of all workers, but I think there has been an increase from one-tenth to one-fifth in the number of workers of the country who are organized. In only a few instances have there been these tragedies which are cited as a basis for the enactment of the proposed amendments. When we trace those tragedies to their roots, we find that they grew because of the defiance of employers to the Labor Relations Act. Had they abided by the act, those tragedies would never have occurred.

Mr. President, we forget that in many instances, not enumerated here, in over a thousand cases, peaceful elections have been held in small industries and large industries. After the Supreme Court decided finally that the law was constitutional, the enlightened employers, and they are in the majority in this country, recognized the law, permitted elections to be held, and at once made collective-bargaining agreements with their employees. There was an outstanding instance in Michigan, the case of the Packard concern, where the company refused to ignore the law. It held an election, and when a majority was selected by a certain union, a collective-bargaining agreement was made with that union within 5 days after the election.

Take the case of the Jones & Laughlin Co., which was one of the five cases before the United States Supreme Court. This company defied the law. Between the injunctions issued by the lower courts, and the definite sit-down strike by the employers of the country against the law, there was very little enforcement of the act.

The employers were advised by distinguished lawyers that the act was unconstitutional, and they took upon themselves a right which the workers of the country I am sure never would take, namely, the right to disobey the law, in fact to ignore it, just because some lawyer had advised them that the law was unconstitutional.

In other cases the employers had the protection of injunctions in the lower courts. Some of those injunctions were granted by judges who were not fit to sit upon the bench, and who had no understanding of the serious problems involved. In other cases, some of the decisions against the act were well reasoned, and I am sure the judges felt they were sincerely following the Constitution.

But that has all been cleared away. The United States Supreme Court has not found the law one-sided. It has not found the law unfair. It has commended the law, and it has established for all time that the workers of our country have a right to organize and bargain collectively so as to be on an equality in bargaining power with their economically powerful employers. That is democracy. Nothing one-sided about that.

I will say to the Senate that I am not an adamant individual. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] knows that I gave in on amendments which the committee thought were appropriate. I think I might say I am a fairly good sport in these matters, and I will take the judgment of the Senate. But I would give my last blood to prevent the enactment of the suggested amendments, because they would destroy the rights these unfortunate workers, exploited for years, have finally won. Indeed, they have not entirely won them. There is enough economic power in this country among some of the "diehards" to continue the fight. Look at the Republic Steel Co., which has defied the law, and which is still preventing organization. That is why, Mr. President, only one-fifth of all the workers of the country are today in a position where they may bargain effectively for their services.

I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I may refer to the fact in 1928 I went as a member of a Senate committee to the coal and steel fields. Read the report the committee made after we came back. The workers of that area were not free men; they were slaves, economic slaves. They did not dare use the word "union." They did not dare organize. They were compelled to buy their food from company stores. They were compelled to live in company houses. They were compelled to go to the church the minister of which was selected by the operators. There were conditions there which literally prevented them from walking, from eating, from talking freely. That is no exaggeration. Read the report.

I said to my colleagues at the time that if we could ever do anything to make these unfortunate exploited workers of the country free we ought to do it. We started the movement which finally crystallized in the legislation which is now threatened with destruction.

Conditions are better, infinitely better, in the mining areas now because the workers there have largely won the rights of free men.

I feel convinced that the Senator from Michigan is sincere. But he is expressing the view of those employers who do not believe in unionization, who do not believe in high wages, who do not believe in collective bargaining. But that is a Fascist state; that is a communistic state; that is not a democracy as we have it in America. All the Labor Relations Act did was to make our workers, who were economic slaves, free men, and nothing more. It conferred no other right upon a worker except the right to decide for himself the question, "Shall I join with my fellowmen to organize into a group so that under group action we may get justice?" That is the fundamental of the legislation. And now, little by little, there is an attempt to break it down. Its opponents think the hour has struck when they may deprive the workers of the country of all these rights.

Mr. President, they are not going to do it. The workers of the country are awake to the gains they have made in the progress toward social justice, and they are not going to sit idly by and see their rights taken away.

I did not intend to say even so much, but I felt sure that the Senate would not act upon amendments affecting the rights and liberties of the workers of our country after only 1 or 2 hours of discussion. Why did not the Senator ask the Committee on Education and Labor to have a hearing upon these amendments? Why did he not invite the labor organizations, the employers, all of those interested in the legislation, to come in? Why did he not say, "Let us discuss this thing", and if there were any fair features, enact them and reject the others?

I am interested in the welfare of employers; most of them are fair and they want to do right. But are the workers, without even a chance to be heard, to be deprived of the rights which they won after a very bitter fight? I went through the contest, and I know something about it and the opposition which was created and which is still at work. Propaganda is starting again. We are going to hear more upon this floor about this matter. We are going to hear more about the National Labor Relations Board being "red" or "blue" or something else. Of course, I have no objection to legitimate criticism; but let people stick to the facts in their criticism.

Mr. President, I believe the National Labor Relations Board has done its utmost to be fair to both sides, and I have heard of very few employers complaining about any injustice, except where they were opposed to collective bargaining. The Board may have made mistakes; we all make mistakes. I have not followed their actions case by case, but I know the Board is composed of conscientious men who are trying simply to do justice to both sides.

I suppose it is necessary for me to say something about the amendments. I had hoped it would not be.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I was hoping, and I am sure it was the hope of the committee, that these amendments would not be presented in such a way as to leave the impression that any vote taken upon the proposals as amendments to the pending bill indicated a position either for or against the amendments. The committee, in its report, stated that we had stripped the bill down to the three considerations, namely, minimum wages, maximum hours, and child labor. The committee did not believe it was proper to go further in this bill. No study has been made of these amendments. I could not say that I would be for or against the amendments as presented, or the amendments as they might be changed after they went to the committee. I feel sure that is the viewpoint of other members of the committee which had the bill under consideration.

I desire to express the sincere hope that the debate may not reach such a stage that Senators will feel that in voting upon these proposals they are expressing their viewpoint either for or against the particular amendments.

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WALSH. What is the amendment before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is the pending question.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I thought. So no actual move has been made by the Senator from Michigan to have his amendment adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan lies on the table, to be called up at a future time.

Mr. WALSH. I thought the Senator from New York ought to know that he will have an opportunity later to present his views, when the amendment is formally offered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the statement made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and the statement previously made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are rather persuasive respecting the lack of any opportunity to analyze these amendments in committee. When I first introduced them, if the Senator will permit me to make the statement, I very frankly stated that they were an objective rather than a formula, and I think there is a rather sound argument to be made against asking the Senate to pass upon them at the present time. While I do not wish to be foreclosed from doing it, and I have not yet offered them, I can say to the Senator that, so far as that part of his statement is concerned, I find myself quite responsive, and I shall be glad to consider it further with him and with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the debate on this question. I am prepared to analyze all the amendments. I do not care to go through all of that now, although the Senator did present his amendments. The Senator remembers that I asked him whether he proposed to offer these amendments to the pending legislation, and the Senator said, "Yes, he did."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Therefore I felt obligated at least to explain to the Senate my position in opposition to these amendments. I hope the Senator now feels as I think, if I judge correctly his sense of justice, he does feel, that the amendments, important as they are, should not be considered and voted upon in this slipshod way. I think the Senator is entitled to having the amendments studied and given consideration by the committee. I shall come before the committee in regard to them. There may be some virtue in some of the amendments. I have not discovered it except in one instance. I know the Senator from Michigan is sincere, and I know the Senator will do me credit and believe me to be sincere. We can sit down around the table and have a discussion with respect to his amendments.

Let us have a hearing on the whole subject. The Senator, I know, in all fairness, certainly feels that those representing the large labor organizations of the country and the unorganized workers are entitled to be heard on these amendments, or should be heard before these vital changes are made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me say also that the employers of the country are entitled to be heard. They are not all in accord with this proposition. They have accepted the United States Supreme Court as their authority for the objectives of this legislation, as well as its legality. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor has studied this matter for 2 years. I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is considered to be one of the great authorities of this country upon the subject as the result of the task—which was a pleasant task, I am sure—which was imposed upon him as chairman of the committee to study all phases of this particular legislation. Is it not a fair way for all of us to deal with so vital a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was happy to hear the Senator say that he would be delighted to join with me in sitting around the table and having a committee hearing on the subject. That is progress. That produces the attention to this subject which has heretofore never occurred and which I have chiefly sought to precipitate. I assumed, from the statement made by him, that the able Senator from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, would agree that we may have that sort of formal committee consideration of this problem. Am I correct in that?

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that I have no desire to postpone consideration of any proposal that came before the committee. I think it is fair to say that on account of the very unusual amount of work that has been before that committee this year we now have a very large amount of legislation pending before the committee, and on four or five of the proposals we have already stated that we would have hearings as soon as we could after the housing measure and this wage-and-hour bill are disposed of. I have no objection whatever to having hearings as early as they can be had on the Senator's amendments. I could not say for the committee as to just when they could be had. I not only have no objection but I personally shall be very happy to join in hearings whenever they can be had.

In this connection I may say that in the handling of the very large amount of work our committee has been handicapped this year, and is still handicapped, by lack of adequate assistance in the committee. It has been completely impossible for us to reply to many of the letters written to us. In fact, it has not even been possible to answer all the letters which have come to the committee from almost all of the Members of the Senate and the House. That is because of the large amount of work the committee has before it and the small number of employees who are serving in this committee. So far as I am personally concerned I will state to the Senator that although we have promised hearings on two or three other bills, which would not take long—I do not know how long we will be here—that I do believe the Senator has raised questions which are of sufficient importance that hearings should be held when it is practicable to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from Alabama for what he has said. I am very much of a realist in dealing with these matters, and I am fully cognizant of the fact that even if I pressed this amendment at the present time I could not hope for its favorable consideration in spite of its merit, because of the very fact that the Senator himself has urged; namely, a lack of adequate committee analysis.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I think the Senator should say, because of the lack of merit. In that connection we differ.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My conclusion is just the contrary, but both our conclusions arrive at just the same result.

Mr. WAGNER. That is democracy. Freedom to express differences of views makes for democracy.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and it makes horse races possible.

I have felt, Mr. President, that this question is so fundamental that it had to be raised. Having raised it, and having been met in a very fine spirit of willingness to explore and investigate and undertake to see whether there is an appropriate answer representative of the attitude both of the able Senator from New York and the Senator from Alabama, I think that what has now been suggested is the appropriate course to pursue, and with that general understanding, and fully realizing that it cannot be done immediately in view of the circumstances announced by the Senator from Alabama, with that tentative agreement may I suggest that I will not press the amendment upon this bill, and we may hope in an orderly fashion to explore the whole subject matter to the common advantage of all concerned.

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite willing to agree to that, in spite of the fact that as things end the Senator has the advantage, because I have what I regard as a very deadly analysis of all of the amendments proposed, which I intended to submit to the Senate. I will refrain from presenting them under the circumstances and spare the Senator from Michigan embarrassment and not tax the patience of the Senate.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I would not take away from American labor, organized or unorganized, one iota of any advantage which may accrue to it today. One cannot have knowledge of the experience of American labor without knowing of the state of slavery that has existed for it. One must acknowledge the degree of exploitation to which American labor has been subjected and is in some instances still subjected, and I am one of those who today feels that while there is large cause for complaint regarding some of the governmental set-ups which are functioning, presumably with the end in mind of ironing out differences between industry and its employees, I am, nevertheless, one of those who believes that no one has more largely invited the displeasure which is that of many American employers today than those employers themselves. Coming down through the years they have permitted themselves to remain blind, wholly blind, to the human interests that were involved behind the stone and the brick walls of factories to a point where extremes were quite to be expected when any gains were accomplished from the other side.

But, Mr. President, when one observes the effort to accomplish a set, given purpose and the failure that has so often been experienced, one comes to wonder if it is possible to gain the end desired by our merely sitting down here in legislative halls and delegating into the hands of an individual or into the hands of a commission a power to do this, that, and the other thing, without restrictions being provided that hold the action of that individual or commission within the confines of the intent of Congress itself. In at least two outstanding instances I think we have living examples of how far from accomplishment of purpose we may have been in some of our efforts where we delegated power. Even those who led the administration of N. R. A. during its life today acknowledge that the delegation of power to them was too great, that the field that they were trying to encompass was too great for them to manage. N. R. A. today—and I think for always—will stand condemned a failure because of failure properly to administer it.

The Senator from New York has insisted, if I understood him correctly this afternoon, that it was his contention that the National Labor Relations Board was administering justice to both sides. Incidents have come to my attention of late which have caused me very seriously to question that the National Labor Relations Board even intends to administer justice to both sides; indeed, there are those who contend that the law does not call upon the National Labor Relations Board to administer its duties with any thought of justice to both sides. So I wish this afternoon, as briefly as I can, to address myself to what I feel is a genuine weakness of the Wagner Labor Act and to express the hope that before the present session of Congress shall adjourn there may be such consideration of certain amendments pending as may afford a correction of some of the ills which I hope to call to the attention of the Senate this afternoon.

Within recent weeks, in discussions with individual Members of the Senate and with others, I have become acquainted with incidents which are not at all unlike many of the incidents which occurred during the N. R. A. days, and I have felt that the condition was constituting a challenge to decency and to fair play, a challenge to law and order certainly, a challenge to national recovery, and assuredly a challenge to the general welfare.

Last week I prepared to address myself to this subject, but when the Supreme Court issue assumed proportions which made it rather embarrassing to seek to interrupt, I issued what I had prepared in the form of a statement, which was published. I wish briefly to touch upon the points I made in that statement. I said therein:

> It is obvious that agencies of Government responsible for providing harmonious relationships have taken positions which smack of partisanship in controversies.

I said further:

> If the National Labor Relations Board had demonstrated its ability to handle the current industrial labor situation, no one would be more enthusiastic in its praise than I. But we have reached a point where we are only fooling ourselves if we refuse to look facts in the face. The National Labor Relations Board seems to have gone out of its way to demonstrate to the public that it is a partisan body rather than a judicial institution. It has disqualified itself as a referee between management and workers.

Again, I said:

> We would be less than truthful if we acted on the presumption that the N. L. R. B. has been nonpartisan and dispassionate in its activities. I have no grievance against any member of the Board nor any of its employees, but the solution of the labor industrial crisis is far more important than the consideration of feelings of any individual.

Further in my statement I declared:

> I believe that my record will substantiate my confidence in and my support of the cause of labor. My viewpoint is unchanged. But I do not want to see the governmental umpire batting for either side. The friends of labor who hail the obvious partisanship of the National Labor Relations Board should bear in mind that it is quite possible that we will see a day when another governmental body of the same type will use its tremendous powers to oppress labor.

All thinking men and women must realize that the solution of our present difficulties rests not with the triumph of labor over management or management over labor but in a harmonious accord between the two. Governmental partisanship can do nothing but increase bitterness, promote discord, awaken cries of unfairness, and destroy the great hope of economic advancement at a time when such destruction would certainly bring disaster.

If management is unfair and oppressive, or tyrannical, let us punish management. If labor organizations are unfair, ruthless or violent, let us punish labor organizations.

Further on I made another statement in this language, to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate:

But the country expects and has a right to expect that its governmental institutions should be utterly nonpartisan, totally unbiased, and entirely fair, regardless of the political, economic, or social status of the persons who come under their jurisdiction. I say with regret that this description does not apply to the National Labor Relations Board. * * *

Public statements by these individuals—

Speaking, as I did in my statement, of the members of the Board itself—

Public statements by these individuals clearly illustrate that they are not only partisans but that they have also taken sides in labor's internal disputes at a time most injurious to the cause of the labor movement.

It is not to the interest of the worker or the employer or the consumer to have industrial disputes under the jurisdiction of individuals who have a bias one way or the other. In its far-reaching and ultimate effects it is just as dangerous to have such judicial consideration dependent upon labor leadership as it would be to have it dependent upon the legislative agents of the National Association of Manufacturers or the United States Chamber of Commerce.

But it is obvious—

I said in concluding my statement—that the public has no confidence in the N. L. R. B., and the basis of the lack of confidence lies in the Board's failure to promote and restore economic harmony.

If there is no other alternative, it is far better to scrap a governmental bureau than to let that bureau make economic hash of our national welfare.

It is my desire, Mr. President, briefly to undertake a substantiation of some of the charges and allegations made in that statement of mine.

It has been a pleasure within the last few days to see that other members of Congress have chosen to speak openly as to what they found in their communities to be constituting a challenge.

I am sure that no one shall ever be in position to charge me with being a so-called "red baiter." One reads and one hears a great deal these days about the so-called "red" influence at play in the National Labor Relations Board. I am wholly unprepared and certainly lacking in any desire to discuss the possible complexion of the National Labor Relations Board, or any other board or bureau of the Government. My bone, if I have a bone to pick, is not with the individual members of the National Labor Relations Board; it certainly is not with any one labor leader who is so often accused of dictating the policy of the National Labor Relations Board; it certainly is not, as I have said, with the Labor Relations Board itself. If my studies of recent days have led to any conclusion at all, it is that the difficulty lies mainly with the regional directors who have been chosen to administer the work of the National Labor Relations Board. These directors, in many instances, are shown to be at fault, are shown to be entertaining a prejudice wholly out of keeping with what is expected of them, and reform in that field is assuredly invited at this time. Legitimate, long-standing labor organizations are, and, I think, ought to be, today deeply concerned about the general trend to which the National Labor Relations Board is so largely lending itself at this time.

I have before me a letter written by one Homer J. Odell, under date of July 12, from Houston, Tex., addressed to the secretary of the metal-trades department of the American Federation of Labor here in Washington. In this letter Mr. Odell invites the cooperation of the American Federation of Labor in Washington in accomplishing a successful appeal from a decision which has been rendered against labor in that community by the regional director of the National Labor Relations Board. I am going to read two paragraphs from that letter.

I am today appealing to Mr. J. Warren Madden, Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, on a decision rendered by Dr. Edwin A. Elliott, regional director for this district, in which the rights of several of the members of this organization as well as several members of the plumbers' local of Fort Worth are involved. These men were discharged for union affiliation some 3½ months ago and a case was made before the Board here. A 3-day strike was called and an agreement was signed, without the reinstatement of the 26 men involved, it being understood that their case would be decided in the N. L. R. B. hearing.

In about 1 month it was found that the officials of the company were violating the agreement, and after two lengthy conferences a strike was again called, and at this time we were informed that our case before the Board had been pigeonholed and would have to be refiled. I did this at that time which was almost 8 weeks ago. The company has now offered some of these discharged men positions as strikebreakers, and the director here informs me that these men must return to work, as the offer of employment cancels their case with the Board. If they go back to work they have no recourse and the back time is lost, and if they do go back to work they have no case with the Board. I feel that the Board will not back up such decision on the part of the director here, and will deeply appreciate any support you may be able to render on this subject.

Mr. Odell, the writer of the letter, was the representative of the Hodcarriers' Building and Common Laborers' Union of America, with offices at Houston, Tex. He is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

(At this point Mr. NYE yielded to Mr. COPELAND, who spoke on the antilynching bill, and debate ensued, which appears in the RECORD following Mr. NYE's speech.)

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, when I was interrupted I had finished reading the letter of Mr. Homer J. Odell, of the national representatives of the International Hod Carriers' Union, who was seeking assistance on the part of his colleagues here in an appeal before the National Labor Relations Board. The letter very clearly reveals the impossible order which the regional director of the Board had laid down in Texas. It is not at all surprising that many leaders within the American Federation of Labor are wondering just what the purpose of the National Labor Relations Board might be these days.

Mr. John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor, in a letter to me, which accompanied that from Mr. Odell, says:

May I add that trade unionists have made many complaints to this office over the attitude taken by Mr. Elliott—in connection with cases under his supervision. Apparently he believes that his function is to assist the C. I. O. under all circumstances while at the same time handicapping unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The regional director—

The contention is frequently advanced that often the National Labor Relations Board, in submitting to the employees of an institution the question with whom they desired to affiliate, whom they wanted to bargain for them, have repeatedly submitted the question which would qualify the C. I. O. for a favorable vote, but have in instances religiously kept the name of the American Federation of Labor off the same ballot. So, I repeat, it is not to be wondered at that there are American leaders of labor who are wondering what the direct purpose of the Labor Relations Board and its directors out in the various regions may be.

About the purpose and the prejudice of the Board, of which we are reading and hearing so much, it seems to me the RECORD ought to carry the assertion of the American Guild, which is found in a report published by the national executive board in its paper, the Guild Reporter, of May 15. Speaking of the real purpose of the National Labor Relations Board, this executive board says:

We believe the convention—

Meaning the guild convention—might well warn guilds resorting to Labor Board action against regarding such as a substitute for the machinery of the guild or as anything more than a means of publicizing our cause before the public.

It seems to me that is a very direct charge that the purpose of the National Labor Relations Board is that of affording a sound board for publicizing the interests of one faction or another within the cause of American labor.

In the Guild Reporter of September 1, 1936, one finds this language within a report:

> After these conferences the National Labor Relations Board representatives called W. V. Tanner, one of the two publishers of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, before them and asked for the management's side of the story.

Now, Senators, listen to this, published within the Guild Reporter itself:

> The examiners told the publisher that there was little likelihood the National Labor Relations Board would believe the reasons given for the dismissals and suggested that he had better deal with the guild.

Mr. President, I submit that that may be indicative of the purpose of the National Labor Relations Board.

A question involving industrial relations affecting the management and employees of the Heine Boiler Co., of St. Louis, Mo., a subsidiary of the Combustion Engineering Corporation, was recently referred to the St. Louis Regional Labor Board. The facts developed there were as follows:

The C. I. O. had obtained a membership of a decided minority of the employees and customarily had demanded that the C. I. O. be recognized as the exclusive agency for collective bargaining for all employees. A company union had been in existence for some time, and this organization went over en masse to the International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor. Upon the C. I. O. petitioning the regional board to supervise an election, the International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers requested that their title appear on the ballot. This request was refused by the regional board; and the ballots, as prepared, carried only the title of the C. I. O., which required that the employees vote either "yes" or "no" for C. I. O. representation. As a result of the election the C. I. O. was hopelessly defeated, and conceded that the boilermakers had a majority. The management expressed a willingness to negotiate a working agreement with the boilermakers' organization and indicated this willingness to the officials of the regional labor board. The board, however, advised the management that such an agreement could not be negotiated; that a second election would have to be held with the boilermakers' title appearing on the ballot before it would be permissible for an agreement to be effectuated.

Again, the point is made, as it naturally would be made, that favoritism of a very high order, a large degree of it, is played by the National Labor Relations Board in these internal difficulties between labor organizations themselves.

Again, in Beaumont, Tex., the Gulf Refining Corporation admitted that the boilermakers had a decided majority of the employees in the boiler and tank departments. This admission was made when the international representative of the boilermakers' union presented to the management a list of the men who were members of the union, whereupon the management agreed to negotiate a memorandum of agreement with the boilermakers' representative. However, they expressed the belief that the advice of the regional labor board should be sought in order that they might not conflict with the terms of the National Labor Relations Act.

The regional board advised the management that an agreement could not be negotiated until confirmation had been obtained from Washington, headquarters of the National Labor Board. This case has been pending before the National Board for a period of more than 2 months, and as yet authorization to negotiate an agreement has not been granted. It should be definitely understood that no other organization has claimed jurisdiction over these employees, and the management is willing to bargain collectively through the boilermakers' organization for its employees.

A similar condition exists in Chattanooga, Tenn., where the Combustion Engineering Corporation, boiler manufacturers, have several plants, separate and distinct from each other. In the boiler manufacturing plants proper the employees are members, by a tremendous majority, of the boilermakers' union. In a comparatively small plant, also owned by the Combustion Engineering Corporation, but not engaged in boiler manufacturing, the C. I. O. predominates. This plant is not in the same yard as the boiler-making plant, and when the management expressed a desire to negotiate an agreement with the boilermakers' union, they were advised by the regional board that all plants would participate in the election, and the outcome of the election would decide the collective bargaining agency for all employees, regardless of the fact that there is a distinct difference between the operations of the boiler-manufacturing plants and the other accessory plants, another evidence of the favoritism shown by the National Labor Relations Board between a faction engaged in conflict within American labor today.

A very interesting thing is called to our attention.

In Baltimore, Md., the Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, a C. I. O. affiliate, gained control of a tunnel project, and a young man, unemployed, sought to obtain work at the rate of 45 cents an hour. Before he was permitted to assume his duties, he was required to pay to the committeeman representing the C. I. O. organization $10, and to sign a card wherein he pledged himself to pay the regular monthly dues of the organization plus $1 a week strike assessment.

After working at the rate of 45 cents an hour for approximately 3 weeks, he was advanced to a position paying 55 cents an hour, and was immediately forced to pay the C. I. O. representative the sum of $25. He has now been advised that within a few weeks' time he will be assigned to a position paying 90 cents an hour, and has been notified by the C. I. O. that upon entering on his new duties he will be assessed $50 in order that he may perform the duties required at the higher rate of pay.

Mr. President, in all of these cases I am prepared to offer proof in documentary form if and when it shall be called for.

Upon publication last week of my statement from which I read this afternoon, I received from the pastor of a Lutheran Church in Philadelphia an extended letter which found me wholly unbelieving. I read his letter again and again and again and said to myself, "This cannot possibly be true." Yet so substantial did some of the allegations contained within the letter seem to me that I asked this gentleman to come to Washington, and for 3 hours yesterday morning I conferred with him, in the presence of others who might be helpful in bringing out the facts.

The story is one which certainly is basis for challenge if ever there was basis for challenge. If ever American labor was challenged it is challenged by reason of what I am ready now to say are the facts in connection with the case which this man, Rev. R. B. Naugle, pastor of the Resurrection Lutheran Church, Fifty-second and Thompson Streets, Philadelphia, has presented.

I think most Senators will remember having read some months ago of the strike within the Apex Hosiery Co. plant in Philadelphia. Just a brief review of what transpired there might be of interest for the RECORD at this time.

The Apex Hosiery Co. employs just a few short of 2,500 employees. There are other hosiery plants in the neighborhood where the Apex plant is located. The C. I. O. had organized a number of them, but had failed utterly in its attempt to organize the employees of the Apex Hosiery Co. It had succeeded after weeks of effort in winning the signatures—speaking now very conservatively—of something less than 200 of the 2,500 employees in that plant.

Word went the rounds one day that on May 6 there was going to be a great demonstration at the Apex Hosiery plant. Strangely enough, the employees of the surrounding plants, which C. I. O. had organized, were dismissed for that day, and before the day was over there were gathered around the Apex Hosiery plant something like 10,000 people. Who they were I am not prepared to say. That many of them came from these other highly organized plants I have no doubt.

When the Apex Hosiery management that morning learned that there was apt to be trouble, the management excused for the day all the employees except 20 or 25 stenographers and clerks in the front office. The management remained in its offices, having been advised that it would be expected, contemplating a visit from the leaders of the strike movement. Let it be borne in mind that the employees within the plant itself had moved no strike, had made no demands.

With these 10,000 or more people gathered about, the hour came when, under a certain leader, whose name escapes me at the moment, a delegation moved in through the lines and into the front office of the Apex Hosiery Co., and it would appear that out of a desire to demonstrate their strength and their power, one after another of these visitors to the plant—not employees of the plant—picked up typewriters and smashed them to the floor, picked them up again and smashed them to the floor again, picked up chairs and banged them over the tables and the other furniture in the place, went to filing cabinets and took filing cards and correspondence and tore it and scattered it over the floor. I have pictures before me of the plant following that experience that afternoon.

Then there came the cry from the leader, "We declare a sit-down strike", in tones that could be easily heard out of doors, when more, following this leader, forced their way into the management offices, forced their way into other entrances of the plant, smashed windows with rocks and with bricks, climbed in, and then, in the finest organized fashion, the Reverend Mr. Naugle tells us, that one could ever hope to see, up came a line armed with sleeping cots, pushed them in through the windows, and they were set up, and here hundreds of men established themselves, most of them not employees of this plant, in a sit-down.

For days this strike went on. Hundreds of the employees wanted to work. The C. I. O. had done its best to organize the employees, but had won the signatures and the cooperation of less than 200 of them, I am told, and were not able to make any headway in organizing the C. I. O. within that institution.

Each day the leaders were waiting upon the management, insisting that they be received as the spokesmen for the 2,500 employees of that plant. The management would have nothing to do with them as spokesmen. The employees wanted to express themselves with respect to where they chose affiliation and who was to speak for them. They had a unit, an organization of their own. Some of them wanted affiliation with the American Federation of Labor; not many, perhaps, but some of them. The great bulk of them wanted to maintain their own organization and let it speak for them before the management.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. If the Senator will permit for just a moment and let me finish this thought, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My question was about the last sentence the Senator uttered.

Mr. NYE. Then I am glad to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. What was this organization of their own?

Mr. NYE. The National Association of Hosiery Workers.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Is that affiliated?

Mr. NYE. It was not affiliated with either the C. I. O. or the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In other words, it was a company union?

Mr. NYE. A company unit; a company organization. Hopeless, the employees found themselves without labor, week after week found themselves distressed for want of income, unable to pay rent. Then the employees themselves and leading figures in the community, including the Reverend Mr. Naugle, volunteered to see if there could not be accomplished an election that would permit the employees to express themselves on the question of who should represent them—who should speak for them.

No less than five times I am advised was the National Labor Relations Board and the regional director asked to afford that sort of an election, and no less than five times were their requests denied or ignored utterly, until the community, rising up in revolt, said, "We will hold an election of our own and see what these employees want." The Reverend Mr. Naugle and his associates had ballots printed, had cards printed, which were sent to every employee at the plant, inviting them to participate in the poll that would be held within this Lutheran Church on the 26th day of June.

Two days before that election was to be held employees of this hosiery plant were subjected to unbelievable treatment upon the streets by C. I. O. organizers, who rode up and down the streets throughout the territory within eight blocks of this plant, challenging employees of the plant, threatening them, daring them to go and participate in that poll. Women there were, employees of the plant, who were given what has been referred to as the "elbow treatment", when in a crowd they were crushed to the ground by the elbows of these powerful organizers.

Election day came, and under that program I have referred to here something like a thousand of the employees of the plant failed to turn out and vote. Fifteen hundred of them did appear. Fifteen hundred did vote upon this ballot which asked them to determine whether they wanted to be represented by the National Association of Hosiery Workers or C. I. O. The vote was as follows: Out of the 1,500 voting, 1,412 voted for the employee union, a self-organized unit within the scope of the act. Six of the ballots were held void, and 82 voted for C. I. O.

Knowing as I do, since having checked it, the fairness of the poll that was conducted, it seems to me that the result was most emphatic evidence that the employees of that plant wanted no affiliation with C. I. O. They had obviously reached the end of their rope. There was not anything they could do. The sponsors of this ballot, which, of course, we must acknowledge was unofficial—it would not be recognized under the law—nevertheless called it to the attention of the National Labor Relations Board. C. I. O. organizers laid off. There is no appearance from them any more.

Then following upon their heels comes Mr. Edward McGrady from the office of the Secretary of Labor to mediate. He goes to the management of the hosiery corporation and insists—this is the representation made to me—that the management accept the spokesmen of C. I. O. as the spokesmen for the employees in that plant, and I am told that this afternoon there is occurring there in Philadelphia the determining conference on that issue, and the management of the Apex Hosiery Co. is asking this question: If we do not accept, what then?

Since the 6th day of May they have been closed. The strikers have damaged their plant to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the management is anxious to get opened up, is anxious to afford employment again for those of its employees who want to go to work. I am inclined to believe that if it is true that Mr. McGrady is insisting that the management accept C. I. O. as the spokesmen for the employees of this plant, that the management is going to have to accept.

I insist, Mr. President, that if a great Government is going to tolerate administration by a board or a bureau which in turn is going to tolerate practices of that kind the hour is not far off when Americans are going to be reminded that things can happen here as they have happened elsewhere. The fault is with an agency of our Government, not with labor leaders, who but take advantage of their opportunity.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not he discussed this matter with Mr. McGrady.

Mr. NYE. I have had no chance to discuss the matter with Mr. McGrady, because when I obtained my advice first hand yesterday from this Reverend Naugle, Mr. McGrady was on his way to Philadelphia, and, as I understand, he is still there today.

I want to say in this connection that I have stressed the point here that if this is Mr. McGrady's program then thus and so is going to follow. I find it exceedingly difficult to believe, Mr. President, that that would be his program, and yet I have it on such fine authority that he has pleaded with the management to accept C. I. O. spokesmanship there that I cannot ignore it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not want to be unfair to the Senator, but the impression I have gained from listening to the Senator in talking about the Apex case has been that the exclusive source of the Senator's information was Reverend Naugle, of the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. NYE. No; I will say to the Senator that that is not the exclusive source for that information.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I ask who else said that Mr. McGrady made this statement?

Mr. NYE. Yes; the Senator may ask it, but I am going to plead to be excused from answering that question at this time.

Mr. President, in conclusion I want to say only this: That as the law, the Wagner Labor Act, now stands, it does permit to the Labor Board certainly the power to recast, reshape, and reform the entire structure and the policy of the American trade-union set-up. I feel that there is desperate need for a change in the law that will afford some restriction there. However apt we may be to discount the danger of any foreign policy of government being visited upon us, nevertheless I think we should be constantly mindful of this, that where compulsory labor organizations are brought into being or come into being, there is danger.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I wonder what the Senator meant by "compulsory labor organizations."

Mr. NYE. Just the case I have recited as having taken place in that Philadelphia hosiery plant.

Mr. WAGNER. Was an election held among the workers?

Mr. NYE. An unofficial election, because the National Labor Relations Board would conduct none of its own. The employees themselves wanted it.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator ascertained the reason for the decision of the Labor Board?

Mr. NYE. I have not. Those who asked the Labor Board for action of that kind were not even able to get an acknowledgment.

Mr. WAGNER. I think, if the Senator inquires, he certainly will get all the facts. Let me say in justice to the Labor Board, that none of their acts, procedural or otherwise, are effective until they are approved by the court. Every one of these acts, procedural or otherwise, must be submitted to the court for order before they become legally effective, and the court reviews the action, the testimony, and everything else involved in any particular case. Up to date, outside of the question of constitutionality, which was subsequently decided by the Supreme Court, in not a single case was the Board reversed, or in instances where their findings were disapproved, not in a single case did the court order a rehearing of any kind. So that in all these matters of which the Senator complains their actions have been approved by the court, as my information goes. Chief Justice Hughes in his opinion in one of the cases—I think it was the Jones & Laughlin case—called attention to the fact that no act of the Labor Board has any legal validity or enforceability until after the court reviews and sustains its findings.

Mr. NYE. That is true unless and until a condition becomes so prolonged that it is no longer endurable, and employees and management alike accept what is a very, very bitter pill to them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. How could the matter the Senator from North Dakota has been narrating reach the court? The Labor Board had never acted upon it at all.

Mr. WAGNER. What I said was that because of the clear record with reference to every action of the Labor Board which reached a finality, I think it would be fair to inquire of the Board exactly what this situation is and why they acted one way or the other. I think that ought to be ascertained from the Labor Board. If I had any complaint with reference to anything before a committee, I would ask the committee or the chairman of the committee before I would indulge a criticism of the committee. I think that ought to be done in this case. I certainly would not criticize any Government agency in an instance where a question of judicial determination is involved unless I at least asked them for an explanation, because I would not want to do them an injustice. They may have a very clear explanation of what the Senator now complains of. I am sure they have.

Mr. NYE. They may have a clear explanation of it.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure they have.

Mr. NYE. But I cannot guess for a minute what might be the explanation when day after day the National Labor Relations Board was asked to conduct a poll and those who asked it did not even receive a response from the Board.

Mr. WAGNER. Why, in all justice, does not the Senator ask the Board for an explanation? I am sure they will answer the Senator. Its members are very conscientious men, and I am sure they will give the Senator a reason which will satisfy him. I would not criticize the Board until I had ascertained the facts from it.

Mr. NYE. They should give an explanation, Mr. President.

In conclusion I say that if a state of affairs such as that is to be permitted to continue, if we are going to have more such cases—and if they happen successfully here they will happen elsewhere—we might well afford to be on our toes. This program, as some of the American Federation of Labor officials are pointing out, is a direct challenge to voluntary labor organizations, is an invitation, as they have said, to compulsory labor organization. I make the point, not as a "baiter", not as one who fears that we are going to get this "ism" or that "ism" in the United States, but I make the point that the first step in building the German Government into what it is today was the step which made the laboring forces of Germany wards of the State. The first step undertaken to accomplish the end ultimately reached in Italy was the abandonment of the voluntary trade-union organizations. The first step resulting in the condition that exists today in Russia—there, too—was the abandonment of the voluntary trade-union organizations and the establishment of the so-called compulsory trade-unions.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I will yield the floor in a moment, unless the Senator wishes to ask a question. First, however, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement issued by me some days ago from which I read in part in opening my remarks may follow my address in its entirety.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The statement referred to is printed at the conclusion of Mr. NYE's speech as exhibit A.)

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator followed all the elections that were held under the auspicies of the National Labor Board and the regional boards throughout the country?

Mr. NYE. Yes; to some extent.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator ever found a case where an employer has complained that the election was not held under democratic auspices and with each man voting a secret ballot?

Mr. NYE. No; but I have evidence here of the failure and refusal on the part of the Labor Board to submit a question that would let the employees express themselves as being favorable to affiliation with the American Federation of Labor rather than with the C. I. O.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator ought to inquire further as to that. I may say, however, that all large employers—and I was gratified to read the statements at the time—in cases where elections have been held, involving in one instance 27,000 workers, have universally said they were satisfied with the outcome and that the election was held fairly and impartially. That is the first time that democracy was introduced in our industrial system.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator said that "the first step" toward the advance of communism in Russia was making of the labor unions the wards of Russia. Will the Senator please tell us when and where that was and what labor unions existed in Russia prior to the revolution in that country?

Mr. NYE. No; I cannot tell the Senator what labor unions existed there, but we know that every organization resembling a labor organization became nationalized overnight.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator does not know of any labor union in Russia under the czaristic system of government. So the nationalization of labor unions in Russia was not "the first step", and the Senator knows that it was not "the first step."

Mr. President, if I may in the time of the Senator——

Mr. NYE. I will yield the floor if the Senator will permit me to make just one more request.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that there may be printed, following my remarks, in its entirety a letter under date of July 24, 1937, written by Rev. Reginald B. Naugle, of Philadelphia, addressed to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The letter referred to is printed as exhibit B.)

EXHIBIT A

STATEMENT BY SENATOR GERALD P. NYE

I fear the court controversy is causing fundamental issues to be overlooked. Every citizen is dependent on a restoration of economic balance and harmony. The agricultural part of our population still labors under severe handicap which must be challenged before Congress adjourns. And any degree of harmony obtainable is dependent upon mutual trust and satisfaction between employer and employee.

On every hand is acknowledgment that harmonious relations between worker and management do not exist. It is obvious that agencies of Government responsible for providing harmonious relationships have taken positions which smack of partisanship in controversies which should find them as judicially minded as they are specifically designated to be.

Realistically, my State and the United States as a whole are more interested in a happy solution of the vexing difficulties that beset us than in the manner in which they are to be solved.

If the National Labor Relations Board had demonstrated its ability to handle the current industrial labor situation, no one would be more enthusiastic in its praise than I. But we have reached a point where we are only fooling ourselves if we refuse to look facts in the face. The National Labor Relations Board seems to have gone out of its way to demonstrate to the public that it is a partisan body rather than a judicial institution. It has disqualified itself as a referee between management and workers. No governmental body enjoying the powers and privileges of this group can afford to take sides.

I am not interested in the merits of any particular case which comes up for adjudication before the Labor Board, but every American has a vital stake in the peaceful and progressive solution of the economic difficulties. We would be less than truthful if we acted on the presumption that the N. L. R. B. has been nonpartisan and dispassionate in its activities. I have no grievance against any member of the Board nor any of its employees, but the solution of the industrial labor crisis is far more important than the consideration of feelings of any individual.

I am primarily interested in the welfare of my State which is not directly affected by industrial strife, but which is indirectly and very seriously affected by a prolongation of economic war which ultimately hits the farmer, the worker and the consumer. I believe that my record will substantiate my confidence in and my support of the cause of labor. My viewpoint is unchanged. But I do not want to see the governmental umpire batting for either side. The friends of labor who hail the obvious partisanship of the N. L. R. B. should bear in mind that it is quite possible that we will see a day when another governmental body of the same type will use its tremendous powers to oppress labor.

All thinking men and women must realize that the solution of our present difficulties rests not with the triumph of labor over management or management over labor but in a harmonious accord between the two. Governmental partisanship can do nothing but increase bitterness, promote discord, awaken cries of unfairness, and destroy the great hope of economic advancement at a time when such destruction would certainly bring disaster.

If management is unfair, oppressive, or tyrannical, let us punish management.

If labor organizations are unfair, ruthless, or violent, let us punish labor organizations.

But the Government is not dedicated to the penalization of any group or class; on the contrary, we are striving for a harmonious meeting of minds which will enable us to go forward.

We cannot try any industrial labor dispute before a kangaroo court and expect either satisfactory results or public approval. The N. L. R. B. has such a pronounced pro-C. I. O. bias that the average man regards it as an adjunct. It would be equally bad or worse if it had a pro-capital bias.

But the country expects, and has a right to expect, that its governmental institutions should be utterly nonpartisan, totally unbiased, and entirely fair, regardless of the political, economic, or social status of the persons who come under their jurisdiction. I say with regret that this description does not apply to the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. David J. Saposs, industrial adviser to the Board, an associate of the Brookwood Labor College, a close friend of William Zebulon Foster, author of a book entitled "Left-Wing Unionism", which endorses Foster's and Stalin's doctrine of boring from within, is, in effect, the public prosecutor or district attorney for the N. L. R. B. From the standpoint of maintaining the integrity of a quasi-judicial body, Mr. Saposs would seem to be just as desirable in his present connection as Henry Ford would be. I have no fault to find with Mr. Saposs' views or convictions, but it is evident that he has no place on a semijudicial body.

The Board itself is composed of Messrs. J. Warren Madden, Edwin S. Smith, and Donald Wakefield Smith. I have the highest respect for their personal integrity and the greatest regret that they have been forced to act in a judicial capacity where they have an obvious emotional partisanship. Public statements by these individuals clearly illustrate that they are not only partisans but that they have also taken sides in labor's internal disputes at a time most injurious to the cause of the labor movement.

It is not to the interest of the worker or the employer or the consumer to have industrial disputes under the jurisdiction of individuals who have a bias one way or the other. In its far-reaching and ultimate effects it is just as dangerous to have such judicial consideration dependent upon labor leadership as it would be to have it dependent upon the legislative agents of the National Association of Manufacturers or the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The charge has been made very openly that the N. L. R. B. is a recruiting office for the C. I. O. I do not attempt to pass on the validity of this indictment. But it is obvious that the public has no confidence in the efficacy of the N. L. R. B., and the basis of that lack of confidence lies in the Board's failure to promote and restore economic harmony.

If there is no other alternative, it is far better to scrap a governmental bureau than to let that bureau make economic hash of our national welfare. The common weal makes all other issues subordinate, and the time has come to speak out and speak plainly. We are at the cross-roads. Our future depends upon conciliation and cooperation. It is up to the referee to bring about accord between the disputants. This, most emphatically, is not being accomplished. What, after all these months of call for real helpful, constructive service, can N. L. R. B. point to as its accomplishment or accomplishments?

EXHIBIT B

RESURRECTION LUTHERAN CHURCH,
Philadelphia, Pa., July 24, 1937.

Hon. GERALD P. NYE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I read with pride the statement you made on the 22d re the N. L. R. B.-C. I. O. policies. As a result of many instances which have come to my attention since the date of June 24, 1937, when, at the request of the employees of the Apex Hosiery Co., together with other reputable citizens, I supervised (and the results were attested by notary) an election for them under sections (1), (7), and (9), sub (c), of the N. L. R. Act of July 5, 1935.

The result of that election (1,500 out of a possible 2,460 voting), 1,412 voted for the employee union, a self-organized unit within the scope of the act, 6 were void, and 82 voted for the C. I. O.

On June 22 the unanimous opinion of the Federal court decreed that the employees must not be coerced, molested, or threatened at the mill or at their homes; that the pickets must not gather in large numbers as a show of force, etc.; nevertheless, on the said date of election, in defiance of the said decree, 30 cars filled with C. I. O. organizers did molest all of the employees within 8 blocks of the mill who had not previously been forced to sign membership cards under threat of the alternative of "going to the hospital", at the same time compelling these to go to the picket line at the mill to prevent them from voting.

On June 25 I wired the N. L. R. B. at Washington the results of the election and requested confirmation upon proper evidence (sec. 9 (c) of the act), and if I received no reply I should instruct the employees' unit to proceed to negotiate with the management and return to work as soon as possible.

Not hearing from the N. L. R. B., I went to Washington on June 27, and wrote them fully, pointing out the law relating to the above procedure, following it with a conference the following day.

Mr. Madden was told that under section 6 he had the power to stop every source of strife over the entire Nation where interstate commerce was involved following the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States of April 12, which made any violations a criminal offense under the act punishable by fine and/or imprisonment plus triple damages under the related antitrust laws. He was also told that his failure to perform his duty was directly responsible for the national condition of industrial chaos, riot, anarchy, and break-down of law and order.

Mr. Madden replied that strikers had paid penalties of jail sentences for their activities and no employer ever spent 5 minutes in jail, thereby justifying his policy to enforce the purposes of the act; thereby violating the intent and purpose of the act and in open contempt of a Federal statute and multiplied evidence of strictly factual nature amplifies this policy to be a menace to the rights of employees which the act presumes to espouse, and does in fact in this and other specific cases incite to riot and bloodshed as well as other revolutionary tragedies.

I learned through the Secretary of Labor on July 3 that the developments in this case did not involve conciliation and therefore Madam Secretary had no jurisdiction. Nevertheless, the conditions not having changed meantime as between the employees and the management of the Apex Co., on July 22, Mr. McGrady, of Madam Secretary's office, came to Philadelphia and compelled the management to sit through an all night conference starting at 4 p. m. and lasting until 5 a. m. on the 23d, with him and representatives of the C. I. O., notwithstanding the request of the management to permit the attendance of the employees representatives. During these conferences which continued through the 23d, Mr. McGrady stated, "I'll say who will be present at these meetings", and per the press he persisted in harassing the management into signing an agreement with the C. I. O. who only represent a maximum of 10 percent of the employees. These meetings were held in the offices of the regional N. L. R. B. and in the presence of its officers which implicates both the Department of Labor as well as the N. L. R. B. in a conspiracy to defeat the scope and purpose of the act and thereby causes great loss and damage to these taxpaying citizens.

I submit that the Secretary of Labor had full knowledge of the facts in this case following my personal phone conversation with her, prior to the last meeting held Friday afternoon, July 23; that there is planned a continued discussion scheduled for Wednesday July 28 to enforce negotiations between the C. I. O. and the company on a closed-shop agreement or otherwise is conclusive evidence of collusion with C. I. O. in contempt of this act of Congress by duressfully excluding and destroying the rights of the majority of employees.

I submit that, as representing a majority of these people and in the interests of preserving a rapidly waning confidence in our National Government due to this and many similar cases coming to my immediate attention, that immediate steps be taken to prevent further conversations under this unholy policy to the extent of indictments summarily brought against each and every administrative officer so responsible, and further that I may have immediate opportunity to present evidence to substantiate said charges.

I submit that in defiance of the Federal decree above recited, the C. I. O. has placed itself liable for contempt in its persistence to annoy and molest employees at the plant who are attempting to repair the tragic damage done on May 6 and in fact did on July 19 cause a demonstration at the mill in numbers ranging from 1,000 to 1,500 pickets as a result of a rumored return to work by the employees; therefore, I also charge the agents of the Department of Justice in their failure to execute the terms of the said decree.

In a very short time these employees will be enabled to return to work, but, due to apparent collusion with the administration policy of the city government, the C. I. O. has received immunity from the anarchial deeds of lawlessness as shown in the enclosed photographs of the interior of the plant, which is mild compared to the actual filth as a result of the weeks of sit-down occupation. They will have to face the alternative of assault, insult, or mayhem, signing the C. I. O. membership cards or stay away. C. I. O. has not been written into the act, and it is the duty of every representative of the people that the rights of employment be preserved, that industrial encroachments be lifted, and that commerce be protected or our whole economic structure will be destroyed, and wherein can the now too shallow moral force of the church preserve national balance. Many industries are now "folding up", and that means more unemployment. With Government spending on the decline and the C. I. O. grip ever widening upon this unholy warfare, there can be but one inevitable answer, revolution and bloodshed, coming from those who will be begging for bread.

I submit that there never was greater monopoly in restraint of trade than the C. I. O. seeks to promote, and therefore its officers are liable to the full penalties of the antitrust laws thereunto pertaining.

I shall come to Washington tomorrow p. m., and I should like to confer with you on the above and other cases of similar collusion and contempt supported by factual evidence.

Yours very truly,

Rev. REGINALD B. NAUGLE.

During the delivery of Mr. NYE's speech,

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator from North Dakota to yield to me for a minute or two. I am under obligation to leave the Chamber and go to New York on a sad errand.

The other day I offered, as an amendment to the bill then pending, the antilynching bill which was written by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and my colleague the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I had desired to offer the same bill as an amendment to the measure now before the Senate because I am very anxious that it may be enacted into law. I know how controversial the measure it and how much dispute there is sure to be regarding it.

When I offered the amendment a few days ago a number of Senators, because of their vital interest in the 70-car-train bill then pending, felt it necessary to vote against the antilynching amendment, although they are heartily in favor of it as a bill. I had desired today to offer the antilynching bill as an amendment to the pending measure for two reasons; in the first place because of my great interest in it and, in the second place, because it would afford another opportunity to my colleagues to vote as in their hearts they desire to vote regarding the matter.

However, I am advised by friends of the measure that it would be unwise to attempt to attach it as a rider to any bill if there is a chance that it might be considered on its merits. I have understood that the administration is eager to have the antilynching bill enacted into law. May I ask my leader if he can give us some hope, if the measure is not presented now in the form of an amendment to the pending bill, that we may within a few days have an opportunity to consider the antilynching bill upon its merits and unattached to any other measure, in order that it may be considered by the Senate and dealt with according to the wishes of the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator from New York realizes how difficult it is at this juncture to announce a definite program for the remainder of this session. It is hoped that within a few days, after consultation with all those who are entitled to be considered in the framing of such a program, it may be possible to make some definite announcement with respect to it.

The program, so far as I can state it now, is to dispose of the pending bill and follow it with the housing bill introduced by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The Judiciary Committee has reported today the modified judicial-procedure bill. Whether that will be taken up, following disposal of the housing bill, or whether something else may intervene, is not now certain.

So far as I am personally concerned, I shall have no objection to the consideration of the antilynching bill on its merits prior to adjournment, but, so far as guaranteeing now that that can be done, I am in no better position to do so than I am with respect to various other bills which are on the calendar and in which Senators are particularly interested.

I realize that is an indefinite statement, but, in view of the situation and the uncertainty as to the length of the session, I do not feel that I can say more at this time. So far as I am concerned, based on consultations that I have had with others on the subject, certainly serious consideration will be given to afford an opportunity to bring up that bill on its own merits.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the majority leader whether an opportunity will be afforded me to make the motion to bring the antilynching bill before the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. I know of no reason why that opportunity may not be given.

Mr. WAGNER. The reason why I ask the question is this: I fought in company with others during the last session to bring about the enactment of the proposed legislation. We were confronted with a filibuster and were unable to reach a vote. I was interested in it because I am interested in fair treatment to the Negro, as I have been ever since I have been a Member of this body. My main ground of opposition to the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Parker, when that committee was before the Senate for consideration, was because of his reflections upon the Negro race.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and I introduced the bill together. We steered it through the committee, and had favorable consideration for it there both last year and this year.

The other day, without consulting me or the Senator from Indiana, the bill was offered as an amendment to the then pending measure. I make no complaint about that at all. It is the privilege of any Senator to do that. I always consult the proponent in such cases, but that is not required as a matter of courtesy in this body, and I make no complaint about it at all.

I am vitally interested in passing the antilynching bill. I do not want to have it made a football on every piece of proposed legislation that may be brought before the Senate, and then have Senators tell me, as they did today, "I would have voted for the antilynching bill if it had come up in the regular course on its merits, but I could not vote for it under the circumstances." There are Senators who are vitally interested in the antilynching measure. I think it is one of the most important humane pieces of legislation that could be enacted.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, how long may I expect this interruption to last?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor, and may decline to yield further if he so desires.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield just a moment longer, I wish to say that I want to get a fair vote upon the antilynching bill. I am sure a majority of Senators are in favor of this humane proposal to do away with an uncivilized practice. I want to get a vote upon the bill on its merits. I do not want to have it defeated again on the same ground upon which it was defeated the other day. I want to make it clear that my colleague [Mr. COPELAND] is as much interested as I am in the antilynching bill. I am sure he is as anxious as I am to pursue the course which will bring about the enactment of the bill into law at the earliest possible time. That is why I asked the Senator from Kentucky the question I did.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] has agreed that I should be the one to make the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill when the opportunity presents itself. We have been conferring and conferring with different Members of the Senate for the purpose of reaching an understanding as to the time when we may have the bill brought before the Senate for consideration on its merits.

I should like, if I can do so, to have an assurance from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that I may be afforded an opportunity to make the motion. Then the question will be before the Senate to be decided by it. I am sure a majority of the Senators are strongly in favor of the antilynching bill which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and I have introduced and have been endeavoring to have brought before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield for a further brief statement?

Mr. NYE. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize the antilynching bill is a matter of importance and ought to be disposed of. It has passed the House by a very large majority and has been reported from the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and is now on the calendar. It is not within my power to grant or withhold the right of any Member of this body to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill at any time. I have assumed that those interested are of course actuated by a desire to cooperate and work out an orderly program. I do not think the bill ought to be considered as an amendment to other legislation. It ought not to have been considered as an amendment to the bill under consideration the other day. In my judgment, it ought not to be considered as an amendment to the pending bill or to any other bill. It ought to be considered on its merits.

So far as I am concerned, I should be willing and glad to confer with the authors of the antilynching bill in an effort to work out an agreement as to a time at which it may be considered.

If I have anything to say about it, I do not want any measures brought forward that may involve any prolonged controversy and may be sandwiched in ahead of emergency legislation which it is desired to have enacted at this session or within the next few days. Subject to that reservation I am ready to cooperate with the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. As the Senator from Michigan said a little while ago, I am a realist. While the Senator from Kentucky says he does not control, as the leader of this body to some extent he controls the motions to take up various matters of business. Therefore, I want his sympathetic consideration in that regard.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will have it, I am sure. I will guarantee that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota will yield to me to finish my statement, I have been sufficiently spanked about what I did so that we do not need to bother about that any more; but I am not so optimistic as are some other Senators. In my judgment, the antilynching bill will never pass on its merits, as it should. It will have to be attached as a rider to a bill which will give wings to it and make it possible to enact it into law. But, Mr. President, I am going to take our leader absolutely at his word, as I should, and as I naturally do. We are going to have an opportunity to test the sentiment of the Senate, I take it, within a reasonable time. We could find out in an hour or two on almost any day what would happen to the bill as an independent measure. I want it passed. I have been shocked, as others have, for years by what has happened to the colored people, and I know that the people in the sections of the country where these outrages have occurred have been shocked; and we ought to decide once and for all what is the sentiment of the United States Government regarding this particular matter.

I am satisfied to leave the matter here, and to trust to my leader, with the cooperation of the leader of the other side, to bring the bill to the floor of the Senate and have it dealt with on its merits; but before the adjournment of Congress we should see to it that the colored people of America are given the protection to which they are entitled.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know whether or not my colleague regarded my statement as a criticism of him. I certainly have too great regard for him personally and in every other way to suggest anything of that kind. He is my senior in this body. I said the unfortunate thing was that the vote which was taken defeated the legislation, and that in my opinion it was not a true reflection of the sentiment of the Senate, because the majority favor it. I desire to say further that in all I am doing in reference to this proposed legislation I am in constant contact with the great leaders in this country, both white and Negro, who are vitally interested in this measure, and whose guidance I have sought advancing its progress.

After the conclusion of Mr. NYE's speech,

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor, but I should like to have 3 or 4 minutes to say something in reference to the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. LODGE. I will be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will yield to me for a moment, at this time I desire to withdraw the amendment offered by me yesterday, which is now the pending amendment, as it is my purpose to modify it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee is withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move the amendment which I send to the desk, and after the Senator from Washington shall have concluded his remarks I should like to speak briefly on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 53, lines 24 and 25, it is proposed to strike out "in any State;"; on page 54, line 5, to strike out the comma and the words "in any State"; and on page 66, between lines 12 and 13, to insert the following new subsection:

(e) The United States Tariff Commission is authorized and directed (1) to compute for each foreign country the average annual volume of each class of goods which were produced, manufactured, mined, handled, or in any other manner worked on in such country and which were imported into the United States during the 5-year period immediately preceding the date of enactment of this act, and (2) to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the computations so made. Thereafter no goods of any class shall be allowed to be imported into the United States from any foreign country during any calendar year in excess of the average annual volume of that class of goods so computed and certified by the Commission unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the Labor Standards Board that the labor standards in such country which are applicable to the class of goods to which such computation applies are at least equal to the labor standards under which like or similar goods of that class are produced in the United States. The Commission and the Secretary of the Treasury are authorized, respectively, to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection, and the various agencies of the Government are authorized and directed to cooperate to the fullest practicable extent with the Commission and the Secretary of the Treasury in carrying out their functions under this subsection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to refer for a few moments to the concluding remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. Last week and for many weeks prior to that time we were told, and the people of the country were told, that "the first step" toward the advance of fascism, nazi-ism, and communism was the securing of control of the courts. It was interesting to me to hear the Senator from North Dakota in concluding his remarks, just a week after we had had it dinned into our ears that it was the control of the courts that was going to bring us to nazi-ism or fascism or communism, suggest that it is the control of the labor unions that is "the first step" and to have quoted to us again, "It can happen here."

I do not know how other Members of the Senate feel about it, but, so far as I am concerned, I am very tired of listening to arguments, the most specious arguments that have ever been made in debate in the history of this country, to the effect that the things which the present administration was doing, the things which the administration was attempting to do for the great mass of the people of the country were "the first steps" toward nazi-ism and fascism and communism.

I asked the Senator from North Dakota to tell us what labor union in czaristic Russia was seized as "the first step" toward sovietism. There was not any labor union under czaristic Russia that could be seized, and there was absolutely no relationship between the control of the labor unions in czaristic Russia and the advent of communism.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. NYE. First of all, I should like to say to the Senator that he will not find in my remarks made this afternoon anything resembling a charge that the present administration was fostering the nationalization of the labor forces, as he has just intimated. Certainly, it was not my purpose to make any such suggestion, if anything of the kind did creep into my remarks.

However, coming back to the czarist days and the revolution in Russia that came ultimately, the Senator will recall that the promise that appealed to the laborers was the promise that the factories would be for the laborers; the promise that appealed to the poor tenants on the farm, the peasants, was the land for the peasant. Whether they got it or not is quite aside from the question, but there was that appeal to the unity of a class of people that made a successful revolution.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The reason for the success of communism in Russia was the futility of the effort of Kerensky to break down the situation and the system that had been built up through the centuries by the Czars.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the Senator from Washington is conscious of the fact that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] has the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I asked the junior Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. LODGE. For 3 or 4 minutes. I do not think my main speech will occupy a much longer time than the Senator from Washington has already occupied.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, we hear much said about fascism in Italy, and many talk as if it was advanced step by step, as if there was some method of procedure. To hear such persons talk one would think that a system of government was developed upon the basis of a slide rule. The basis for the success of fascism in Italy was created during the time of the World War. The Italian people entered the war; they turned their backs upon a former alliance with Germany and Austria, and they entered into the World War on the side of the Allies in the hope that they were going to secure certain territory by so doing.

The seeds for the success of fascism were sown in the city of Paris in May 1918, when Edouard Benes prepared the paper organization of the little entente, which was set up under the guidance of the French Government. When President Wilson went over with his idea of self-determination of nations and Lloyd George and others decided to accept his idea by not giving Italy what it wanted, but to let the little entente have their self-determination of nations at the expense of secret promise to Italy, the Italian people realized that their war hopes and aspirations had been frustrated, that they could not succeed, that they had impoverished the country, and Mussolini came along offering them a hope for the solution of their problems.

Mark Sullivan, David Lawrence, Dorothy Thompson, and other newspaper writers talk about the gradual encroachment of fascism in Italy. Fascism came there because of the refusal of the Allies on the Treaty of Versailles to carry out the undisclosed agreement which the Allies had with Italy prior to the time the United States entered the war.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. NYE. When the RECORD appears in the morning I want the Senator to read the concluding paragraph of a letter from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, which was submitted for publication in the RECORD this afternoon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. When William Green sees these ghosts, I have the same sort of criticism of him.

Mr. President, in his reference to the dangers with which the country was confronted as a result of the activities of the National Labor Relations Board, and the possibility of the labor unions of the country becoming controlled, the Senator from North Dakota referred not merely to communism and fascism but also to nazi-ism. I think it might be well for the sake of the RECORD—just as I tried to put in certain statements for the sake of the RECORD in reference to the other two—to consider for a moment the reason why nazi-ism succeeded in Germany. Certainly, it was not because of any gradual step-by-step encroachment such as these columnists apparently have led some of the Members of this body to believe.

As a result of the Treaty of Versailles, Germany had her colonies taken from her. She was surrounded on all sides by governments not only unfriendly but bitterly antagonistic. Her people had placed upon them, as a result of the war, an enormous debt. It was under those conditions that an effort was made to establish a democracy in Germany.

The conditions under which that republic or that democracy was established were absolutely impossible. It has always been my belief that there was only a very short period of time during the life of the German Republic in which the Republic had even a ghost of a chance. I have always felt that after Locarno, if Von Stresemann had lived and been able to develop throughout the world the confidence which he was able to establish among the representatives of other nations at Locarno there might have been a chance for the German Republic; but with the death of Von Stresemann, in my opinion, the chance of the Republic of Germany died.

Here was an ambitious people, a people that had developed themselves individually, so far as their abilities were concerned, probably to a greater height than any other people in the world. They found themselves bound and shackled by the Treaty of Versailles. They had no outlet for their goods. They had no colonies. They had a debt which bore down upon them and almost destroyed them; and the confidence of the German people was completely and totally destroyed.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not true that the dictatorships of communism, fascism, and nazi-ism all grew out of a situation in which the people felt themselves oppressed, and that their government was utterly helpless and powerless to help them, and that they traded their civil liberties for what they thought was a social advance?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me answer the Senator in this way:

During the past few months, as I have read these columns and as I have listened to some quotations on the floor of the Senate, perhaps not verbatim quotations but nevertheless quotations in substance from David Lawrence and Mark Sullivan and Frank Kent and Dorothy Thompson, I have been impressed with the fact that apparently these columnists do not know that there was a single day of recorded history prior to the day Mussolini made his march upon Rome. We never hear them talking about any republics that were destroyed prior to that time. We never hear them talking about any dictatorships which succeeded republics prior to that time. I should like respectfully to suggest to these columnists and to Members of this body who see fit to follow the preachings of these columns that they realize that there were several years of recorded history prior to that time. I should like to have them brush up on their Greek history for a little time, and see the reasons for the destruction of democracy there, and for the success of those who did succeed in destroying democratic institutions and democratic principles.

Throughout the ages, democracies have been destroyed because of the feeling of futility upon the part of the people who went to make up those democracies. So long as a people in a country living under a democracy have faith in their government and faith in the ability of that government to solve the problems with which they are confronted, just so long will that democracy remain. But if there is instilled in the hearts of a people a feeling that their government is futile to solve their problems, an opportunity is provided for a dictator to march down the main street on a black horse and take charge; and that is precisely what happened that Sunday night when Lenin and Trotsky rode on that train into the Russian capital and took charge. It was because of the feeling of futility of the Russian people, their lack of faith in Kerensky, their realization that the revolutionary government which they had established could not solve their problems.

I think the most dramatic incident in all history was that Sunday night when Lenin and Trotsky appeared and took charge. Why were they able to take charge? Because of the futility of the Kerensky semi-democratic government. Why was it possible for Mussolini to succeed in his march on Rome? Because of the feeling of futility upon the part of the Italian people. Why was it possible for Hitler to take charge in Germany? Because of the feeling of futility upon the part of the German people. Futility has ever been the nemesis of democracy. More abysmal ignorance has been displayed upon this question in the columns of the newspapers and magazines of this country during the past year than upon any other public question since I have been old enough to read.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator ever see any red flags of communism carried in this country?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I never have yet.

Mr. MINTON. The only time I ever saw one was in the Hoover administration, when people were starving to death by the thousands, and they felt in this country the frustration about which the Senator has been talking.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I have the feeling that we came closer to fascism, nazi-ism, or communism during the last 6 months of the administration of Herbert Hoover than we had ever come toward a dictatorship in this country during the history of the Nation. As the Senator from Indiana has pointed out, it was because of the fact that the American people at that time had in their hearts and their minds the same feeling of fear, the same feeling of futility that led the peoples of these other nations to give up their liberties in order to get economic security.

Mr. President, down through the ages mankind has sought two goals. One of them has been political liberty. The other has been economic security. The difficulty confronting those who put forth the doctrine today that none of these things must be done because they may destroy our political liberties is an absolute lack of realization upon their part that the reason why men have sought political liberties, why they have sought the right of freedom of speech, why they have sought the right of freedom of religion, why they have sought the right of freedom of the press was not for the purpose of securing those rights in themselves. It does not do anybody any good merely to have the right to make a speech, or merely to have the right to read a free newspaper, or merely to have the right to go to a church of his own choice, if at home his family is starving to death. Every organized government results in the relinquishment of a certain amount of liberty. When the original patriarchal or matriarchal tribes were formed, the individuals who agreed to the formation of those tribes gave up some of their liberties.

They had to conform to certain rules and regulations. They were willing to give up their absolute freedom because of the fact that the tribe would protect them from some poacher over at the right, or in front, or in the rear of them. They did it for protection against their enemies, and they were willing to do it.

These people who now claim that we have been confronted with the danger of dictatorship, who apparently never read any history prior to the march of Mussolini on Rome, who fail to consider the history of democracies throughout the world, should realize that so long as the American people have faith in their Government, so long as this Government of ours is able to perform its obligation to its people, so long as this democracy of ours is able to function, we do not need to fear dictatorship; but if we turn it back to the administration of men of a political and economic philosophy like that of Herbert Hoover, then we will face the same difficulties and the same dangers we faced during the last 6 months of his administration.

It was interesting to me, Mr. President, after we went through the experience of a few weeks ago, when we were constantly told that the first step toward dictatorship was control of the courts, to come here this afternoon and find now that the first step toward dictatorship is control of labor unions.

A step toward dictatorship which the American people never can permit to be taken is the failure of its Government to perform its obligations to the American people, to protect them in their rights, their privileges, and their liberties, but with the appreciation and understanding that the protection of those rights, privileges, and liberties is not an end in itself. The goal of economic security is and always has been the goal which mankind has sought.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my remarks will take only a few minutes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I apologize to the Senator from Massachusetts for the interruption, and thank him for yielding to me generously, as he has.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment which attempts to protect American workers against competition of substandard goods made in foreign countries. My amendment provides that the average imports of all classes of goods for the past 5 years shall be determined, and then no imports above that amount shall be allowed into the United States unless such imports are manufactured under conditions equivalent to those set up in the bill. In other words, the amendment proposes the mildest and, I think, the most practical system I have yet seen advanced in the effort to afford protection against substandard foreign competition.

This is the thought, as I think was generally known, which was uppermost in the mind of the late Representative Connery, of Massachusetts, who was chairman of the House Committee on Labor and who had prepared an amendment to the same effect. It is advocated in a communication which I think every Senator has received today from America's Wage Earners' Protective Conference, and I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of that letter as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA'S WAGE EARNERS' PROTECTIVE CONFERENCE,
Washington, July 27, 1937.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: The following amendment to the Black wage and hour bill, S. 2475, is requested on behalf of the organized workers affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, the products of which workers compete in the American market with the products of workers in foreign countries, which foreign workers, in many cases, are employed under what may well be defined as substandard labor conditions, as defined in the pending wage and hour bill.

This amendment is supported also by the National Grange, the National Cooperative Council, National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, Farmers' Union Federations, represented by E. E. Kennedy, as well as other farm and labor groups.

Page 65: Substitute the following in place of section 8:

"SEC. 8. The Labor Standards Board shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of those substandard labor conditions which have been defined as oppressive, and the Secretary of the Treasury is thereafter directed to refuse or deny entry to goods, wares, or merchandise produced under such substandard labor conditions, which goods, wares, or merchandise are comparable to or competitive with similar goods, wares, or merchandise produced in the United States under fair labor conditions as herein defined. In the event of any complaint or dispute arising as to whether such goods, wares, or merchandise seeking entry were produced under substandard labor conditions, as herein defined, the Labor Standards Board shall make a thorough investigation, and the decision of said board shall be conclusive, shall be in writing, and shall be a matter of public record and open to public inspection."

We do not believe that permitting the distribution of foreign-made goods, produced under substandard labor conditions, in the American market in competition with comparable or competitive American-made goods, produced under fair labor standards, will, in any way, enlarge the employment opportunities of American workers.

As illustrated herein, the protection suggested in section 8, as at present written, based on actual experience with similar so-called protection contained in the N. R. A., affords no protection at all, as shown below.

ANALYSIS OF TARIFF PROVISION OF WAGE AND HOUR BILL AS REPORTED TO THE SENATE

The wage and hour bill, as reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, provides, in section 8, that the United States Tariff Commission, under one of five stipulations, shall investigate the differences resulting from the operation of the act in the costs of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article, with a view to determining whether or not an increase should be made in the duty upon such foreign article for the purpose of equalizing such differences. All provisions of law applicable with respect to investigations under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, are to be applicable to investigations under this section.

That this provision is little more than an empty gesture follows from the long delays which have always been involved in the application of the flexible tariff provisions of the tariff law. Section 336 requires prolonged investigations of both foreign and domestic costs of production for comparative purposes. The time required for final action by the President, after the filing of a complaint, is usually well over a year. In most instance foreign costs are not available, and then foreign invoices must be consulted. The accuracy of foreign invoices as evidence of foreign cost is very questionable, especially in view of foreign-trade manipulation by various nations during the past few years, notably Germany, Russia, Italy, and Japan.

Therefore, to rely on section 336 of the tariff act for relief against foreign competition arising as the result of increased wages brought about by the wage and hour bill, is to rely on a most unsatisfactory remedy.

Under the National Industrial Recovery Act, section 3 (e) provided for tariff increases when an industry, because of higher costs arising from shorter hours and higher wages, was menaced by foreign competition. That section was administered by a special division set up under the N. R. A. for the purpose. From July 1933 to May 27, 1935, when the act was invalidated by the Supreme Court, 56 formal complaints and some 220 informal complaints were lodged with the division. The informal complaints were those (to quote from the official report of the division charged with the administration of sec. 3 (e)) "with respect to which the limited data available either indicated clearly that no basis for action existed, or were entirely insufficient to establish a prima-facie case for action." In other words, these complaints were not followed out but dismissed.

The formal complaints "were those with respect to which sufficient information was submitted or available to indicate existence of problems or competition which appeared to justify a preliminary investigation."

Of the 56 formal complaints only 6 received relief by executive action. The commodities covered by these cases were: (1) cotton oriental rugs, (2) cotton rugs, (3) matches, (4) wood-cased lead pencils, (5) red cedar shingles, and (6) rice. The number of employees in the industries involved in the investigations were: In cases one and two combined, 767; in case 3 (matches), 3,722 (but only 800 in the portion of the industry affected); in case 4 (pencils), 2,800 (but only 700 in the portion of the industry affected); in case 5 (cedar shingles), 3,900; in case 6 (rice), 1,636 (1,468 in the portion affected).

As for the total number of employees in the industries covered by the 56 formal complaints only 127,000 out of 549,000 were in that part of the industries affected by the investigation of foreign competition.

When the N. R. A. was invalidated, nearly 2 years after the division administering section 3 (e) was established, 30 of the 56 cases were still pending. Five were dismissed by the Tariff Commission after investigation; 7 were dismissed without investigation. Eight complaints were withdrawn by complainants after preliminary investigation. As already stated, executive relief was granted in only 6 of the cases, or 3 percent. Only 7,500 employees were covered by the portion of the industries affected.

In view of the results obtained, affecting fewer than one-tenth of 1 percent of those employed in industry, it is interesting to read from the division's report of March 1936: "That the import problem represented by the formal complaints under section 3 (e) affected practically every important branch of American industry is indicated by the fact that the complainant industries represented every major industrial group listed in the census of manufacturers. The problems were most serious in those groups, such as textiles and miscellaneous industries, where the bulk of the commodities necessitated a large amount of fabrication or processing."

This admission throws a revealing light on the relief actually given in the six cases where executive action was taken: Industries in which the number of affected employees numbered 7,500. Yet, the formal complaints covered industries representing "every major industrial group listed in the census of manufactures."

Inasmuch as section 3 (e) provided for special treatment of tariff complaints whereas the wage and hours bill would simply throw them into the Tariff Commission, a still more delaying and evasive program could be expected. For that reason, the inclusion of that provision in the bill, is merely an empty gesture.

Several foreign countries protect their workers against unfair foreign competition of the products from low-wage countries—products produced under substandard labor conditions—by requiring that duty be paid on the basis of what the imported goods are worth after landing in said countries, including all charges. Thus the United Kingdom—Great Britain—lays down the following requirement on all goods seeking a market in that country:

"The value of any imported goods for the purpose of the act shall be taken to be the price which an importer would give for the goods if the goods were to be delivered to him, freight and insurance paid, in bond, at the port of importation, and the duty shall be paid on that value as fixed by the commission."

Even Japan requires that duties be levied according to the value of the article on arrival at the time of importation.

Canada requires that the fair market value of imports shall in no case be lower than the selling price thereof to jobbers or wholesalers generally at the time of shipment direct to Canada.

Belgium requires that the value may be not less than the normal wholesale value of similar goods on the Belgian market at the time of importation, less the duty they pay on importation.

Austria has a similar clause in her tariff law. Australia makes the current domestic value of (imported) goods or the price actually paid for them (imported goods), whichever is higher.

In other words, these countries protect their markets and assure their workers opportunities of employment and eliminate unfair competition of goods produced under what they might term substandard labor conditions, by assessing customs duties on the domestic value of similar goods, or on the landed cost, including duties, whereas we accept foreign invoices as to the value of these foreign-produced goods.

We respectfully request your active support in securing the adoption of the amendment herein suggested to the wage and hour bill in the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

M. J. FLYNN, Executive Secretary.

Mr. LODGE. I have received a letter from John F. Gatelee, president of the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor, which reads as follows:

On behalf of organized labor in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I am writing to request that you use your influence and vote to have a provision included in the Black-Connery wage and hour bill that will effect the elimination of sweatshop products in interstate commerce, whether such products are produced in the United States or elsewhere. This pertains particularly to manufactured articles and the processing of materials by certain competing countries, which are able to land these foreign-made products on the shores of this country at a price less than the actual manufacturing cost to produce the same in the United States.

We believe a proper check of this ruinous substandard competition can be produced by a proper provision within the Black-Connery wage and hour bill.

Trusting for your cooperation in this matter and assuring you of our appreciation of your efforts, we are,

Sincerely and respectfully yours,

JOHN F. GATELEE,
President, Massachusetts State Federation of Labor.

I believe this is such a self-evident matter that it is not necessary for me to take the time of the Senate to give elaborate statistics and facts. Every State in the Union today has industries, and every State, therefore, knows the importance of having its industries protected against substandard competition from abroad.

The bill now before us, on page 50, defines interstate commerce as meaning "trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or from any State to any place outside thereof." I do not quarrel with that language at all, but it is noteworthy that the way the bill now stands, substandard products made in Massachusetts may not be sold in Alabama, but substandard products made in Czechoslovakia or in Japan may be sold in Alabama or any other State.

We have read in newspapers about the situation; every now and then we read stories about little girls 14 or 15 years old working at night in the textile mills of Japan for a few cents an hour. The choice confronting us is perfectly obvious. Either we can reduce American wages to conform to such a level—and to that I am unalterably opposed, as I am sure every other Senator is—or else we can use the great power of the United States Government to enact a law which will stop that kind of thing. That is what I favor and that is what I am advocating in offering the amendment.

We cannot go in two different directions at once. At the present time through one agency of the Government attempts are being made to eliminate tariff barriers, and through other governmental activities attempts are being made, which I think are praiseworthy, to raise wages and raise the American standard of living. We cannot do both. We have to choose the path which we want America's destiny to follow. In my judgment, the amendment which I have offered is indispensable to the success of the bill and the achievement of the ends which the bill seeks to attain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to offer for printing in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter written by the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], on the bill now before us. The letter appeared in last Sunday's New York Times. I offer it for publication in the RECORD because of its thorough discussion of the bill. I disagree with some of the views expressed, but it is a most excellent presentation of the measure which is before the Senate at this time.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 25, 1937]

WIDE BENEFIT SEEN IN WAGE AND HOUR LEGISLATION—PENDING MEASURE IS VIEWED AS A MODEST BEGINNING OF A BROAD EFFORT TO INCREASE PRODUCTION AND OUR CAPACITY TO CONSUME THE PRODUCTS

The proposed Federal minimum wage and maximum hour legislation is frequently referred to as labor legislation. It is intended to, and I am confident that it will, benefit workers in industry. But it is intended to, and I am confident that it will, benefit not only the industrial workers but the whole of American industry and agriculture.

In years past the rapid natural growth of our population, the influx of immigrants, and the availability of new lands constantly opened new opportunities for employment and new and enlarged markets for the products of our farms and factories. But in more recent years the natural growth of our population has slackened, the flow of immigration has abated, the frontier of new lands has disappeared. These changed conditions have made it much more difficult than in times past for workers to find a market for their labor and much more difficult for industry and agriculture to find a market for their products. Tariff barriers and other complications have whittled away our foreign customers, making us more and more dependent on domestic trade.

TECHNOLOGY A FACTOR

These conditions have also been aggravated and accentuated by recent developments in technology which have led to the introduction of machines which enable 1 worker to do the work previously done by 10 and sometimes 100. Workers displaced by machines have found it increasingly difficult to find employment. Deprived of purchasing power, the unemployed are not able to buy the products of farm and factory which they need, and they have even become a serious charge upon the community.

With the frontier gone, with the population ceasing to expand, with millions unemployed, the markets for industry and agriculture can be stabilized and strengthened only if we find ways and means of utilizing the productivity of industry and agriculture to raise the standard of living of our existing population. As President Roosevelt has said, "We cannot achieve lasting prosperity or political stability in this country so long as one-third of our people earn less than a decent living and many millions are unable to find work in private industry and business." Having conquered and overcome our geographic frontiers, we must extend the frontiers of social progress. A higher standard of living for the average man and woman is certainly desirable for humanitarian reasons; it is necessary for the future of American agriculture and American industry.

THE SUBMERGED THIRD

When business is good for those whose incomes come within the upper income-tax brackets there are some who forget that one-third of our population is ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed. There are some who are even irked by being constantly reminded of these unpleasant facts. It is important, however, that we face the facts without flinching. Over 42 percent of our American families have an annual income of less than $1,500 a year. Actually more than one-fifth of the families in rich America are forced to eke out a bare existence on less than $1,000 a year.

The budgets for such families will allow them little else than an unbalanced diet of potatoes, bread, and pork. For such city families green vegetables and fresh fruit are luxuries rarely to be had and even an adequate supply of milk for their children is too costly to be obtained. The meager incomes of such families afford the head of the family only one new suit of clothes in 3 years and a new overcoat only once every 5 years. Their budget cannot stand more than $20 a month for rent. Only one out of three families in typical American cities can afford gas or electricity for cooking, and electric refrigeration and steam heat are luxuries which few can afford. As the bill reported out by the Senate Committee on Education and Agriculture recites, some adult workers are earning as little as $5 a week and some adult workers are obliged to work as long as 80 or more hours a week.

BUYING POWER LAGS

As President Roosevelt stated in his recent message to the Congress, recommending wage and hour legislation: "Today you and I are pledged to reduce the lag in the purchasing power of industrial workers and to stabilize the markets for the farmers' products. The two go hand in hand. Each depends for its effectiveness on the other. Both working simultaneously will open new outlets for productive capital. Our Nation, so richly endowed with natural resources and with a capable and industrious population, should be able to devise ways and means of insuring to all our able-bodied working men and women a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. A self-supporting and self-respecting democracy can plead no justification for the existence of child labor, no economic reason for chiseling workers' wages or stretching workers' hours."

The proposed wage and hour legislation is but a modest beginning of a much-needed effort to increase America's capacity to consume. Such increase means increased production.

The proposed legislation recognizes the practical necessities which make it impossible to prescribe for all goods which enter into interstate commerce any single minimum fair-wage standard or any single maximum workweek standard. We all know that it is impractical to ignore the difference and diversities among industries and localities. We all know that uniform national standards cannot suddenly be imposed upon many and diverse industries without causing industrial dislocations which might seriously curtail the earning power of the workers and their opportunities for employment.

REALISTIC LEGISLATION

The proposed legislation deals realistically with the tough realities of American industry. It states clearly and definitely the objectives to be achieved and the standards to be applied. But it leaves the application of these standards and the progressive realization of these objectives to an administrative board, because that is the only practically feasible way that such legislation can be enacted and administered. As Justice Cardozo has stated, "the industries of this country are too many and diverse to make it possible for Congress in respect to matters such as these to legislate directly with adequate appreciation of varying conditions" (Schechter case, 295 U. S. 495, 552).

The proposed bill contemplates that the different parts of the United States shall be recognized in the appointment of these members, so that the board shall be familiar with the industrial, commercial, and agricultural problems of all parts of the United States. The board is given a flexible power to fix minimum wages industry by industry, craft by craft, locality by locality, after separate investigations and hearings and according to certain directions or "standards" written in the bill. Those standards require, for instance, that in determining what shall be a minimum wage the board shall take into consideration the cost of living; the wages established for work of a like nature by collective labor agreement; the wages paid for work of a like character by employers who voluntarily pay a fair wage; and facts which would influence a court in determining a fair and reasonable value of services rendered. There are similar standards for the establishment of the basic workweek.

The proposed legislation is radically different from the old N. R. A. First, it applies only to interstate industries and those local industries which substantially and materially compete with interstate industries. It does not affect local service trades or local retail stores or agricultural workers.

Second, it deals with labor conditions only—it has nothing to do with fixing prices, with trade practices, with production controls, and with monopolies.

Third, all the wage and hour regulation is done by the Government labor board itself—not by private code authorities in the industry. Under the bill one group in an industry cannot gang up on the others or run up expenses on the others. The Government labor board must consult industry and be guided by the industrial facts, but a dominant group in private industry is given no right to write its own ticket.

SCOPE LIMITED

Fourth, as reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, the jurisdiction of the bill has stopped short at the equivalent of an annual worker's income of $800. The jurisdiction of the bill as so reported also stops short when hours are reduced to 40 per week. But the bill makes it clear that the attainment of shorter hours and higher wages by individual or collective bargaining is not to be obstructed.

Fifth, the new labor board is instructed under the bill to put the new labor regulations into effect slowly enough so that industry will not be dislocated and men thrown out of work in the process and to put them into effect in such a way that they will help rather than supplant collective bargaining.

How many workers are affected? Evidence given at the hearings on the bill indicated that something over 3,000,000 people are getting less than 40 cents an hour, and these 3,000,000 would be directly affected by the bill. The evidence also indicated that at least 6,000,000 people are now working more than 40 hours a week in industries affected by the bill, and these 6,000,000 would stand to benefit directly from its provisions.

The net effect of this bill for labor as a whole will be incalculable. By shortening hours it will create new jobs in the unskilled categories for millions of our unskilled unemployed. By setting up better standards of wages in the interstate industries directly affected, it will indirectly create competition for labor which should affect wages in all industries where the labor is interchangeable between interstate and local industries. The Federal standards will also stimulate State legislation for local industry, and bring about better labor standards for all workers. And finally the bill will underpin the whole wage structure, by law, at a point from which collective bargaining can build more surely and which will be a bulwark against the collapse of higher wages in the event of a business recession.

BROADLY BENEFICIAL

With comparatively little direct administrative application to industry, therefore, the effect of the bill and of action by the board will have indirect repercussions all through the labor market to the great benefit of all workers now employed—to the great benefit of millions on relief who want private employment—to the great benefit of the purchasing power supporting industry and agriculture throughout the country on which the permanence of all employment depends—to the great benefit of the Budget and the taxpayers of the United States; to the greater benefit of the health, comfort, and happiness of overworked and underpaid employees.

There are some who loudly cry that reasonable working hours and fair wages will decrease production and result in an economy of scarcity. I deny this. If all our factories were running to capacity and if every able-bodied worker in the land were now working to produce as much as he could, and the goods produced were being distributed as rapidly and as equitably as possible, there might be some basis for this theory. But when for years many millions of our working population have been unemployed and their capacity to work and produce has been wasted, and even those lucky ones at work get wages too low to enable them to buy the things which they would like to have and which the unemployed could produce, there is obviously some catch in a theory that tells us higher wages and shorter hours will hurt our working population.

That theory ignores the two most important facts of our business life—the growing displacement of industrial workers by machines and the growing dependence of a cash-crop agricultural population upon the purchasing power of the industrial worker. We are suffering today not from a scarcity of goods, not from a scarcity of factories, not from a scarcity of labor, but a scarcity of purchasing power among the underpaid and unemployed for the products of farm and factory.

Specialization and subdivision of labor have enormously increased man's ability to produce. It is estimated that individual productivity—an individual's ability to produce if given the chance—has increased more than 70 percent in the last 25 years. Yet there has been no comparable increase in the standard of living of the average man. Not only has this great increase in productivity brought no economy of abundance to the average man, but it has thrown millions of workers out of work. And, what is even more disturbing, this great increase in productivity has been accompanied by a growing sense of insecurity among all our people, employers, workers, and farmers alike. Most Americans, who only a few short years ago prided themselves on their confidence, enterprise and optimism, now reluctantly confess a great fear for the future. All of us share insecurity if not poverty in the midst of plenty.

EAGER TO BUY

Our present economy of scarcity is not due, as I have pointed out, to a scarcity of goods, or a scarcity of labor, but to a scarcity of purchasing power among the farmers and the underpaid and the unemployed industrial workers. There are plenty of workers now unemployed willing and anxious to produce more goods from farm and factory. The difficulty is that there are not enough workers who have the money to purchase the things they need. The absence of purchasers able to buy American goods has brought us to a curiously unstable condition—with great prosperity at the top, millions of unemployed at the bottom, and a tax burden for the support of the purchasing power of those unemployed which can permanently threaten the Budget.

We have been gradually, but all too slowly, reducing hours and raising the real standard of living of our lowest-paid workers for years. But if we would keep pace with the changes which the improvement of machines is now making upon the balance of our economic system, upon the number of men who can find work in the city which permits them to buy the surplus on the farms, farmers' earnings, and workers' wages must be sufficient to enable them to buy the output of our economic system.

THE MATTER OF COST

There is no reason why the price of goods, commodities, and services should rise in a vicious circle merely because the poorest paid wage earner gets part of the benefit of a machine civilization in increased leisure and a fair return for his work. The wages of the lower-paid ranks of labor are becoming less and less important in the final cost of the machine-made product as compared with the return on the capital represented by the machine. Labor costs do not average more than 25 percent of the costs of the things we buy.

While no law proposes such a result if wages were doubled, the cost of living would not at most experience an average rise of more than 25 percent, and the workers with their wages doubled would be able to buy three-fourths as much again of the products of farms and factories as they are now able to buy. In fact, however, increased efficiency and greater mass production would partially offset the rising cost of labor. And it should be remembered that doubling the labor costs of those particular producers who are chiselers and undercutters would not by any manner of means double the labor costs of all producers.

ECONOMIC THEORIES

Economic theories are sound only when they work. In the last 4 years a small group, both powerful and noisy, has insisted that everything that worked was theoretically unsound. We are wisely beginning to trust our own common sense rather than the charts and tables of that group. That common sense tells us that unless we solve the practical and moral problem of unemployment—unless we find ways to create jobs in private industry for those now supported against their will out of the Public Treasury—our economic problems will steadily grow worse for farmer, for city dweller, for laborer, and employer alike.

That common sense also tells us that in addition to improving the health and happiness of the worker, it will help create those jobs and supply necessary purchasing power, if we shorten unreasonably long hours and if we raise the income of the whole lower-income third of our industrial and farm population to an American standard of living. And the common sense of the farmer tells him that his interests, here as elsewhere, lie with the welfare of the farmer's best customer and natural economic ally—the workingman of the city.

Federal wage and hour regulation is not the complete answer to the unemployment problem, nor to the problem of keeping our economy in balance. But it is a part, and a large part, of the answer—and a part that we can no longer delay putting in operation.

HUGO L. BLACK.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23, 1937.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no desire to hold the floor. I simply announce that when the discussion of the amendment offered by the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] shall have been concluded, I desire a yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment now pending and upon which we are about to vote is the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BORAH. I am aware, of course, that the Senator from Massachusetts spoke on it, but I think it has not been debated by other Senators. It provides:

> The United States Tariff Commission is authorized and directed (1) to compute for each foreign country the average annual volume of each class of goods which were produced, manufactured, mined, handled, or in any other manner worked on in such country, and which were imported into the United States during the 5-year period immediately preceding the enactment of this act; and (2) to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the computations so made. Thereafter no goods of any class shall be allowed to be imported into the United States from any foreign country during any calendar year in excess of the average annual volume of that class of goods so computed and certified by the Commission unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the Labor Standards Board that the labor standards in such countries which are applicable to the class of goods to which such computation applies are at least equal to the labor standards under which like or similar goods of that class are produced in the United States.

Is this amendment satisfactory to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. BLACK. It is not. I am very much against it.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that I do think there is a sound principle involved in it, but the question which occurs to me is how would it be possible for us to know that the law had been complied with in the other countries. Undoubtedly, as the able Senator from Massachusetts has said, we ought to have protection against substandard conditions in other countries; but with the duties already provided for the board, I doubt whether it could possibly ascertain that the law had been complied with in other countries. I wish it could be possible for us to know that the law had been complied with.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. My thought in connection with the amendment was that before any imports were permitted to come into the United States the party responsible for the imports would certify to the board that the products had been manufactured under the conditions specified.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely what I had in mind. I could mention countries whose certificate I would not regard as of any importance whatever.

Mr. LODGE. I can quite understand that point of view. I realize that a great deal of work would be required of members of the board, but if by any chance the amendment should be adopted, I believe we could provide the necessary personnel and the necessary facilities to insure that the policy would be carried into effect.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, each time a bill has been presented relating to wages and hours this very question has arisen. Of course, without any criticism of anyone who has ever offered such a proposal, it has always been true that on each occasion the Manufacturers' Association, which is always against every piece of progressive legislation of this type, has initiated movements of this kind, and backing them up have been Mr. Matthew Woll and an association with which he is connected.

It is known to all who are familiar with the history of the first effort to pass a working hours bill that the bill was defeated on account of a provision of this kind being tacked on in the House committee. There is a provision in the bill already which applies the regular tariff law and the flexible-tariff provision of the law to the operation of the economic system in this country. We now have a flexible-tariff provision which relates to all imports into this country. Under that flexible-tariff provision, upon a hearing before the Tariff Commission and a report by the Tariff Commission, the proper action can be taken by the President of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that the flexible-tariff provision applied to all imports. Is it not true that it does not apply to a third of the imports, which are on the free list?

Mr. BLACK. It applies to those imports which are in such a substantial amount as to cause Congress to believe there should be any tariff at all, and I think every person who is familiar with the tariff and with the pressure that is put on the Members of Congress every time a tariff measure is brought up is well aware of the fact that there is nothing a person can use in life or that can be used after his death that has not already had a tariff put on it if the imports represent as much as one one-thousandth of 1 percent of the domestic production.

Mr. BORAH. And may I say that nobody undertakes to take the tariff off?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct; the tariffs rarely are taken off. When they start, they keep going up.

Let me state what the proposed amendment would do. There may be some who desire to enact such a provision into law, though I cannot believe there are many. This amendment would say in effect, "We are going to stop any importations of goods into this country in excess of the average for the last 5 years." It would further say that none of those goods may come from any other country in the world unless that country adopts the minimum wage which we adopt and unless it adopts the maximum hours which we conclude fit this Nation.

We must remember it is a truism that a nation does not export unless it imports. Trade is not all on one side. It is a beautiful and wonderful theory to assume that we may export all we want to sell abroad and import nothing, but as a matter of fact the theory does not work out in practice. If we desire to put into effect an embargo which would prohibit the importation of any goods in the future, the proper thing to do would be to put an embargo on all goods coming into the United States. It amounts practically to an embargo when we attempt to enact legislation which says that no country in the world may ship any goods into the United States unless it works its labor under the identical wage standards that we do.

Mr. President, at the instance of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], who was very much interested in this particular subject, and who desired to see that no injustice should be done to the people of the United States in connection with imports or exports, the committee adopted the amendment which he offered.

That amendment applies the provisions of the flexible-tariff law. I note that a substitute for that particular amendment has been offered by the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. His amendment, however, apparently is based, as I read it hurriedly, upon the same principle as the regulation which is proposed in the bill.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], however, departs completely from the time-honored method of attempting to provide protection; and, instead of considering the amount imported from year to year and all the other elements which are provided in the flexible-tariff provision, it freezes imports at the average of importations for the past 5 years. Are we ready to legislate now in such a way as to make it against the law to import into this country any more goods of a certain type than the average of our importations for the past 5 years? If so, why not go the full length and make it against the law to export any automobiles? Why not make it against the law to export any cotton? Why not make it against the law to export any wheat? Why stop with any one thing?

I say it would be just as reasonable to attempt to stop importations of all types, or to freeze them on the basis of what they have been for the past 5 years, as it would be to attempt to freeze exports.

Mr. President, this is a very vital question in connection with this bill. The committee, desiring to take such action as would assure that no injustice should be done to American industry by the bill, if it should be enacted, and realizing that it only touches the lowest-paid labor so far as wages are concerned, adopted the suggestion of the junior Senator from Louisiana, and provided what I believe to be a fair amendment to the flexible-tariff law. In other words, after the enactment of this bill, upon a request made to the Tariff Commission, in accordance with the conditions that have previously existed and under some additional contingencies, the Tariff Commission is to hold a hearing. It is to take into consideration not merely all imports for the past 5 years, but all the elements that enter and should enter into consideration as to whether or not there should be any further tariff upon imports.

Are we to place ourselves in a situation where the law absolutely freezes the status quo in an industry, irrespective of the fact that it might be shown to be wholly and completely controlled by monopoly, irrespective of the fact that a very small percentage of the product involved might be imported into this country?

Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senate will not vote to hang onto this measure a tariff provision which goes far beyond anything that has ever been suggested, and which in practical effect amounts to an embargo, a freezing of the status quo with reference to imports; a freezing, if we follow it to its logical conclusion, of the trade that we have with the other countries of the world.

I trust that the Senate will permit to remain in the bill the amendment which has already been placed in it at the suggestion of the junior Senator from Louisiana, who was on the alert from the very beginning with reference to this particular point and that the pending amendment may be rejected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the distinguished Senator from Alabama was not in the Chamber when I began my remarks. I made it clear at that time that I was offering the amendment at the instance of the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I may state that I received one letter from a labor organization in Alabama making the same request. I wrote them and asked them who had urged them to make the request. I told them of experiences we had previously had in being urged to accept such amendments. It was found that the suggestion had been made to the labor organization by an organization in Washington, of which Mr. Matthew Woll is a member. I make no criticism of Mr. Matthew Woll, but we all know that in each instance where tariff bills have been considered he has been the sponsor of the very high tariff measures, including the Smoot-Hawley-Grundy tariff bill, as I recall.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator for that information; but my experience with the State federation of labor in Massachusetts has convinced me that they can do their own thinking, and they always have. I also understand that an amendment which is much more drastic than mine is contained in the House bill, and that the late Representative Connery, whose constituent I was for many years, had an amendment in the House counterpart of this bill which would have stopped all imports. So that is why I said my amendment was mild.

The Senator says the amendment would freeze imports. It would freeze imports, because it seemed to me it would be better to freeze them at the 5-year average than to destroy them.

I also should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the tariff provision now contained in this bill, to my mind, does not give definite protection. It provides that the Tariff Commission shall investigate the differences with a view to determining whether or not an increase of the tariff should be made. Of course, it is self-evident that if we are to have foreign trade, if we are to export, we must import. I would be the last person to deny that such is the fact. That is why the amendment protects our import trade to the extent that it does. But is it not equally self-evident that if we raise the cost of living and raise prices and raise standards, which we are in favor of doing, and do not protect ourselves against substandard foreign competition, we shall destroy our own standards?

That is the issue I should like to leave with the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I stated a few moments ago that I desired a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to the recommendation of the National Grange, the national cooperative organizations, and several kindred farm organizations, with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I have a letter which I received during the middle of the afternoon from these organizations commending, not the amendment by name, but language similar to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. So we certainly have the backing of the farmers of the country as well as many of the labor organizations.

Mr. President, upon the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	King	Pope
Andrews	Connally	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Davis	Lee	Schwartz
Bailey	Dieterich	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Donahey	Lonergan	Sheppard
Berry	Ellender	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bilbo	Frazier	McCarran	Smathers
Black	George	McGill	Smith
Bone	Gerry	McKellar	Steiwer
Borah	Gillette	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Brown, N. H.	Guffey	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Hale	Moore	Truman
Bulow	Harrison	Murray	Vandenberg
Burke	Hatch	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrd	Hitchcock	Nye	Walsh
Byrnes	Holt	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Capper	Hughes	Overton	White
Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I appreciate that was the order made just before the absence of a quorum was suggested, but at this time I suggest, before the yeas and nays are called, that the amendment be reported from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will again report the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee it is proposed, on page 53, lines 24 and 25, to strike out "in any State;"; on page 54, line 5, to strike out the comma and the words "in any State"; and on page 66, between lines 12 and 13, to insert the following new subsection:

(e) The United States Tariff Commission is authorized and directed (1) to compute for each foreign country the average annual volume of each class of goods which were produced, manufactured, mined, handled, or in any other manner worked on in such country, and which were imported into the United States during the 5-year period immediately preceding the date of enactment of this act, and (2) to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the computations so made. Thereafter no goods of any class shall be allowed to be imported into the United States from any foreign country during any calendar year in excess of the average annual volume of that class of goods so computed and certified by the Commission unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the Labor Standards Board that the labor standards in such country which are applicable to the class of goods to which such computation applies are at least equal to the labor standards under which like or similar goods of that class are produced in the United States. The Commission and the Secretary of the Treasury are authorized, respectively, to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection, and the various agencies of the Government are authorized and directed to cooperate to the fullest practicable extent with the Commission and the Secretary of the Treasury in carrying out their functions under this subsection.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Massachusetts would agree to an amendment to his amendment that not only would include foreign countries but would include the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico; for if there is any section of the globe where subnormal labor standards exist, it is under the American flag in our island possessions. I know no more reason why Americans should be protected from other forms of foreign labor than why they should be protected from that which exists under the American flag. Let us make either fish or flesh of this thing.

I have had the most bitter protests from my State against importations from the Philippine Islands. At the same time business interests and some farmers have assured me that trade with the Philippine Islands was the very breath of life for the Northwest. I do not believe in making fish of one thing and fowl of another. We have island possessions out in the Pacific where the lowest type of labor is employed at wages which in this country would be regarded as a disgrace. If the Senator from Massachusetts wants to protect American labor from the competition of cheap labor, then I think the Senator ought to be willing to have the bill amended to exclude competition that comes from labor which now operates under the American flag at starvation wages.

Again, let it be said that if we are to abolish foreign trade, if we are to do anything to injure it, let us be honest with ourselves and repeal the American Merchant Marine Act of 1936. Congress is about to vote millions and millions and millions of dollars to build ships almost as a gift for Americans to haul foreign trade. Of what avail is it to build those ships and sweat Americans in taxation to build them, only to do here something which negatives the very doing of that thing; that is to say, giving this money to American ship operators?

I wonder if the Senator will bring these subnormal workers under the American flag within the scope of his amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to see the labor standards provided in this measure extended to all persons under the flag.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, reported by the committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were present. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." I, therefore, withdraw my vote.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senators from New York [Mr. COPELAND and Mr. WAGNER] are absent on their way to attend the funeral of an intimate friend, the late Mr. James J. Dooling.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are members of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France and are therefore necessarily detained.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on important public business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the general pair of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays, 57, as follows:

YEAS—19

Austin	Hale	Lundeen	Townsend

So Mr. LODGE's amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment so that it may be pending.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to reoffer my amendment in modified form.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Oregon desires to offer his amendment now, I will withdraw mine.

Mr. McNARY. Yesterday I offered an amendment covering fresh vegetables and fruits. I withdrew it so that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] might offer his amendment. Now I should like to offer my amendment in modified form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from Mississippi told the Chair he desired to offer his amendment so that it might be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will be printed and lie on the table subject to his call. The Chair understands that the Senator from Oregon now desires that the Senate consider his amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I offer it. I suppose it will not be considered until tomorrow, when the Senate reconvenes at 11 o'clock a. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to have the amendment pending?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment will be pending.

Mr. McNARY's amendment was, in the committee amendment, on page 60, line 20, before the period, to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection shall not be applicable with respect to any person employed in connection with the canning or other packing or packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges, fruits, maple sugar, or vegetables when the services of such person are of a seasonal nature and do not extend over total periods of more than 6 months in any one year.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I present an amendment for printing. I do not desire to offer it at this time; but I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD, and I should like to have it read from the desk for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Texas desires unanimous consent that his amendment be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 66, it is proposed to strike out lines 18, 19, and 20 and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(2) Shall be published in the Federal Register and shall not take effect until the Congress has been in session at least 60 calendar days after the date of such publication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be printed and lie on the table. The amendment now before the Senate is the one offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to be proposed to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with the debate on the pending bill, an analysis of the bill paragraph by paragraph, prepared by the Department of Labor, which I think will be helpful.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANALYSIS OF S. 2475 (REPT. NO. 884, 75TH CONG., 1ST SESS.), KNOWN AS THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1937

S. 2475 was introduced in the Senate by Senator BLACK and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. The committee held joint public hearings with the House Committee on Labor upon the original bill, and then reported an amended bill. The present analysis is of that amended bill. It is composed of 5 parts and 25 sections. For the sake of convenience it is analyzed by part and section.

PART I. LEGISLATIVE DECLARATION; DEFINITIONS; LABOR STANDARDS BOARD

Legislative declaration

Section 1, the legislative declaration, points out that the employment of workers under substandard labor conditions in occupations in and directly affecting interstate commerce is detrimental to such commerce and the workers therein, and that the correction of this unhealthy condition requires that Congress should both prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of goods produced under substandard labor conditions and provide for the elimination of such conditions.

Definitions

Section 2 defines various terms used in the bill. The most important committee amendments are as follows:

"Employee" is defined to include all employees with the exception of any person employed in a bona-fide executive, administrative, professional, or local retailing capacity, or as a seaman, fisherman, or railroad employee subject to the Hours of Service Act, or any person employed in agriculture, including poultry or dairying.

"Oppressive child labor" means the employment of a person under 16 in any occupation, or the employment of a person between 16 and 18 in an industry which the Chief of the Children's Bureau declares to be hazardous or detrimental to the well-being of the employee, unless the employer is a parent of the employee.

The definition further provides that there is no oppressive child labor if the employer has a certificate from the Chief of the Children's Bureau that the employee is above the oppressive child-labor age, or if the Chief of the Children's Bureau declares that the employment of certain persons under 16 shall not constitute oppressive child labor because he has found that such employment does not interfere with their schooling or well-being.

"Substandard labor condition" means a condition of employment under which (a) an oppressive workweek exists; (b) an oppressive wage is paid; or (c) oppressive child labor exists.

(This is a significant change from the earlier bill, inasmuch as the double standards of the old bill, i. e., the nonoppressive wage and minimum fair wage and the nonoppressive workweek and a maximum reasonable workweek have been merged into a single wage and hour standard, namely, a minimum wage and a maximum workweek. The other substandard labor conditions mentioned in the prior bill, namely, such oppressive labor practices as strike breaking and utilization of labor spies, have been stricken from the substitute.)

Labor Standards Board

Section 3 creates a Labor Standards Board, composed of five members, to be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, for staggered terms of 5 years each, at $10,000 per year.

Subsection (d) of this section broadens the number of employees exempt from civil service so that they now include an executive secretary, attorneys, examiners, regional director, accountants, special consultant, and experts. Other employees are to be appointed subject to the civil-service laws.

PART II—ESTABLISHMENT OF FAIR LABOR STANDARDS

Minimum-wage and maximum-hour standards

Section 4 is a substitute section, and authorizes the board to fix minimum wages and maximum hours. It takes the place of the former controversial section 4 (nonoppressive standards) and section 5 (fair labor standards) of the bill. The most striking feature of this section is the limitation of the board's jurisdiction to wages not in excess of 40 cents an hour or of hours below 40 in 1 week. It contains an expression of policy encouraging higher wages by collective bargaining (but not, it appears, giving them the force of law) and of discouraging abrupt changes which might dislocate American industry.

Section 4 (b) provides that in fixing the minimum wages the board must find that such action will not curtail opportunity for employment and that the wage will be as nearly adequate as economically feasible to maintain a minimum standard of living necessary for general well-being. However, the board cannot fix a minimum wage in excess of 40 cents an hour. In declaring minimum wages the board is to consider (1) the cost of living; (2) facts relevant in a court in a suit for value of services rendered; (3) the wages established for comparable work by collective agreement; and (4) the wages paid for comparable work by employers maintaining minimum standards.

Section 4 (c) provides that in fixing a maximum workweek the board must find that such action will not curtail earning power and that the workweek will be as nearly adequate as economically feasible to maintain health, efficiency, and general well-being. However, the board cannot fix a maximum workweek of less than 40 hours per week. In declaring a maximum workweek the board is to consider (1) the relations of the work to the well-being of the employees; (2) the number of persons available for employment in the industry; (3) the hours of employment established for comparable work by collective agreement; and (4) the hours of employment in comparable work established by employers maintaining a maximum standard.

Collective-bargaining agreements protected

Section 5 saves the rights of employees to bargain collectively and dispels any doubt as to the legality of wages or hours so obtained which are more advantageous to the employees than the standards fixed under the act.

Exemptions from labor standards with respect to wages and hours

Section 6 (a) allows an employer to maintain an oppressive workweek if he pays his employees time and a half for overtime, unless the board determines that such employment is substandard in order to prevent a circumvention of the act.

Section 6 (b) authorizes the board to declare exemptions for (1) apprentices and learners; (2) those of impaired capacity due to age or physical or mental deficiency or injury; (3) deductions for food, lodging, or other facilities necessarily furnished by the employers; (4) overtime in case of peak activities or emergency works; and (5) other cases or classes justifying special treatment.

PART III.—UNFAIR GOODS BARRED FROM INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND INTERSTATE COMMERCE PROTECTED FROM THE EFFECT OF SUBSTANDARD LABOR CONDITIONS

Prohibits shipments and employment conditions in interstate commerce and production for interstate commerce

Section 7 makes it unlawful to sell or ship in interstate commerce any unfair goods, or to employ under any substandard labor conditions employees engaged in interstate commerce or in the production of goods for sale or shipment in interstate commerce.

Protection of interstate commerce from effect of substandard labor conditions

Section 8 (a) authorizes the Board to eliminate substandard labor conditions existing in the production of goods not sold in interstate commerce which compete with goods produced under fair labor standards, which are sold or shipped in interstate commerce.

Section 8 (b) makes it unlawful to employ any employee in violation of an order under this section.

Section 8 (c) authorizes the United States Tariff Commission to investigate the differences resulting from the operation of this act in the costs of production of any domestic article and of any similar foreign article, with a view to determining whether an increase in duty on the foreign article should be made.

(It will be noticed that the constitutional basis for these provisions rests upon the theory that the Government can regulate the labor conditions in the factories using the channels of interstate commerce. The other titles of the original bill which have such alternative bases as the prison-made-goods theory, the unfair-trade-practice theory, the fluctuation-of-price theory, and the labor-disputes theory have been discarded.)

PART IV. GENERAL ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Labor standard orders

Section 9 requires that a labor-standard order be made only after a hearing and that it define the occupation, place, class, craft, or industrial unit to which it relates.

It provides that an order may classify employers, employees, and employments according to locality, population, number of employees, nature and volume of goods, or other circumstances, but declares a policy to avoid excessive classification.

A labor-standard order may contain such conditions as are necessary to prevent the circumvention of the act, or the minimum wage from becoming the maximum wage.

Hearings

Section 10 provides that the hearings to be held before any order can be made shall be public and held only after notice.

Advisory committees on fair labor standards with respect to wages and hours

Section 11 directs the board to appoint an advisory committee of employer, employee, and public representatives to report to it on value of service and hours of employment in an industry before establishing a minimum wage or maximum workweek. However, the board is not bound by the report.

Investigations—testimony

Section 12 (a) authorizes the board to investigate to determine whether there has been, or is about to be, a violation of the act or any labor-standard order.

Section 12 (b) authorizes any member of the board to administer oaths, subpena witnesses, and require the production of books in pursuance of its investigatory powers.

Section 12 (c) authorizes the board to invoke the aid of the courts to compel testimony.

Enforcement

Section 13 authorizes the board to institute suits in the courts, enjoin violations of the act or a labor-standard order.

Records; labels

Section 14 (a) requires employers to keep records of employment, wages, and hours.

Section 14 (b) authorizes the board to require that goods be labeled.

Section 14 (c) authorizes the board to issue certificates of compliance to employers.

Powers of the Secretary of Labor and of the Children's Bureau

Section 15 directs the board to utilize the Department of Labor for all investigations and inspections under section 12 (a), and gives the Secretary of Labor the powers enumerated thereunder to conduct such investigations.

Section 15 (b) directs the board to utilize the Chief of the Children's Bureau for investigations under section 12 with respect to the employment of minors, and to bring actions under section 13 to enjoin oppressive child labor.

(This section might also be strengthened by consideration of the amendment submitted by the Secretary which provides that all the procedural powers related to investigations contained in section 12 should be conferred upon the Department in the performance of the duties imposed by this section, and that the Secretary should also have authority to issue regulations relating to officers and employees of the Department, including the Children's Bureau, in the performance of work pertaining to this portion of the act.)

Section 16 authorizes the board to issue appropriate regulations and orders.

Validity of contracts

Section 17 makes any contract in violation of this act void, and any contracts to waive compliance with this act void.

Reparation; release of goods

Section 18 (a) provides that employees employed under substandard labor conditions are entitled to receive as reparation the amounts that they should have received less the amounts actually received.

Section 18 (b) gives the employee the right to recover such reparation in a civil action, together with costs and a reasonable attorney's fee. Such action must be brought by the employee or by the board for the employee.

Section 18 (c) authorizes the board to exempt goods from the prohibition against interstate shipment, if the owners had no reason to believe that substandard labor conditions existed in the production of those goods, or such exemption is necessary to prevent undue hardship and is not detrimental to the public interest. However, such exemption cannot be granted unless provision is made for the payment of the reparation due to the employees producing the goods.

Relation to other laws

Section 19 provides that no provision of this act, or order of the board shall justify noncompliance with any other Federal or State law or ordinance imposing more onerous standards.

(This section contains an important proviso which was adopted by the committee at the suggestion of the Secretary of Labor which modifies this sentence by providing that any contractor who was subject to this act and who has a Government contract in excess of $2,000 is also subject to the Walsh-Healey Act, except that to the extent that the standards required under the Walsh-Healey Act differ from the wages, hours, and child-labor standards required by the bill, that the standards under this bill shall govern.)

Common carriers not liable

Section 20 provides that the act shall not impose any liability upon a common carrier for the transportation of goods which it did not produce.

Court review of orders

Section 21 (a) makes the orders of the board reviewable in the circuit courts of the United States on questions of law.

Section 21 (b) provides that the commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not operate as a stay of the board's order. The court may grant such a stay if the complainant files an undertaking for the payment to the employees of the reparations which might be due to them under section 18.

Jurisdiction of offenses and suits

Section 22 confers jurisdiction on the district courts over any civil or criminal proceedings arising from violations of the act or the orders of the board.

Penalties

Section 23 makes any willful violation of the act a misdemeanor, and provides a fine of $500 or imprisonment for 6 months, or both for such violation.

Section 23 (e) prohibits the shipment in interstate commerce of goods produced in an establishment in the United States in which, within 30 days prior to removal of such goods, any oppressive child labor has been employed.

Separability

Section 24 is a separability clause.

Effective date of act

Section 25 provides that the act shall take effect immediately, except that no provision requiring the maintenance of any fair-labor standard or giving effect to any substandard condition is effective until 120 days after the enactment of this act. No labor standard order is effective until that date.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending wage and hour bill, and ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 2416) relating to citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2193. An act to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy;

H. R. 6906. An act to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording;

H. R. 6958. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7564. An act to permit the erection of the Shenandoah Memorial in or near Ava, Ohio.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

DRAFT CONVENTIONS OF INTERNATIONAL LABOR CONFERENCE

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Foreign Relations, I present a communication from the President of the United States, enclosing draft conventions and recommendations adopted at the twentieth session of the International Labor Conference held at Geneva in June 1936, and ask that the communication, together with the English text of the accompanying papers, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of First Lt. Russell Lloyd to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July 1937; and also the nominations of several citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 1st day of July 1937.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nominations of Drs. Leon S. Saler and Richard H. Smith to be assistant surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of Assistant Dental Surgeons Ralph S. Lloyd, John W. Knutson, William P. Kroschel, and George E. Jones to be passed assistant dental surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from July 2, 1937.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Clement L. West, of Omaha, Nebr., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 46, with headquarters at Omaha, Nebr. (reappointment).

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Fred C. Pabst, of Galveston, Tex., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 22, with headquarters at Galveston, Tex. (reappointment).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will read the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

ENVOYS EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTERS PLENIPOTENTIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George A. Gordon, of New York, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Netherlands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Leo J. Keena, of Michigan, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Union of South Africa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John D. Erwin, of Tennessee, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Honduras.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Franklin Mott Gunther, of Florida, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Rumania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of John D. Erwin, of Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clinton E. MacEachran, of Massachusetts, to be consul general.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Horatio Mooers, of Maine, to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John H. Morgan, of Massachusetts, to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George T. Summerlin, of Louisiana, to be Foreign Service officer of class 1, a consul general, and a secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of George T. Summerlin, of Louisiana, to be Foreign Service officer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations under the Social Security Board.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I desire to object to the request the Senator from Kentucky is about to make.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Kentucky has not made a request.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no intention of making it if it is to be objected to.

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as the appointments under the Social Security Board are concerned, many Senators are interested in these appointments, and I think each appointment on the list has been recommended by the two Senators from the State from which the appointee comes. But in order that there may be no doubt about the appointments, I ask that they be taken up severally, rather than en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of that request and the lateness of the hour, I ask that the nominations go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the nominations under the Social Security Board going over until the next executive session? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ella M. Perot to be postmaster at Campti, La., which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters favorably reported be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotions and appointments in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the nominations reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs for promotions and appointments in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, July 29, 1937, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and to show forth Thy loving kindness in the morning and Thy faithfulness every night. O Lord God, how great are Thy works, and Thy thoughts are very deep. Bless the Lord, all His works, in all places of His dominion. Heavenly Father, give us that bread that shall feed the heart, enrich the mind, and grant us forgiveness when we are blind to the common treasures of this world. We pray Thee to keep us conscious of our birthright, that our acts and aims may be filial and fraternal and loyal to our Lord and Master. Guided and guarded by Thy presence, may this day be filled with peace and cooperation, and forbid that we should judge others hastily or uncharitably, and Thine shall be the praise. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7564. An act to permit the erection of the Shenandoah Memorial in or near Ava, Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 363. Joint resolution to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 183. Joint resolution consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2193. An act to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

MACE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, to the right of the chair which the Speaker occupies as the presiding officer of this body stands the only visible emblem of national legislative authority in the United States. It is the mace of the House of Representatives. It is the symbol of the majesty of the law. Its form and pattern had their inception in a custom established in the days of the Roman Republic. It was adopted in this Nation upon the founding of the Government in 1789. The identical mace which we who now serve in this body view from day to day has been in use since 1842. Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield, William McKinley, Jefferson Davis, John C. Calhoun, Henry Clay, and other eminent and illustrious men of the Nation who have served in this historic Chamber have looked upon it as we look upon it today, and all have acknowledged its authority. Not more than 12 times in the history of our Republic has the mace been brought forth on the floor of the House. It has never failed. This fact alone testifies to the respect and the awe with which the Members who have served in this Chamber during its history have regarded this symbol of legislative authority. Only 25 men in the history of the Nation have been entrusted with the responsibility of its custody.

There has recently come to the desk of every Member of the House a little pamphlet or brochure prepared by our admirable and amiable friend, Mr. Romney, the present Sergeant at Arms of the House and the present custodian of the mace. This booklet is an item of absorbing interest, well prepared, and worth the reading by every Member of this body. I feel that the House is indebted to Mr. Romney for the service he has performed for us, and is entitled to our appreciation and gratitude. I commend the reading of his pamphlet to every Member of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement I made before the Department of the Interior with regard to public lands in Alaska. This statement embraces a few brief excerpts from statutes and from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously, a quorum is not present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 128]

Disney	Kelly, N. Y.	Rees, Kans.	White, Ohio
Doxey	Kloeb	Robinson, Utah	Zimmerman

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

DISTRIBUTION TO NATURALIZED CITIZENS OF THE STORY OF THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. DICKSTEIN (when the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I call up the bill (H. R. 7077) to provide for the distribution to each naturalized citizen at the time of issuance of his certificate of citizenship of a copy of The Story of the Constitution.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman from New York, since I presume he is going to bring up several bills from his committee this afternoon, if he will specify in order the bills he expects to call up, so that we may be better prepared?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I shall be pleased to give the gentleman the information if he will let me proceed, and while doing so I shall give the gentleman all the numbers of the bills that will be called up. Does the gentleman want the information right now?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to have it now, if I could.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. First, the bill (H. R. 7077) to provide for the distribution to each naturalized citizen at the time of issuance of his certificate of citizenship of a copy of The Story of the Constitution, which is the present bill. The next will be the bill (S. 2416) relating to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama. Following that will come the bill (H. R. 7647) to further the neutrality policy of the United States. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7077) to provide for the distribution to each naturalized citizen at the time of issuance of his certificate of citizenship of a copy of The Story of the Constitution, with Mr. THOMASON of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Is any member of the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reserve time in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the committee desire recognition in opposition to the bill? If not, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] will be recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] and has a unanimous report from the committee.

If this bill is enacted into law, we shall be taking a step in the right direction. We are going to try to have the newly naturalized citizen know something about the Constitution of the United States. We should have given attention to this matter many years ago. Although the people who become citizens of the United States are supposed to understand and to have read the Constitution of the United States, some of them do not know it, and some of them do not know where to find out about it. This bill proposes to give each naturalized citizen at the time of the issuance of his certificate of citizenship a copy of The Story of the Constitution. I believe if we had done this long ago we would have had as naturalized citizens a better and finer class of citizens, people who could tell us something about the Constitution. Probably we would not have had a lot of subversive agitators in this country if they had known we are living in this country under a constitutional form of government.

The cost involved in this distribution is very small.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Is The Story of the Constitution which you are referring to in your legislation here the story written by our colleague, Mr. SOL BLOOM?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know by whom it was written, and I do not care——

Mr. SNELL. You must have had something definite before your committee about its authorship.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is my understanding; but I would not care whether it was written by the gentleman from New York or by any other Member of the House.

Mr. SNELL. So the gentleman knows it was written by SOL BLOOM.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I so understand.

Mr. SNELL. And that is what you expect to give out?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does this measure provide for an autographed picture of the editor?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. SNELL. I think that ought to be in the book.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The committee did not think so. We are just going to give them a plain, simple story of the Constitution. It will be given to them at the time of their naturalization, so they may know something about our form of government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. What are you going to do for the children born in this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are presumed to understand the Constitution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I have risen at this time so that we may understand this little bill. On the face of it it seems harmless and, personally, I have no serious objection to it, except it is going to cost us, perhaps, a great deal of money. I think we could put some amendments on it that would cut down the expense.

I also wanted the Members to know just what the bill does. As you know, a book has been published about the Constitution. We all know something about the book. It is a very beautiful little booklet entitled "The Story of the Constitution." It is now proposed that the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the United States shall furnish to the various clerks of the courts of the country enough of these books so that a copy may be given to each immigrant when he gets his naturalization papers.

There are several Members in the House here who want to offer amendments to this bill and I shall be pleased to yield them some time so they may talk about their amendments, because I suspect these amendments will be important, will be very profound, and that their profundity will reflect the time and energies spent by the gentlemen and the great learning of the gentlemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is always a great pleasure to yield to my able friend from New York, who has shown such great financial acumen as the ranking Republican member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TABER. Why is it we have this particular book on the list?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Of course, the gentleman is coming to the wrong place to get such information. I must confess both my ignorance and my innocence. I have wondered somewhat myself why we should give out any special booklet, and in this connection I may state that that is one of the weaknesses of the bill. It provides that we have to give them this one certain book, The Story of the Constitution. Suppose in a year from now some other very distinguished Congressman comes along and writes a prettier book and puts it in a prettier cover, then we shall no doubt want to adopt that booklet. I do not know why we should go on record accepting this particular booklet. I do not flatter myself with the thought that this answers the gentleman's question, but I have a sort of suspicion that there is a sly effort to put into circulation this beautiful booklet because one of our distinguished Congressman has had much to do with it.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield again, the way this bill is drawn, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry the gentleman did not raise the point of order in time.

Mr. TABER. There will be plenty of time to raise the point when the bill is read. The first section constitutes an appropriation of funds, and the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization never had authority to bring in a bill appropriating money.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman from New York is running true to form when he finds a loophole of that sort in a measure, and being the ranking minority member of the great Committee on Appropriations, I dare say he is going to do his country a great service if he can stop the passage of this bill on that ground.

Mr. TABER. Is there any provision for including a proper picture of the author of this book?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I think not. Someone missed a great opportunity to get a little publicity, but it may be that the author is one of those who would qualify for one of those six Presidential assistants that we provided for the President yesterday, for, no doubt, he has shown that he has "a passion for anonymity."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not want to be discourteous to my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. If he has any further questions, I will be pleased to answer them. If not, I now yield to my distinguished leader, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. If any evidence was needed as to why Congress should adjourn and go home immediately, such evidence has been furnished by the presentation of a bill of this character to the House of Representatives at this time. [Applause.]

I am sorry that any man would introduce such a bill, and I am also sorry that the Committee on Immigration thought the House had nothing more important to do than to consider such a measure on the floor of the House at this time.

The distinguished chairman of the committee stated he did not know what book is to be distributed. Why, there is not a man in this House who does not know that SOL BLOOM's book is the one that it is intended to present on these occasions, and I agree with my colleague from New York that if we are going to present the book I want his autographed picture included on the first page, and when we get the book properly autographed and the author's picture, perhaps the Democratic National Committee can persuade various corporations to buy it at $250 per copy the same as it did with the autographed copy of the President's 1936 Campaign Book.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I may say that I agree with the gentleman. I think the book would otherwise be incomplete. It must, by all means, have a photograph of the author, else many may never know who the author is.

Mr. SNELL. And does not the gentleman agree that this is evidence that Congress has nothing to do and that we ought to adjourn and go home, and the majority ought to be ashamed to keep us here for legislation of this kind.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Being a Methodist, I think the most fitting answer I can make to the question of the gentleman is "Amen."

Mr. SNELL. I say, "Amen and amen."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that everybody seems to be having a good time, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Iowa, the home of the tall corn.

Mr. THURSTON. Does not the gentleman think it would be more appropriate to supply the native-born Americans with a copy of the Constitution than these newly naturalized Americans?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think they probably could make more use of it inasmuch as they can read it better. At the same time I do not want to go on record as belittling the idea of furnishing an immigrant with whatever will tend to make him a good citizen. I know that the House is clearly showing that it does not favor taking time for such a trivial bill at this time, but if we can cut out of this plan all personal advertisement and all unnecessary expense, it might not be a bad idea. But we can well get along without the passage of this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is with unalloyed pleasure that I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. For two questions. How many pages are there in this book?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know, but I should judge about 50 pages. It is a very beautiful little book, and the outside cover is a credit to the artistic temperament of someone.

Mr. FLETCHER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] indicates that there are 65 pages in the book. I would inquire why, in the interest of economy, it could not be put into the RECORD by Mr. BLOOM or by Mr. DICKSTEIN and then franked out to these people if it is necessary? If we are trying to get this information to these people, why print a book?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. To the gentleman's question I cannot make answer. He raises a question of economy. One of the reasons I took the floor is to bring out the fact that this bill has been fashioned on the basis of the practice in the United States district courts of the large cities. For instance, it provides that the Immigration Service shall send to each clerk of a court a sufficient number of these books so that he can give one to each of those who become naturalized. If he should send them to the clerk of the courts in my city, which is no inconsiderable city, though not a large city, this clerk would probably use three or four of them in 3 years. If these are to be sent out by the Immigration Service, I suppose the Service would feel that it would not want to send less than 100 at a time, and surely by the time that 100 is exhausted in these smaller places, some other very astute man in this Congress will have gotten out a more beautiful book. Then those already sent will never be used. Therefore, I think there should be some restriction in that respect, and I think if the gentleman would take time to prepare an amendment that would control the financial end of the matter, he would be doing the country a very great service, because this is going to be very expensive if carried out in the way I think it might be carried out.

Several Members rose.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am glad that there is so much interest manifested in this measure. I shall get around to all of these gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, as I have an hour of time and I will give each one a chance. It is a pleasure to be able to grant time for a learned and exhaustive discussion of this measure, which seems to be the only matter that the majority leaders can find ready for consideration.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I yield with pleasure to the learned gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. I rise to inquire of the gentleman whether he thinks it is fair to the new citizens to have the new citizens believe, or expect the new citizens to believe, that SOL BLOOM had really written this book.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sure that you will all agree that that is a profound question. I confess it stumps me. I think he would know just as much about SOL BLOOM as he would about George Washington, because Mr. BLOOM is nearer to him than Washington, and I hope he does have a good opinion of SOL BLOOM, as I do, and I am not indulging in sarcasm or irony when I say that.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes, for I assume from the gentleman's serious demeanor that he is going to do or say something that needs to be said or done.

Mr. FISH. I make the point of order that this is such an important matter that we ought to have a full membership here. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nine Members present, a quorum.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, among those clamoring for recognition I see many illustrious colleagues. I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], but before I do, I wish to assure him I do that because he appears to be so earnest and because I recognize him to be the most natural wit in the House. His humor has made him famous. It is so natural, it is so personable and is expressed in such quaint words and phrases that one surrenders to him without a struggle. He is irresistible when he makes a request.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I did not mean to excite the gentleman's modesty so much. In fact, I never knew him to have any modesty. Of course, he knows that none but the best of friends can act and speak this way toward each other. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time to ask the chairman of the committee if he has made an arrangement so that the House may use this book, which is a copyrighted book. The House would have no right to use the book if it is copyrighted.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the chairman of the committee, Mr. DICKSTEIN, to answer that inquiry, and to make any explanation that he cares to make at this time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no explanation I desire to make at this time, but I do say that all of this kidding on the other side ought to stop. In my opinion gentlemen there are just propounding questions that have nothing to do with the matter before the House at all. This is permissive, so far as the appropriation is concerned. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. That committee does not have to appropriate one cent so far as the committee is concerned. I am not the author of this bill. I am merely performing my duty in presenting the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield 1 minute of time to the gentleman from Michigan. I think the gentleman from Michigan made a profound inquiry.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the inquiry was profound, but possibly on second thought I might be wrong. If we purchase the books, of course we have a right to give them away. They are copyrighted, and the House would have no right to print the book. Are we to purchase the book from Mr. BLOOM, the owner of the copyright, or are we to print the book as a document without Mr. BLOOM's consent?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I could not answer that question at this moment. Mr. BLOOM is here, and he can talk for himself.

Mr. MICHENER. Inasmuch as the book is copyrighted, no one has a right to print it and sell it or give it away, unless he has the consent of the man who owns the copyright.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That will be explained.

Mr. MICHENER. If we are going to buy the books from Mr. BLOOM with his consent, that is one thing; but if the Congress is contemplating printing books that are copyrighted and selling them, we might get into trouble.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman, but I do not think that is the case.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York, that he, too, might contribute to this discussion that is getting more interesting as it runs along.

Mr. CULKIN. It occurs to me that the modern, ethical way of publishing a book produced by a ghost writer, as I understand this book was, is to carry on the title page the name of the collaborator or ghost writer. I understand in this case, inadvertently, of course, that has not been done. It seems to me that should be corrected before this performance goes any further.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] I suggest that when this bill is read for amendment he bring forward such an amendment as he thinks will be necessary to clarify it in that respect.

I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], who is irresistibly drawn to the fray, regardless of the fact that his modesty caused him to retreat a few minutes ago.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think we should write a provision in this bill, and I will have no objection providing an amendment is incorporated making it compulsory that these books be printed in the English language.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Then the Members of Congress cannot understand it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that he bring forward an amendment to that effect.

I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does not the gentleman think that since we are going in for book publishing and going into the book-distribution business, there are a great many of our colleagues who have written books, and there should be some arrangement made so that their books could be given away? They would be good books and would be good reading.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think that is a fine suggestion. There are some books I know published by some of the Members of the House that I should like to send to one or two people that I do not like very well, and there are some that I should like to send to some of my best friends.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We might add to that Gone With the Wind and other books of which publishers have many copies left over.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is fine. I hope the gentleman will offer an amendment to that effect. Yes; and we might tell Jim Farley that if he has any of those campaign books that he failed to sell for $250 apiece we could use some of them instead of Sears-Roebuck catalogs.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield with pleasure to the distinguished former Governor of New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Amplifying the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY], who suggested Gone With the Wind, why not also include in this bill a copy of the Life of Maverick?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That would be very fine.

Mr. O'MALLEY. And I might suggest also the Specialist, by Chic Sale. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield, but I should admonish the gentleman not to look so serious, for everybody seems to be enjoying this matinee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have two questions to ask the gentleman. In the first place, this bill provides that these books are to be issued to each person to whom the clerk issues a certificate of citizenship. As I understand the naturalization laws, before a certificate of citizenship is issued, the applicant must pass a test on the Constitution and must show that he knows the Constitution already. Does the gentleman think that after he has passed this examination he should have this pamphlet on the Constitution?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. He should have the book before the examination if he is going to be permitted to put it to the greatest personal use, and my personal opinion is that most of these poor people will not be able to read and understand this book when they receive it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to know whether or not the Immigration and Naturalization Service has the funds for this? As I recall, the initial authorization for the printing of these books provided for $200,000. In this session of Congress this House added $150,000. Then by amendment it added $75,000 more, making a total of about $425,000 for the publication of these books. I wonder why the Naturalization Service should be asked to furnish these books and pay for the cost of them? We have already appropriated somewhere approaching a half million dollars for the furnishing of these books.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot answer the gentleman; but the gentleman is asking a serious question which, in a way, is out of place this afternoon, apparently. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Would not the gentleman please offer an amendment to this bill along these lines: There seems to be a great deal of worry about and interest, at times, in aliens. There are quite a few in my State. We want to reward them, apparently, when they become citizens, by giving them this wonderful book to study. There is another section of our country where they have so very few voters, so many appear not to be qualified to vote, and I think we should have a great deal of interest in those people. Can we not amend this so that every town clerk shall hold this bait out, that everyone who qualifies to vote shall have this wonderful book, and therefore get a larger number of people on the voting list from States that now seem to be suffering very badly from lack of voters. They came in here with only 25,000 votes in a district. We have 150,000 in our district. That is where the trouble with the lack of education apparently is in the matter of government, but will not the gentleman think it over and try to make that amendment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I suggest the gentlemen from Massachusetts collaborate with his colleague from the New England territory [Mr. TINKHAM], who is an expert on that matter, and bring forth an amendment to this bill when we read it under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would offer the amendment, but somehow I do not think they take me as seriously as they do the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman underestimates his popularity and he flatters me unduly. If the gentleman will formulate the amendment, I will offer it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the president of the Demagogue Club.

Mr. DIES. With reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] that we send out books written by our colleagues, I am opposed to that, because if we send them out no one will read them, and if they do read them they will defeat our colleagues. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understand this bill, these books are to be given at the time the certificate of naturalization is issued?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am glad to reply to my modest humorous friend in the affirmative.

Mr. KNUTSON. They are over the hurdle then; they do not need to know anything about the Constitution after they have received their citizenship papers. It should be given to them when they apply for citizenship.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Most assuredly; but, of course, they might read the decisions of the Supreme Court occasionally. They deal with constitutional matters, and they are about as understandable to the average immigrant as Mr. BLOOM's beautiful book so bountifully distributed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], who has been so forbearing and patient in waiting his turn, then I am going to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to ask how many men and women are naturalized each year in the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot answer that, I am sorry to say. I do not know whether the chairman of the committee can. I shall ask him how many people are naturalized in the United States each year.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. From 140,000 to 155,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. These figures seem high, but since nobody else wishes to guess we will accept them. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to ask me a question.

Mr. FISH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio some serious questions.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Very well. But do not take yourself too seriously, for nobody else does.

Mr. FISH. This is a highly important piece of legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is certainly being serious, to start with.

Mr. FISH. Before I vote I would like to have some more information. Can the gentleman inform me whether his committee held hearings on this important legislation?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman does me an honor that does not belong to me, for I am no longer a member of this committee. Today I appear, as we lawyers sometimes say, as "a friend of the court."

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman from Ohio know whether the committee held extensive hearings on the bill and whether they have been published?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We probably could find out, but it might take a little time before we got the information. And since time is so precious here this afternoon we cannot afford to waste it.

Mr. FISH. Should this legislation reach the point where we are called upon to vote upon this matter, I think it should be held over until the hearings could be published so that we could read them and know how we should vote on the matter.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the gentleman's suggestion a good one. But it is my personal opinion that when we get through with this bill this afternoon it will go where the President's Supreme Court plan went.

Mr. FISH. How would it be to have this matter go over until we could have the hearings printed, or have hearings held and printed if they have not yet been held?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think it would be well to do that. But I would not advise the gentleman to be any too sanguine that he will ever see this bill again as long as he lives.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana; like Henry Clay, he is a great pacificator. He may bring us into the light, for he lives along the Wabash.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is it not true that legislation is on the way which will allow each Member of Congress, House and Senate, to distribute 2,000 copies of this excellent book?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It would seem that that should be enough.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is 1,070,000 copies altogether. Would it not be possible to squeeze out of that number enough copies to satisfy the needs of this bill?

Mr. SNELL. I will contribute a few.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is a very good suggestion. I think the gentleman should develop it.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL]. I cannot yield further, because my time is very valuable.

Mr. DOWELL. Has any way been provided to get a copy of this book into the hands of those already naturalized who would not receive the book?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the gentleman has asked a very pertinent question.

Mr. DOWELL. May I make this suggestion seriously: I think there is something in the statement that sometime we may desire to use another book. Would it be proper to provide that the naturalized citizen be furnished with a copy of the Constitution. In a few years from now another book on the Constitution may be written.

Mr. KNUTSON. Maybe another Constitution.

Mr. DOWELL. I hope not another Constitution.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the gentleman's observation very pertinent. I just want to say this in all seriousness: I do not know whether this bill will ever come to the point where it will be voted upon or not, but if it does go so far that we consider it under the 5-minute rule, I want to ask the attention of the chairman to the proposition that we ought to restrict this in such way that the number sent out should be limited so that we may curb expense. Then, as has been suggested, the bill should be amended so as not to provide for the distribution of only this particular book, The Story of the Constitution, for some other pamphlet might come along that would answer the purposes better and that we might want to supply. I want the gentleman from New York to be thinking about that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I shall be pleased to yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In all seriousness, I may say this committee held hearings and the minority members of the committee were there. Public men discussed it. We have not printed the hearings because we did not think it was necessary. So far as the committee believes, there is but one Constitution which will last forever. The Constitution is not going to be changed. If any of you gentlemen think you have something to offer in substitution for the Constitution to give to the alien, offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We do not claim we have anything better than the Constitution. All we want is a more strict compliance with our present Constitution and we would be better satisfied.

Mr. Chairman, while I think we have already shown enough reasons to justify the gentleman from New York

[Mr. DICKSTEIN] in withdrawing the bill from further consideration by the House, I feel constrained to yield enough time to our distinguished minority leader to put onto this bill the finishing touches necessary to kill it, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the chairman of the Immigration Committee for 30 minutes the other afternoon when he talked about various immigration matters. I was really impressed with what he said at that time and even read part of the statement over the next morning. After the seriousness that the gentleman showed on that occasion, I cannot see how he would be led astray to bring such a foolish bill as this into the House for consideration at this time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am simply performing a function, as any other chairman of a House committee would do, in presenting a bill for consideration. I have taken no side one way or the other.

Mr. SNELL. I am sure the gentleman did not understand the bill. In fact, I had not read it over when I asked him some questions previously. At that time I asked him if this was a book that was written by SOL BLOOM, and he said he did not know.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want the gentleman to have the same opinion of me now that he had 2 days ago.

Mr. SNELL. I will after today, but I cannot just now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I tried to answer the gentleman in the best way I could. I say now this is the book. Whether you want to pass this or not, I am not concerned with, but it appears to me when the committee voted to present the bill to the House, it felt there is one Constitution, and the American people ought to know it, particularly the people who are about to take the step of citizenship, and they ought to take it home and study it.

Mr. SNELL. Now, I cannot yield further.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will yield the gentleman some time. I am not criticizing the gentleman's statement. I say I am simply performing my duty.

Mr. SNELL. I take it the gentleman is not very much interested in this bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am just presenting the bill. I have no interest in any special bill.

Mr. SNELL. I am glad to know the gentleman is not very much interested in the bill. I asked him if this was the book on the Constitution that was written by SOL BLOOM. I had not read the bill and the gentleman said he did not know whether it was or not.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I still say I do not know whether SOL BLOOM wrote it or you wrote part of it.

Mr. SNELL. It says right here in the bill that it is "The Story of the Constitution", edited by the Director General of the United States Sesquicentennial Commission, and I thought that was Mr. BLOOM.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It does not necessarily mean that SOL BLOOM wrote it.

Mr. SNELL. He admits he wrote it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I assume it was done under his direction. That is all I am concerned with.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the Immigration Committee a question; then I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. When this bill is under consideration for the offering of amendments, I propose to offer the following amendment, and I would like to have the gentleman give it consideration:

And provided further, That the copyright now owned by SOL BLOOM shall be assigned to the United States before this act becomes effective.

Would the gentleman oppose that amendment?

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman will yield, I should like to answer that question. I would like to have the gentleman yield me about a minute.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLOOM. I have sat here and listened to the remarks made by the gentleman from New York and the other gentlemen, and I think it is about time that someone understood something about this book.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has commented on it many times.

Mr. BLOOM. This controversy might be considered good advertising in some quarters. It would be considered good advertising by some people who might be selling something. For the information of the gentleman from New York, may I say that all of the copyrights that have been taken out by the George Washington Bicentennial Commission and all of the copyrights taken out by the Constitution Commission belong to the Government of the United States. There is nothing personal in this at all.

May I say further to the gentleman from New York that there is nothing in the book that says it was written by SOL BLOOM? SOL BLOOM is not looking for advertising. He does not need that kind of advertising. The book belongs to the Government of the United States; it was paid for by the Government of the United States, and it is being distributed by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. When the gentleman put out this book, why did he not say it was published by the Sesquicentennial Commission rather than that it was published by SOL BLOOM? Now, just answer that question.

Mr. BLOOM. I am going to answer it, but I would like to answer it in my own way, because the gentleman has asked me a question. There is nothing there that says it was published by SOL BLOOM.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I read on the front leaf.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. Tnere is nothing in the book that says it was written by SOL BLOOM.

Mr. SNELL. Never mind the writing now. I am asking about the publication now.

Mr. BLOOM. The book is being published by the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

Mr. SNELL. That is not what is stated on the first page of the book, as we had it here last week. It stated it was published by SOL BLOOM.

Mr. BLOOM. I have sent for a copy of the book, and I will let the gentleman see it does not say it is published by SOL BLOOM, and it is not published by SOL BLOOM.

Mr. SNELL. The bill does not state anything about the director general.

Mr. BLOOM. It is not my bill. If it is wrong, correct it.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman should have known something about this bill. It is the gentleman's book. If the gentleman states he does not know anything about this bill, I think somebody should make an explanation on the floor. Let me read what appears on the front page of the book.

Mr. BLOOM. Please do. Look at all the pages.

Mr. SNELL. "The Story of the Constitution—SOL BLOOM."

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; that is what it states. That is what I told the gentleman it stated. Now read further.

Mr. SNELL. Then down at the bottom of the page it states:

The United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

Mr. BLOOM. I will leave it to the Members of the House if that is not exactly what I stated was in the book.

Mr. SNELL. This is copyrighted by SOL BLOOM. There is the book right there. It states:

The Story of the Constitution—SOL BLOOM.—

in large letters. If that means anything at all it means published or written by SOL BLOOM, and that is the reason it is printed in that way.

Mr. BLOOM. Absolutely, and copyrighted by SOL BLOOM. Now, for the information of the gentleman, it is copyrighted by SOL BLOOM because the Government of the United States cannot copyright anything.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman's Commission could copyright something, or arrange to have it copyrighted.

Mr. BLOOM. It could not.

Mr. SNELL. It certainly can.

Mr. BLOOM. It cannot.

Mr. DUNN, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, and Mr. MOTT rose.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. If this bill is passed in its present form, does it mean this particular book would have to be sent out, and no other book could be used?

Mr. SNELL. It does.

Mr. DUNN. I do not think that is altogether fair, as much as I love my friend [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. SNELL. I may write a book some day on the Constitution of the United States, and I may want to have a chance to sell it.

Mr. BLOOM. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. DUNN. I also might like to do so.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have heard a lot of talk about this copyright by SOL BLOOM, and I want the matter straightened out.

Mr. SNELL. A lot of other people would like to have it straightened out, too.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. As I understand, it was just a technical necessity to copyright the book in the name of an individual. The book could not otherwise be protected. Is that correct?

Mr. BLOOM. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] state that it was a technical necessity to publish SOL BLOOM's name in large print right under The Story of the Constitution?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am talking solely about the book copyrighted by SOL BLOOM. I inquired of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] sometime ago concerning this matter, and was informed that the only way the book could be protected was to have it copyrighted by an individual. I understand from the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] that this is correct.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SNELL. I am not a lawyer, but I know that a corporation of which I am a stockholder once took out a copyright on exactly the same kind of written document.

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman will permit, this Commission is not incorporated. It is not a corporation.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman could incorporate it if he wanted to.

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If the gentleman will yield, let us get this straight. I think this is an important matter and should be cleared up for the record. I understand that this Commission could not copyright a book.

Mr. BLOOM. Absolutely not.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky and Mr. DOWELL rose.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. May I inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] if this book does not belong to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] if it is copyrighted in the name of "SOL BLOOM"?

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, it does.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Could there be any claim that it belonged to the United States Government?

Mr. SNELL. I do not believe so.

Mr. BLOOM. Is the gentleman asking me or the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] stated a short time ago that all copyrights taken in the name of the Commission belonged to the United States Government.

Mr. BLOOM. No; I did not make that statement.

Mr. BOILEAU. If so, what copyrights did they take out? If this copyright is taken in the name of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], why has the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] not assigned his copyright to the United States Government?

Mr. SNELL. That is one of the provisions I am going to insist be put in this bill.

Mr. BLOOM. Is the gentleman asking me that question?

Mr. BOILEAU. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] asked that question a short time ago of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], the latter replied by saying that all of the copyrights taken by the Commission belonged to the Government. This one was taken by SOL BLOOM. Why has not the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] already made such an assignment to the Government?

Mr. SNELL. I should like to know that also, and that is why I am trying to bring this up today.

Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. BLOOM rose.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. I assume this book was written and published for the purpose of giving the people who are being naturalized an understanding of the Constitution. Am I correct in my assumption? I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] to answer my question.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman is asking that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. However, may I say, if the gentleman is asking me, that if anyone is going to ask a question, I should be permitted to answer that question.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am asking the gentleman the question.

Mr. BLOOM. Excuse me; the gentleman is asking me the question? Now, let us get this thing right. You had your field day yesterday, and you are having one again today. If anyone wants to ask me a question and be serious about it——

Mr. KNUTSON. I am serious about it.

Mr. SNELL. I am very serious about this.

Mr. KNUTSON. What was the purpose of writing this book?

Mr. BLOOM. Wait just a minute. May I be permitted to answer first the question of the gentleman from New York, and then I will be pleased to answer your question.

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. I stated, in answer to the gentleman from New York, that all of the copyrights are taken out in my name. This has been the custom for the last 10 years. Immediately they are transferred to the Government of the United States, because if the Government of the United States could take out a copyright it would immediately go into the public domain. So they cannot take out a copyright. This is answer to no. 1. Let me tell you, further——

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman will yield, I must either apologize to the gentleman or else the gentleman made a mistake and did not say what he meant to say.

Mr. BLOOM. I beg your pardon, and the RECORD will show what I said. I am not going to look at the RECORD, and it will stay just the way it is.

Let me say, further, that all checks are made payable to the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. Let us not get off the subject.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman from New York gave me permission to answer, and I would like to answer.

Mr. SNELL. I want the gentleman to answer, but I do not want him to take all my time.

Mr. BLOOM. I would give the gentleman all the time, if I had it.

The checks are made payable to the Treasurer of the United States. So the gentleman from New York, referring to myself, does not handle any money. The money goes into the Treasury and it stays there. So SOL BLOOM is not interested except in one thing—to see that the Government of the United States gets protection.

Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. BOILEAU rose.

Mr. SNELL. I yield first to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. What was the purpose in writing this book?

Mr. BLOOM. To instruct the people of this country, and especially some Congressmen, in the story and history of the Constitution. That is why the book was written.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, the gentleman must not assume they are all like the New York City delegation.

Mr. BLOOM. If they were, they would be pretty smart.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the purpose is what the gentleman stated, why copyright the book, which would restrict its circulation?

Mr. SNELL. I do not yield any further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman asked me the question.

Mr. SNELL. I want to talk now. The gentleman is talking about money and has not answered the question why he has not assigned this copyright to the Commission.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman states that he has.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman asked me a question. Let me answer it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield my floor leader 5 more minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I will say for the information of the gentleman that, so far as I have been able to learn from the little study of the copyright law that I have given it after 5 years on that committee, the Government of the United States cannot copyright any publication; it does not do so because a Government publication is public property, and anybody can quote from it or use it, and there is no need to protect it.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a good explanation, and I am glad to have somebody give it to us.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I want to make one more statement, if I may. If a copyright remains in the name of a person and that person should become deceased tomorrow, the copyright or the publication under the copyright belongs to the estate of that person, if it has not been assigned.

Mr. SNELL. And if the gentleman from New York should die tonight——

Mr. O'MALLEY. Which I hope will not happen.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; it would belong to his estate, and I have been told it is worth $1,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SNELL. I have been told the copyrights connected with this Commission are worth a million dollars.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. In order to clear up a part of this controversy I would like to ask my colleague from New York [Mr. BLOOM] who wrote this book.

Mr. BLOOM. What part of it?

Mr. MOTT. All of it.

Mr. BLOOM. I did not write the Constitution.

Mr. MOTT. Did the gentleman write the book?

Mr. BLOOM. Most of it; yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York just one question to clarify this whole thing. Has the gentleman assigned this particular copyright over to the Government?

Mr. BLOOM. All copyrights.

Mr. BOILEAU. That clarifies the matter I have in mind.

Mr. SNELL. Where is a copy of that assignment?

Mr. BLOOM. Over in the office—does the gentleman want to get it?

Mr. SNELL. I think it would be a good thing to have, as it is of no value whatever until filed with the Librarian of Congress.

Mr. BLOOM. Let me say to the gentleman that you have members on that Commission. Congressman Taber is on that Commission, Mr. Darrow is on that Commission, and you have Senator Borah on that Commission, and Senator McNary, and as soon as you file an assignment of copyright in the Copyright Office of the United States Government it becomes public property.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Let me say this: If you will kindly read the book, you will see where credit is given to the people who helped write the book. You are asking a lot of questions, which proves that you have never read the book or the introduction to the book.

Mr. SNELL. I read the first page, and that was enough.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. May I just answer this one thing? The book was planned—and I want the gentlemen to get this, so that there will not be any more questions of who wrote the book—and if you read further than the first page you may learn something. This book was planned and edited by the Director General and prepared under the immediate supervision of Historian David M. Matteson, who is mainly responsible for the text and statements, and so on, and this answers all of your question:

> Upon application, permission will be granted for the reprint or use of any portion of this book, provided that no change be made and that full credit be given to the Commission.

Not to SOL BLOOM but to the Commission; and the only reason that is there is that we wanted to protect the text of the book.

Mr. SNELL. Who would ever read that fine print on the inside?

Mr. BLOOM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is the largest print in the book.

Mr. SNELL. It is not on the first page.

Mr. BLOOM. It is on the first page. There is the first page of that book right there. The gentleman does not know much about books; he must know very little about books.

Mr. SNELL. I never have written any book to advertise myself and had somebody else furnish the money, either.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman just said that the copyright of this is worth a million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the chairman of the committee [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman just said that the copyright of this is worth a million dollars. If it is, in view of the few dollars that have been appropriated to the Commission, then we have given $10 to $1 back to the Government for every dollar that it has given the Commission.

Mr. SNELL. That may be true, but the Government has got nothing yet; it is all in your name.

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman will go to the Treasury, he will find out.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the floor has been yielded to me for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] a question.

Mr. BLOOM. I would be glad to answer any question if the gentleman will give me 10 minutes.

Mr. WOLVERTON. It is a very short question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] whatever time he desires.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I dislike to ask the question or even make the suggestion which I am about to make.

Mr. BLOOM. That is perfectly all right with me.

Mr. WOLVERTON. It certainly is not my desire to take any credit away from the gentleman from New York for any part he may have had in the preparation of this book, but I have received within the last few days a letter from a constituent who has given a great deal of attention to the preparation and publication of material similar to that which appears in the book which is the subject of this controversy, and he has informed me that the material in this book, in some particulars, has been taken from his book, and he asks for an investigation in respect to it. I am sorry I did not know that this matter was coming up today or I would have had all the available information here. Having a high regard for the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], I do not wish to assume that he would be a party to any such practice, and I shall therefore gather such information as may be available and submit it to him at the earliest possible day.

Mr. BLOOM. Now, may I answer that?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, the most sincere kind of flattery is to be accused of plagiarism, so I can assure the gentleman or his friend or constituent——

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, who has the floor?

Mr. BLOOM. I have the floor, and I am going to keep it; and when the gentleman asks me to yield, I will yield in proper time. I am speaking to gentlemen on the Republican side, and I prefer not to be interrupted. I say to the gentleman from New Jersey that there is no plagiarism in this book. This is a book of the story of the Constitution; and who can plagiarize anything in writing history? So I do not claim authorship of this language, because there is nothing new in this book. The only thing in this book that is different from any other book is that this book is true; it is absolutely correct and gives all the information necessary on the history of the Constitution, and sells for only 10 cents, or by mail for 15 cents.

Neither you nor anyone else can bring me a literal text of the Constitution that is correct. I will say further that I brought to the floor of this House a short time ago a publication of Rand-McNally, of Chicago, which had 1,496 mistakes in a 10-cent book.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I am not referring to what references might have been made in the gentleman's book setting forth what is the text of the Constitution, but there is much in the book aside from and beyond what the gentleman is referring to.

Mr. BLOOM. I shall be pleased to have that letter and have the gentleman write to me about it.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I will be pleased to submit the letter and any additional information obtainable, so that no injustice may be done to either party.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. In order to settle the issue, I called the Congressional Library, Copyright Division, and they informed me that the application for the copyright was signed by Mr. BLOOM, and he said he was the author and owned the copyright, and he was the man who paid for it.

Mr. BLOOM. That is right.

Mr. ENGEL. I thought the gentleman said he did not represent himself as the author?

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman asked me a question, and I will answer it.

Mr. ENGEL. Certainly.

Mr. BLOOM. To receive a copyright—please remember I have been copyrighting my own publications for over 50 years—to receive a copyright you must conform to the rules of the Copyright Office. Certainly I did make that statement. Certainly I paid for it. Certainly the Government of the United States has received the money. Now, if you get your copyright, then you can do whatever you want with it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. A misunderstanding ought to be cleared up here. The fact that the gentleman copyrighted the book in his own name is entirely in accord with the law and the practice of everybody. Even though the gentleman was not the author, some individual must have his name attached to that book to have it copyrighted.

Mr. BLOOM. Certainly.

Mr. O'MALLEY. After the gentleman has copyrighted it, the contents of the book are his. It is a restricted book. The statement just made shows it is restricted to the copyright owner, and cannot be used or quoted from by even the Government of the United States without permission of the copyright owner. To clear that up, as with all corporations where an employee of the corporation writes a book and copyrights it, the corporation requires that he immediately assign the copyright, and the Government of the United States does not own that book today until it is assigned to the Government.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think it is unfortunate that all during this debate and on a previous occasion the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] did not clarify this one point as he has now—that is, that he did assign this copyright over immediately after receiving it. Had the gentleman made that statement before, it would have saved a lot of misunderstanding.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not understand that yet. I do not understand the gentleman has made an assignment.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman stated a while ago that he did make an assignment.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement. I refuse to yield further to anybody.

Mr. DOWELL. I think that should be cleared up and I think the gentleman should make a positive statement that he made that assignment to the United States Government, and when he made it and to whom, and where the document is now located. The gentleman knows, and he can state it so that we will all understand it.

Mr. ENGEL. And is the assignment recorded in the Copyright Office?

Mr. BLOOM. No; it is not. If it was recorded, there would be no more copyright.

Mr. ENGEL. Then it is not effective.

Mr. BLOOM. Now, if you will wait a minute. I know something about copyrights and I will try to explain it. The first transfer of copyrights of any commission was made when Senator Fess was chairman of the Bicentennial Commission. When other copyrights were taken out by this Commission, by me, for protection, immediately a letter was written at that time—I forget the exact date—that all of the properties copyrighted by me personally belonged to the Commission or the Government of the United States.

Mr. DOWELL. That is not an assignment at all.

Mr. BLOOM. Let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. KNUTSON. Who was the letter addressed to?

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman made an assignment, there is a proper way to make an assignment to the Government of the United States, and the gentleman knows how that is done.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; but let me tell you something——

Mr. DOWELL. I want to know whether that has been done.

Mr. BLOOM. Not that way; no, sir.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the Government of the United States does not own it.

Mr. BLOOM. It certainly does, and the Commission followed exactly what we did when Senator Fess was vice chairman, exactly the same.

Mr. DOWELL. That has nothing to do with it. The question now is, Does this copyright belong to the Government of the United States?

Mr. BLOOM. Absolutely; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman has just stated that he has never made an assignment of the copyright.

Mr. BLOOM. I say that all of the property of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission that has been copyrighted belongs to the Government of the United States, and that is in the record. All these gentlemen are witnesses to it. I will give you any kind of assignment you want.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman make a legal assignment to the Government of the United States?

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman draw it up?

Mr. DOWELL. I will say that the gentleman has a way of doing it.

Mr. BLOOM. Please do, and let us have it notarized.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman knows the proper way of doing it.

Mr. BLOOM. But the Government is getting the money.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand it is now, but the Government does not have the copyright.

Several Members rose.

Mr. BLOOM. It certainly has. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further; I would like to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is within control of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have no further time to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order in asking that his time be extended.

Mr. BLOOM. I am asking the question if my time can be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House the gentleman's time cannot be extended without the consent of the Member who has control of the time.

Mr. BLOOM. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that it is not my idea in any way——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to permit the gentleman from Illinois to submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BLOOM. Not if it is to be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It comes out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. LUCAS. I am trying to help the gentleman.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield. I would like to make this statement: It does not make any difference to me whether you pass this bill or not. I do not care whether you withdraw the bill or not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would suggest to the gentleman, in view of the situation that has developed here, that the bill be amended.

Mr. BLOOM. I would suggest that the bill be withdrawn. Let these gentleman over here have their field day; it does not make any difference to me.

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me finish my suggestion. I would suggest that the bill be amended so as to provide that the book be placed in the hands of clerks of the United States courts to be sold if the applicant desires to purchase one at the time of the issuance of his certificate.

Mr. BLOOM. Do anything you want; it does not make any difference to me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think a short statement from me will dispose of this matter. I brought on this floor a bill dealing with immigration, but it turned into a discussion of the Constitution and other matters on this floor. A number of amendments have been suggested to me by members of the committee which I think ought to be given more study and consideration. In view of the circumstances, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we have discussed a lot of things here today; but those of us who have read this book on the Constitution must all agree that it is a splendid book. It is a book that is attracting attention. I dropped into a drug store today, one of the Peoples Drug Stores, and saw four people step up and buy it. I have bought and distributed and intend to buy and distribute more copies, but I am opposed to appropriating the taxpayers' money for this purpose at this time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. But from the atmosphere that has been created here you would imagine it was something on Soviet Russia.

Mr. MICHENER. The difference is that now you are going to give these copies away in competition with those that are being sold.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request and move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7077) to provide for the distribution to each naturalized citizen at the time of issuance of his certificate of citizenship of a copy of The Story of the Constitution, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I call up the bill (S. 2416) relating to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is the bill that was just reported back from the Committee of the Whole still the business of the House? I refer to H. R. 7077.

The SPEAKER. The bill still remains on the calendar for any future action that the House may care to take.

Mr. O'MALLEY. How was that bill withdrawn from the consideration of the House?

The SPEAKER. It was not withdrawn. It is still the unfinished business on the calendar of the House.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It does not go back to the committee?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

CITIZENSHIP OF CERTAIN CLASSES OF PERSONS BORN IN THE CANAL ZONE OR THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2416) relating to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-three Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 129]

Allen, Pa.	Boehne	Burch	Carter
Arnold	Buckley, N. Y.	Caldwell	Chandler
Biermann	Bulwinkle	Cannon, Wis.	Clark, Idaho

Cluett	Gilchrist	McGroarty	Reece, Tenn.

Elcher	Kniffin	Peyser	Taylor, Colo.
Ellenbogen	Lambeth	Phillips	Wadsworth
Fernandez	Lanham	Plumley	Wene
Fulmer	McGranery	Powers	Wolfenden
Gavagan	McGrath	Quinn	Wood

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. DICKSTEIN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person born in the Canal Zone on or after February 26, 1904, and whether before or after the effective date of this act, whose father or mother, or both, at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States is declared to be a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 2. Any person born in the Republic of Panama on or after February 26, 1904, and whether before or after the effective date of this act, whose father or mother, or both, at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States employed by the Government of the United States or by the Panama Railroad Co. is declared to be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to ask what arrangement, if any, we can make with reference to time?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have only 1 hour, and I have a number of requests for time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We want some time on this side.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes. In so doing I am depriving myself of time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising at this time is to explain the bill that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has brought before you for consideration. I am doing this at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

This bill has been passed by the Senate and has been reported by our committee by the unanimous vote of all those present when the vote was taken. It has to do with the citizenship of a certain class of persons born in the Canal Zone and in the Republic of Panama.

I may say that in 1855 a law was enacted which provided that the children of American parents or of an American father born on foreign soil were considered citizens of the United States. The fourteenth amendment, as you all know, extends citizenship to all persons born within the United States. But when we came to the Panama Canal and the Canal Zone we had a rather curious situation arise.

It has been held that the Canal Zone is not such foreign territory as to come under the law of 1855 and, on the other hand, it is not a part of the United States which would bring it within the fourteenth amendment; consequently there has been great doubt as to the citizenship status of children born in the Canal Zone since February 26, 1904, the date the United States assumed jurisdiction over the Canal Zone.

Of course, the second generation of children is coming along now and there is still greater doubt as to their citizenship status. There is another question that arises. American citizens living in the Canal Zone frequently go over to the American hospital in the city of Colon, Panama, for the birth of children. They are, therefore, not born within the Canal Zone, although born in an American hospital operated by Americans and are children of American parents.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Would not the act of 1855 cover that contingency?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The act of 1855 might cover the last contingency, but I want to go further, if I may.

The first section of the bill takes care of those persons born in the Canal Zone. The second section takes care of those born in Panama. I call your attention to the fact now that under the second section, having to do with those persons born in Panama, it is required not only that the parents be American citizens but also that they be employees of either the United States Government or of the Panama Railroad.

In 1934 our laws were amended to allow citizenship to descend through the mother as well as through the father when born on foreign soil, but there was a limitation put in. If you will get a copy of the report, you will find all of the limitations set out in the report. Under the law of 1934 it was required that the parent, if only one parent be an American citizen, must have previously resided in the United States, and, furthermore, that for 5 years at least preceding the eighteenth birthday of the child the child itself must have resided in the United States. Then within 6 months after attaining his majority that child must take the obligations of citizenship.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Has the attention of the committee been called to any specific cases where hardships have resulted because of the alleged defects existing in the law about which the gentleman has been speaking?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. How many such cases have been called to the attention of the committee?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman will look at page 2 of the report he will see that the number of cases that would be affected includes a total of 1,843 persons born in the Canal Zone and 1,517 born in Panama. One thousand four hundred and forty-one of those born in the Canal Zone are children both of whose parents were American citizens, and the same thing is true of 1,079 of those born in Panama.

Mr. TARVER. The language of the bill in both sections is that a person born under the circumstances detailed in the bill is declared to be a citizen of the United States. A person born in 1904 in the Republic of Panama very possibly may have acquired citizenship either in Panama or some other country of the world since that time. However, under the language of this bill, without regard to what changes in the status of the person with regard to his citizenship may have occurred since that time, such a person is declared to be now a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. As a matter of fact, under the general law of the United States, in any other country in the world except this one particular place if a child is born of an American mother or of American parents, both of them being American citizens, the same thing would be true.

Mr. TARVER. No; I think the gentleman has misunderstood my inquiry. I am not talking about whether or not it should be declared through this legislation that at the time of his birth the child should be considered to have been a citizen of the United States. In view of the lapse of perhaps more than 30 years in some cases since birth, and the possible acquisition of citizenship in some other country of the world by the person so born, I do not think we should now declare by legislative act that this person without regard to whether he has acquired citizenship in some other country is now a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I see the point the gentleman makes. In other words, there should be a saving phrase inserted to this effect, "provided he has not become a citizen of some other country in the meantime."

Mr. TARVER. Perhaps we should declare that at the time of his birth he was a citizen of the United States and let his status since then be controlled by what his actions may have been with regard to having acquired alien citizenship.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I may say that if this bill passes as worded many of these persons could be citizens of Panama and also citizens of the United States, depending on how the Republic of Panama looks at the language of this act.

Mr. SPARKMAN. According to my understanding, this bill was prepared at the request of the War Department. Its enactment is requested by the War Department, the Labor Department, the State Department, and also the Attorney General, in order to clarify the situation which I have described.

Mr. TARVER. If the gentleman will yield further, does the gentleman think these 3,000 or more people to whom reference is made in the report, who would come within the terms of this proposed legislation, ought to be made citizens of the United States by legislative act without their even having applied for this consideration? Perhaps these people do not want to be citizens of the United States. Should not an application for recognition of citizenship at least be required? Does not the gentleman think some action on the part of such persons should be required?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand the rules, if the Speaker should recognize me, I would be entitled to an hour in my own right. This is a very important bill. I think on our side we ought to have some time. Will the Speaker recognize me now, or when will be the proper time for me to make this request? May I make the request at this time?

The SPEAKER. If the hour is exhausted without the previous question having been ordered on the bill, the gentleman will be entitled to recognition for an hour.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the Chair recognize me at this time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I now answer the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]?

The relation of the Canal Zone to us is almost parallel to that of our Territories, although the Canal Zone does not have a territorial status. However, if a child had been born under these same circumstances in a Territory of the United States, it is my understanding the child would be a citizen unless since then he had expatriated himself. Frankly, I do not know whether or not under this measure that ruling would apply.

Mr. TARVER. According to the argument of the gentleman, these 3,000 or more people are not now citizens of the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall not say they are not citizens, but the Attorney General has ruled there is doubt about their status.

Mr. TARVER. Unless they are not citizens of the United States, there is no need for this legislation. Assuming they are not citizens of the United States, the gentleman is proposing to legislate them into citizenship without any expression on their part of desire to become citizens, without their having filed an application with anybody and without their having taken an oath of allegiance to our Government and the Constitution of our country. Does not the gentleman think some form of application for the benefits available under this bill ought to be provided by its terms and some method of procedure established by which the applicant may show he desires the benefits granted by the bill and wishes to become a citizen?

Mr. SPARKMAN. As far as my personal opinion is concerned, I have always believed that a person living in a foreign country ought to show by some affirmative action that he desires his citizenship in this country protected. I may say I had nothing to do with drawing this bill. It was prepared, as I stated a few minutes ago, with the approval and help of the various departments. Whether or not they took those things into consideration I cannot say.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. May I say to the gentleman the discussion appears to indicate the bill was rather hastily drawn, and there were not taken into consideration the contingencies which may occur. If we pass this bill there may be people who were born in 1904 that are already citizens of the Republic of Panama, although we declare them to be citizens of the United States. By so doing we may imperil some of the rights or privileges they may hold as citizens of Panama. We do not know definitely regarding this situation.

Then we come to section 2 and we seek to apply this law only to the children of Government employees or employees of the Panama Railroad. If there are people down there who are children born of American citizens who are not such employees, why should this bill declare only the children of Government employees to be citizens? Obviously it is discriminatory. There may be a broker or a fruit dealer or a mechanic living with a wife in the Canal Zone whose child was born in a hospital in Panama and such child would be excluded from the benefits of this bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman has asked so many things——

Mr. O'MALLEY. I have only asked two things.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me answer them as the gentleman has asked them.

First, in regard to the bill being hastily drawn, I cannot say about that, because, as I have stated, it was prepared, as I understand, under the direction of the various departments that had been confronted with the problem, and the bill passed the Senate in its present form and then was referred to our committee, where it received a careful hearing.

As to the second question, such children born in Panama may become American citizens under the law of 1934. They are in a different status. The purpose of this bill is to take them out from under the provision which would require the child to come back to the United States and live here 5 years prior to becoming 18 years of age, and this exemption is made only for the benefit of the employees of the United States Government and the Panama Railroad in order that the hardship may not be put upon them of bringing their children back here.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why should the children of employees of the United States Government be saved a hardship which we do not save the children of other Americans who are not fortunate enough to be in the employ of the United States?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Because that is where their job is.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is true, but other Americans may earn their livelihood down there also.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the question raised by the gentleman from Georgia is well taken, that they should not be declared citizens simply by an act of this body. Could we not correct that by adding after the words "United States" in line 7, "upon making application therefor to the proper courts"?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the general law takes care of that. We are now dealing with children of American citizens who have been there for years, and as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] has well said, they are assigned to duty in running the Canal on behalf of the United States.

Mr. DONDERO. But they should perform some particular act indicating their intention or their desire to become citizens.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say, personally, I would not object to that; but I do not have charge of the measure, and

I am simply trying to explain it as written, and I respectfully call your attention to the fact that the bill has already passed the Senate in its present form.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. Under section 2 of this bill, if a prostitute in the Republic of Panama gave birth to an illegitimate child and claimed that an American soldier was the father of that child, the child would become a citizen, would it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not prepared to answer about obtaining citizenship in that way. It seems to me she would certainly have to establish the fact that he was the father, and simply claiming that would not be sufficient.

Mr. ENGEL. Could not that be done by affidavit?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would not believe that an affidavit would be sufficient.

Mr. ENGEL. How would you determine the matter?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I cannot tell the gentleman. The gentleman is asking a question that I cannot answer.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LESINSKI. The bill only refers to citizens of the United States employed either in the Canal Zone or in the city of Panama. They must be citizens of the United States, and the children must be born of a legitimate father and mother, and the bill would not apply to illegitimate children.

Mr. ENGEL. Where does the bill say anything about a legitimate father and mother? The bill states "whose father or mother", not "father and mother", but "father or mother both at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States." The bill does not say anything about legitimacy, and, as I read the bill, either the father or the mother may be a citizen.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This is the same provision that is in the general law, and if such a situation applies to this bill, it applies to our general law.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. I gather from the gentleman's speech that this bill is retroactive. How far does it go back?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It goes back to the time the United States assumed its present relationships in the Panama Canal Zone under the treaty which went into effect February 26, 1904, and the reason for that is that there is now a second generation of children.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. I am very much concerned about the question raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]. It seems to me if we pass this bill, if we make a person who may now be construed as a citizen of Panama a citizen of the United States, he is then a citizen of two countries at one and the same time, which is not consistent. It appears to me that there should be some provision in the law that would require such a person to elect and allow him to remain a citizen of Panama, if he be now a citizen of Panama, or to submit a petition to become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will repeat to the gentleman that my own personal opinion is that something like that ought to be done, but the gentleman may not be aware of the fact that it is not unusual under our present law to have dual citizenship, I will not say with any country, but with many different countries of the world there are people who are citizens of the United States and citizens of some other country at the same time, so long as they have not taken the oath of allegiance.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 more minutes.

If a child is born of an American citizen, as the gentleman has so well presented, and if he were born in Panama, he could not very well be a citizen of Panama and still be an American citizen. Under the basic law, in filing a petition, he would have to take an oath of allegiance. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is true under our law as it exists now, but under the second provision, if the further condition existed, and his parents were American citizens and employees of the Government or of the railroad, then he would be relieved. His status would not be any different. He would simply be relieved of the necessity of coming back to the United States and living here 5 years prior to his eighteenth birthday.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Does the gentleman insist that the people affected by this proposed act would have to do anything by way of application to any court or any other authority or assume any oath of allegiance to the United States in order to receive the benetfis of this act? Such a position is absolutely unsupported by any language in the bill or in the law as it exists.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not think the gentleman understands or has read the naturalization law. He is just making a guess at it.

Mr. TARVER. That is only one of the things about which the gentleman from New York is misinformed.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The organic law provides for a proper oath of allegiance.

Mr. TARVER. I have asked the gentleman a question and he seems unable to answer it. May I repeat the question so that he may have an opportunity to answer it, as in the further discussion he may have forgotten all about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have not devoted a great deal of study to this measure. However, it seems to me that the bill could be materially improved if it provided that the offspring of father or mother, citizen of the United States, shall be legitimate. I suggest to the chairman that the bill be amended so as to provide that these children shall be legitimate offspring of the father or the mother, or preferably of both.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. I notice in the letter of the Secretary of War, on page 4 of the report, that he transmits a bill prepared under the direction of the Governor of the Panama Canal, after extensve studies into the question. We have these questions up more or less in the Committee on Merchant Marine, affecting the Panama Canal, and have great respect for their conclusions. My inquiry is whether this bill, S. 2416, is identical in text with the bill that was transmitted by the Secretary of War, as stated on page 4 of the report.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. As I understand it, the bill was drafted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the chairman of the committee know about that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is the same identical bill that passed the Senate, and the committee has not changed it.

Mr. CULKIN. I am inquiring whether it is the bill that was transmitted by the Secretary of War, after a draft by the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know, but I have been so informed. It was not alone prepared by them, but the Governor of Panama and the State Department were called in on it.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, there is a tremendous problem there. During the construction of the Canal, after repeated failures, they finally decided on labor from the Barbadoes, and there are a great many of them there at the present time. I assume that this would confer citizenship on them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It would not. The father or the mother must be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CULKIN. That is the full scope of the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes. That disposes of that question. I think there is another objection to the bill, however, and that is that it applies only to employees of the Panama Railroad. It seems to me it ought to apply to any American citizen who happens to be in Panama or in the Canal Zone, regardless of whether they are employed by this railroad.

Mr. CULKIN. I think that will be clarifying, and I think the children of men who go down there to work in the Tropics should not be penalized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has control of the time. He has yielded 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I assumed that the gentleman from Tennessee would yield some time to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has control of this hour, and unless he yields to the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair cannot recognize the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Obviously there is no quorum present.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). Three hundred and twenty-three Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects: First, capital gains-and-loss tax; and, second, Nazi activities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CITIZENSHIP OF CERTAIN CLASSES OF PERSONS BORN IN THE CANAL ZONE OR THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure. It is not a measure of any great consequence from every angle. By that I mean it does not involve a question of constitutionality and if we do not pass it the Republic will not fall down about our heads, but it is a matter that we ought to understand.

I think this bill springs from a laudable sentiment. The Governor General of the Canal Zone has recommended it. I may say, however, the Secretary of State does not recommend it. Mme. Perkins does not recommend it wholeheartedly. She says she cannot find any serious objection to it, but that is as far as she goes. She says she is moved to that position because of the interest of the Governor General of the Canal Zone.

Now, what does the Governor General want to do? He wants to do what everybody who has ever been in Panama knows is, in some respect at least, a pretty good thing. Panama is the most polyglot place in the world. By that I mean there are more nationalities and more cross-breeds of all kinds in the Isthmus of Panama than any other place in the world. He wants to give the children of an American citizen who is down there legitimately the right to American citizenship. But this bill goes further than that. It goes entirely too far. I will recite the facts and see if you do not agree with me. The Canal Zone is American territory. It is only 10 miles wide across the isthmus. The land on either side of this 10-mile strip is the Republic of Panama. You would not want to give the people of the Republic of Panama any more rights than you would give to the people of Canada. From the standpoint of sanitation and wholesome environment, Panama is one of the worst places in the world.

If a man who is an American citizen goes into Panama and lives with some woman and a child is born, even an illegitimate child, that child may under this law become an American citizen, whether it wants to be or not. We ought not do that. We do not do that with Canada. In order for a child to become an American citizen, born in Canada, it must be the child of American parents. Both the parents must be American citizens. This bill provides for a child of one American parent. It does not provide that that child must be the issue of a lawful marriage. If the laws of Panama were to provide that when an unmarried Panamanian woman can establish that the father of her child is an American, then that child is included in this bill. That ought not to be.

We should also strike out section 2 of this bill. Section 1 of this bill provides that any child born on the Isthmus of Panama, and by that I mean the Canal Zone, 10 miles wide, if his father is an American citizen, he becomes an American citizen. The United States Government controls a strip 10 miles wide across the Isthmus of Panama. The principal occupation is working for the railroad. The Panama Railroad is just a legal fiction in a way. It is owned by the Government of the United States. The Government cannot own a railroad, hence it builds up the Panama Railroad, and owns, I think, the whole town of Cristobal on the Atlantic side, and the town of Balboa on the other side. In the 10-mile-wide strip the railroad company owns much of the property, and what the railroad company does not own belongs to the United States Government.

Now, what do they seek to do? The bill covers more territory than is necessary. I think everybody in this House would be willing to grant citizenship to an American citizen who was working down there, or a soldier, who has his wife with him. If a child is born to them in the Canal Zone, why not make this child an American citizen? Up to this time, under some conditions, they cannot become American citizens, even though both parents are American citizens. The child cannot be an American citizen because, as I understand it, there is some misunderstanding with reference to the organic law which set up the Panama Canal Zone. I do not know the exact facts in this respect, else I would elaborate on this point.

I do not want to get the reputation of being against everything which the Immigration Committee reports out, but I do want to impress upon you that we do not want to be misled by something that even Mme. Perkins does not endorse wholeheartedly and something which the Secretary of State will not endorse at all. We ought not to give these people any more than we give the people in Canada or Mexico. Somebody asked me here what would be the result if an American had married a French woman down there. Well, he knew she was a French woman when he married her. We should not give him any more rights than anybody else. We should not give his children the right of full citizenship. If he married an American citizen, then we should give that child full rights. We are not taking any rights from him. He should not ask for more rights than he would have if he married a French woman in France.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. I did not favor this bill when it was presented in the committee. I suggested that we strike out the words "father or mother", and insert in lieu thereof by amendment "and mother."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is exactly right, as far as it goes.

Mr. KRAMER. That was my amendment, and I am sorry I was not present when the bill was passed out of committee, or I would have insisted on that amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he would agree to that amendment when this bill is taken up for consideration under the 5-minute rule? Will he consent to amending the first section and making it read "father and mother", so that we can do what the Director General of the Zone is trying to do. If he will do that, then I will make no effort to defeat the bill. Of course, I may not be able to do it anyway, but I can try it.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. You cannot strike out section 2 because the mothers go to the hospital in Panama to have their children born, and if you strike out this section, then those children cannot come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There is an arrangement between the United States Government and Panama, and I am sure that the United States has full control of that large, beautiful hospital. When we built the Panama Canal it was stipulated that the city of Panama would have to yield to the United States Government many concessions for the purpose of constructing and supervising the water system of the city of Panama, which is in Panama, so we could stop all the yellow fever and other similar tropical diseases. Right outside of the 10-mile Canal Zone is the city of Panama. At first glance it looks to be a city of not more than 15,000, but there are many thousands of people in the city. The streets in some of the congested residence sections are narrow, not much wider than the width between these rows of seats. This is one of the oldest cities in the Western Hemisphere. It is not wise for us to become involved in the civic life or national interests of the Republic of Panama or the city of Panama. If we do this we will not be able to stop with Panama. I know a lot of people—I would not call them the best people—but a lot of good people, who work in the Canal Zone and who have their real homes up in Costa Rica, for instance, 100 miles up the coast. They go to Costa Rica and have their homes there and, of course, their children are born there. This law should apply to them also, but it will not. The people find themselves there in an unfortunate situation. I am not saying anything against the citizens of the Republic of Panama, but for over 400 years the Isthmus of Panama has been a crossroads for all the peoples of the world. I shall say no more on that subject, and I pause to inquire why we have not yet gotten the answer of the chairman as to whether he will agree to my proposed amendments.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. So many suggestions have been made to me that if I were to agree to all of them I could not recognize the original bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then I feel impelled in my own weak way, to call upon the House, if the chairman will not agree to these amendments, to beat this bill on the first vote. We ought to beat it in its present form. It is a terrible concession. The Secretary of State does not want it; the Secretary of Labor does not say that it is necessary. You know that you ought not to give any rights to those people down there in the Canal Zone, and especially in the Republic of Panama, that you do not give to people in Canada. If you refuse to pass this bill, we are not going to take any rights from anybody. Of course, we are all willing, as I have already stated, to give to the children of American parents every consideration, and this applies to our men in the Army in the Canal Zone and thousands of other fine American citizens down there. Why, of course, their babies ought to be American citizens. Let us give them that right. That is what they started out to do in this bill, but let us not give everybody from there to the Equator on the south and to the city of Mexico on the north the right to become American citizens. Look at the involvements we would have. You would have nothing but eternal trouble down there.

What is the use of being so free with American citizenship when it is the most priceless heritage we have? What is the use of peddling it around this way? Why, we make the Germans, the Irish, the English when they come to our shores to become citizens reside in our country for 5 years. I call on you in the interest of fair play to ourselves and our American people in other sections of the world, let us beat this bill today. We can then take up another bill another day, when the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Labor and the Congress shall have had time to consider it thoroughly.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Should we not preserve this priceless heritage of American citizenship for America whether the advantage be for American industries, for American labor, or for any other class of her citizens?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Surely we should. When an American citizen goes down there he goes advised of the circumstances. Yes, I say, let us treat them as we treat our citizens in Canada, Germany, and elsewhere.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. Would the gentleman be satisfied if the bill were amended to strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and", so it will read "father and mother"?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What about the Republic of Panama proposition? That is where we are going to have lots of trouble.

Mr. KRAMER. That will be necessary, if the gentleman understood it, because American citizens go there to avail themselves of hospital facilities, and a baby born in the hospital at Panama would be born in Panama.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have asked the gentleman from New York if he would agree to certain amendments; if he does not agree then let us fight it out.

Mr. KRAMER. I am asking the gentleman if he would agree to this amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. At the present time I do not want to agree to it, for I should like to have the bill amended so as to do what should be done.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCHULTE].

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced at the request of American citizens, fathers, and mothers whom we sent down to the Panama Canal, sent by the American Government in 1904.

The gentlemen from Ohio seeks to strike out section 2, which is practically the meat of the bill, that any person born in the Republic of Panama on or after February 26, 1904—that is the date that they were sent down to the Panama Canal Zone to operate that Canal for the convenience of the United States Government. These people, as I said in the beginning, were sent down there in 1904. Thus a period of 34 years has expired since that time. Those folks have had children. It is the second generation that we are trying to give citizenship to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman mean to say that this would not apply to people who just went down there 5 years ago?

Suppose an American man and his wife went down there 5 years ago and a baby is born. According to this language you do not want them included.

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes; that is included in here.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. They ought to be included.

Mr. SCHULTE. This goes back to 1905. The fact is, they have no hospital in the Canal Zone proper. The hospital is located across the boundary and is controlled by the Panamanian Government, with the result that the mothers must go to the hospital located in that foreign territory. The child is born over there, and automatically if both parents are not American citizens the child is not an American.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. If two Americans go to France—the gentleman, myself, or anybody else, with his American wife—the children born over there are Americans, are they not?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not this mean, then, if a person goes to Panama and he marries a foreigner that the children become American citizens?

Mr. SCHULTE. No. I may say to the gentleman that Panama is a "no man's land." That is the point we are trying to make.

Mr. MAVERICK. Even if born over in the Panama Republic? Suppose a child was born in France or any other foreign country, both of the parents have to be American citizens in order for the child to be an American citizen?

Mr. SCHULTE. No.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I cannot yield.

The question is, Are we going to restore citizenship to those people who left the shores of this country and went down there to render service to the United States? The Panama Canal Railroad referred to is the property of the Government. The Canal Zone itself is the property of the Government. It is stated in section 2 of this bill:

> Any person born in the Republic of Panama on or after February 26, 1904, and whether before or after the effective date of this act, whose father or mother or both at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States employed by the Government of the United States or by the Panama Railroad, is declared to be a citizen of the United States.

A great many things have been said about the Panama Canal Zone. Unfortunately I have never had the pleasure of visiting that particular place. A great many aspersions have been cast upon that little republic down there or upon that little zone. However, I am not apprehensive of that. The thing I have in mind is that we should be fair with those who were sent down there in the past, and we certainly should not deny their children's children the right of citizenship because they were serving the American Government in a "no man's land."

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. With reference to section 1, does the gentleman tell us a child born in the Canal Zone now is an American citizen regardless of who its father or mother is?

Mr. SCHULTE. No; it is not.

Mr. COCHRAN. If that be so, why does not the gentleman add to section 1 the same words that are used in section 2, that the children must be the son or daughter of someone employed by the United States Government or a member of the military or naval forces of the United States! There are a lot of people in Panama and a lot of people living in the Canal Zone who are not employed by the Government or in the military or naval forces of the United States. Section 2 has the proviso; why not put it in section 1, which is wide open?

Mr. SCHULTE. This bill does not apply to those people nor can they take advantage of this bill. The bill gives the right only to those who are employed by the Federal Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does this act give to persons in the Canal Zone a superior right over persons going to other foreign countries?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me answer that in this way: Under the general law as it exists today, if an American citizen goes to any foreign country, it does not matter whether that citizen is father or mother, if either one of the parents is an American citizen, the children born are American citizens. There is the requirement, however, that prior to their eighteenth birthday they must come back to this country and spend at least 5 years as a resident of the United States, and 6 months after reaching their majority they must apply for United States citizenship. I mean by that, they must take the obligation.

The Canal Zone is a "no man's land." Every place in the world except the Canal Zone has been covered by either the law of 1855, which applies to foreign countries, or by the fourteenth amendment, which applies to the United States and its possessions. That answers the Canal Zone question.

The reason the provision is in there with reference to the Republic of Panama is because the people of the Canal Zone go over there in maternity cases. It is the only hospital they have. We have required that they not only be born of American citizens but also that those citizens be employed by the United States Government or by the Panama Railroad.

The only advantage they have through this act over children born in any country in the world is the relief from that requirement to come back here and spend 5 years. The reason they are included is because it is the sentiment of the committee that it is not fair to require employees of the United States Government to send their children back here for 5 years. We do not require it of the Army, the Navy, or the people attached to the various United States posts throughout the world.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is just exactly what I was trying to tell the gentleman from Indiana. You provide that in section 2, but in section 1 you do not provide that they must be employed by the United States Government or be a member of the Military or Naval Establishment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The reason for that is that section 1 applies to the Canal Zone, which, to all intents and purposes, is United States territory, and ought to be governed by the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; but there are a lot of people in the Canal Zone who are not American citizens, and neither the man nor the woman is an American citizen, and there are American citizens in the Canal Zone not employed by the Government.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This bill applies only to the offspring of American citizens.

Mr. COCHRAN. Furthermore, may I say to the gentleman, if I am not mistaken there is a very fine hospital in the Canal Zone, I think, at Ancon.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That was the information before our committee. I know nothing about it.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KRAMER. The gentleman knows that when I came before the committee the first time I raised an objection to the word "or" in line 5 and made the suggestion that it should be stricken out, so that the phrase would read "father and mother", striking out the following words "or both", and that the same thing be done in section 2, and stated I would then have no objection to the bill. I raised before the committee the very objection that has been raised here on the floor today.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KRAMER. I believe the gentleman was with me on my suggestion at that time. I am sorry I could not appear before the committee when the bill was voted out, for I would have made the same objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say that is a correct statement. We had a second day's hearing, when these other facts were laid before us, and by a unanimous vote of those present the bill was reported out in its present form.

Mr. KRAMER. Was there a quorum?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If we wrote into the bill the requirement which the gentleman wanted we would be placing higher requirements on our own citizens in the Canal Zone than we place on them in France, Germany, Italy, Japan, China, and every other nation in the world.

Mr. KRAMER. How so?

Mr. DIES. I think that is an inaccurate statement.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is not.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman let me tell him why? Because in the case of other countries you require the child to return and do certain things as a prelude to becoming a citizen, but in this case you do not require any such thing.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; but let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that under the provision suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] you would have required both the parents to become American citizens, and we do not require that anywhere else in the world.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will yield just this one time and very briefly, because I want to make a concluding statement.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states that children born abroad of American parents must return to this country for 5 years before they are 18 years of age if they want to become American citizens?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If they are born outside of the United States they must return and spend at least 5 years here prior to their eighteenth birthday.

Mr. RICH. If not, they must take an obligation when they return. What is this obligation? Is it an obligation to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No. If they do not return and spend 5 years here prior to their eighteenth birthday, they must be naturalized just like a foreigner coming in.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield just briefly.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it not true that the law applies only to children of the father?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That was true prior to 1934. In 1934 the law was amended to allow citizenship to descend by the mother as well as the father, but the 5-year residential restriction was added.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman tell us why the committee did not report out a bill making the same provision for the Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama as for other countries?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. This is the last time I can yield. I have stated three times that the Canal Zone is in every sense of the word United States territory and should be covered by the fourteenth amendment. The Republic of Panama is foreign territory and should be covered by the law of 1855, and is covered by it, with the amendment of 1934. The only thing this bill does is relieve such children of the necessity of returning and spending 5 years here prior to their eighteenth birthday.

Mr. MOTT. Why relieve them of that requirement if it is required of all others?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Because they are employees of the United States Government. We do not require it of our men in the Army, the Navy, or any other service.

I am sorry I cannot yield further.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman answer another short question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am sorry, I cannot yield further.

It seems to me we are making a great to-do over a rather simple measure, which is here simply due to the fact that a territory over which we exercise jurisdiction as a part of the United States——

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This is a territory over which we exercise jurisdiction.

Mr. MOTT. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPARKMAN. These citizens are entitled to all of the rights of citizens anywhere in the United States.

Mr. MOTT. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This law gives such rights to them, and I submit the House ought to pass this measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently, a quorum is not present.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] again makes the point of order a quorum is not present.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. The Chair has already announced a quorum is not present, and the House has refused a call of the House.

Mr. DOWELL. Only one motion now can be made, and that is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division on the motion for a call of the House.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 52, noes 37.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 131]

Allen, Pa.	Ditter	Kerr	Reece, Tenn.
Andresen, Minn.	Dixon	Kloeb	Reed, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). Three hundred and thirty-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio) there were—ayes 99, noes 45.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-four Members present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 145, not voting 137, as follows:

[Roll No. 132]

Mr. SPENCE changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. GARRETT changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

The SPEAKER. The vote on this bill is so close that the Chair feels justified in requiring a recapitulation of the vote. The Clerk will call the names of those who voted "aye."

The Clerk called the names of those who voted "aye."

The SPEAKER. The purpose of the recapitulation is to learn whether or not all Members are recorded correctly on the roll call of those who voted "aye." If there are any corrections to be made in the record of the roll call, Members will make it known.

The Clerk will call the names of the Members who voted in the negative.

The Clerk called the names of those who voted "no."

The SPEAKER. Are any corrections desired on this recapitulation of those who voted in the negative.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia desires to change his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This is a recapitulation of the vote that was cast?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman from West Virginia voted "no" on the original roll call, and therefore his vote should be so recorded.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, the vote has not been announced, and I have a right to change my vote.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order. It has been held by Speakers heretofore that on a recapitulation there could be a change in a Member's vote. On March 16, 1934, in the second session of the Seventy-third Congress (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4700), during the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill, Mr. Speaker Rainey held that before the final result of a recapitulation was announced, any Member might change his vote. In so ruling Speaker Rainey cited a similar ruling by Speaker Gillette as a precedent.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order that the gentleman from West Virginia at this stage of the proceedings cannot change his vote before the vote is announced?

Mr. DOWELL. When there is a recapitulation, it is to determine the vote that was cast, and my point is that when that vote has been cast and the recapitulation shows that it is correct, that is the vote to be announced.

The SPEAKER. In answer to the point of order the Chair refers to section 3123, volume 8, Cannon's Precedents. The syllabus recites that "under the more recent practice recapitulation of a vote may be had either before or after the announcement of the result of the vote."

There has been no announcement on the part of the Chair of the result of the vote.

A Member may change his vote at any time before it is announced.

That was held by Mr. Speaker Gillette. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order. The vote of the gentleman from West Virginia will be changed from "no" to "aye."

Mr. AMLIE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "aye" to "no."

The SPEAKER. The vote will be changed from "aye" to "no."

Mr. CARTER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. CARTER. To inquire as to whether or not I am recorded in the negative. I did not hear my name called on the recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as voting "no."

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania changes his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. RAMSPECK rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I want to know whether I can vote. I just came into the Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot vote at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. KRAMER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. KRAMER. To see if I am recorded as voting "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman voted "no."

Mr. KRAMER. I change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. Are there any other corrections? [After a pause.] On this vote the yeas are 146 and the nays 144.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting a number of names, about 10 or 15 names of places of alien Nazis in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a letter I have received.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include brief excerpts from a grand-jury indictment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include a letter addressed to the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an editorial appearing in the United States News.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a copy of the District of Columbia minimum-wage law. I do this for the information of Members, as there has been a considerable demand for this information. This law was passed in 1918 and declared unconstitutional in 1923, and that decision was reversed in 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey and Mr. SHANLEY asked and were granted permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 6906. An act to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording;

H. R. 6958. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7564. An act to permit the erection of the Shenandoah Memorial in or near Ava, Ohio.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2193. An act to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LANZETTA, for 1 day, to attend a funeral.

To Mr. GRAY of Indiana, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. DOXEY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. SMITH of Maine, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, July 29, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Committee on Naval Affairs will hold continued hearings on H. R. 5529, to replace the airship Los Angeles, Thursday, July 29, 1937, at 10:30 a. m.

Hearings previously scheduled on H. R. 7809, to promote the efficiency of the Navy by creating a transferred regulars list, amending the laws relating to retirement and promotion, and for other purposes, has been postponed from Thursday until some later date, due to the fact that the bill to replace the Los Angeles is still before the committee.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., Friday, July 30, 1937. Business to be considered: Hearing on House Joint Resolution 260 and Senate Joint Resolution 95, Federal Trade Commission investigation of public utilities, electric energy.

ACTIVITIES OF AMERICAN COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 137, which some weeks ago was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and subsequently also reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. If the consideration of the resolution involves any debate, I will not press the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 137) submitted by Mr. SMITH on May 24, 1937, subsequently reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and also from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of (1) the activities of the American Cotton Cooperative Association in connection with the grading, stapling, reconcentration, and marketing of cotton financed by the Federal Government by means of loans and advances made by the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Cotton Producers Pool, and (2) the profits derived by such association and other persons and the losses incurred by farmers as a result of such activities. The committee shall report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents of persons, firms, and corporations who have dealt in any of such cotton, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have shown the Senatortor from South Carolina an amendment I desire to offer enlarging the scope of the proposed investigation. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if he will accept the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. I will.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment, Mr. President. My attention was diverted. What is the nature of the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina states, as the Chair understands, that the resolution was unanimously reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will state that I know that my colleague, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was very much interested in the particular subject covered by the resolution, and I would appreciate the courtesy if the Senator from South Carolina would wait until I may wire him concerning the measure.

Mr. SMITH. The junior Senator from Alabama was present in the committee when it was voted to report the resolution favorably.

Mr. BLACK. On that statement, then, I shall offer no objection. I myself am not familiar with the resolution.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator's colleague was present in the committee when the vote was taken to report the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now offer the amendment referred to by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated:

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 11, after the word "activities", it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

(3) the bona fides of membership in the American Cotton Cooperative Association or its affiliates, its interlocking directorates, if any, its financial structure and operations, whether or not such American Cotton Cooperative Association is a cotton cooperative or is simply a buying and selling organization for the benefit of its officers, the lending of money by the Government to individual associations for the use of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, its operations with the seed-loan borrowers, the solvency or insolvency of it or its various member associations, its borrowing money from the Farm Credit Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation, or other governmental agencies and from private companies, its present indebtedness to the Government or its agencies, any speculations made by said association or its members in cotton, the interest rate it pays or has paid to the Government or its agencies and the interest rate it charges or has charged the farmers, waiver of prior liens by the Government or its agencies, the American Cotton Cooperative Association or its affiliates' investments in real estate and a complete accounting of the Farm Credit Administration and its predecessors representing the Government with the American Cotton Cooperative Association and its affiliates, including total amount of losses sustained in dealing with the Government by the American Cotton Cooperative Association and its predecessors and affiliates up to date, and the total loss of the farmers and the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I support the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] to add a proviso on page 60, line 20, reading as follows:

Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection shall not be applicable with respect to any person employed in connection with the canning or other packing or packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges, fruit, maple sugar, or vegetables when the services of such person are of a seasonal nature and do not extend over total periods of more than 6 months in any one year.

I ask the Senator from Oregon if any other amendment of his is now pending?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I assume that is the amendment which I offered for consideration last evening prior to adjournment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the pending amendment is one offered by the Senator from Oregon on page 60, line 20. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair it is the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon yesterday afternoon.

Mr. MCNARY. Is it the amendment which I modified and offered late yesterday afternoon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senator from Oregon.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 60, line 20, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection shall not be applicable with respect to any person employed in connection with the canning or other packing or packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges, fruits, maple sugar, or vegetables, when the services of such person are of a seasonal nature and do not extend over total periods of more than 6 months in any one year.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I support the amendment and hope it will be adopted, so that in the event the bill should pass this part of the burden contained in the bill may be lifted from those affected by the exception.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator going to discuss the question why they should be excepted?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I intend to do so.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to know why they should be excepted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my understanding of the bill is necessarily limited to such study as could be made by a Senator not on the committee which considered the bill. Of course, in my own case I had the experience of hearing practically every word of testimony that was introduced on the Black 30-hour bill in 1935, which was reported favorably to the Senate, and relative to which I submitted a minority report which is quite complete, being Report No. 367, part, II, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

It seems to me there are so many outstanding objections to the bill which come within the scope of the study made 2 years ago that I cannot lend it my support. I think every Senator should ask with reference to this proposed legislation, What is the price of it? Assuming there are benefits, assuming there is a certain element of security which might be enforced upon the people from "on high" here in Washington, what is the cost of it? What does the farmer pay for it? What does the laborer pay for it? What do all the inhabitants of the United States pay for it?

As I discuss the matter, I want it understood that I assume every Senator as well as every other thinking person in the United States recognizes without debate the cost in dollars and cents, the cost in additional debt, and the cost in increased taxes; and that is the reason why I do not debate those elements of cost involved in the proposed program.

What I intend to discuss is the direct immediate economic loss to labor, the restrictions and limitations upon labor's right to contract and right to work or not to work, the curtailment of labor's opportunity to sell the only thing that labor has to sell for the number of hours that labor is willing to sell it, and for the price that labor is willing to ask for it. I shall discuss, if I can, that other cost to higher values, that cost of so great importance, the consideration of which, I think, has split this country politically and divided the thinking people of the United States into two camps, one of which is for the revolution of American institutions and American Government, and the other of which is for the preservation of the fundamentals, the retention of that division of sovereignty between the Central Government and the several States, and the perpetuation of that separation from each other of the different departments of Government.

I shall try to emphasize that great cost which all citizens of the United States must pay for this program in the loss of protection, in the loss of freedom, in the loss of independence, in the loss of incentive, in the loss of nearly all those spiritual values which have contributed to the superb achievements of the American people in business, in culture, in art, and in those social virtues which we have dubbed during the New Deal as "social justice." They are unequaled anywhere else on earth, and they have been acquired by virtue of those higher values which have been held dear to the hearts of all Americans and have inspired every individual in the country to be a rugged individualist and to contribute the best that God has helped him to give for the building up of a great nation, a leader among nations.

With respect to the price paid by agriculture, the enforcement of the industrial regulation imposed by the bill will adversely affect the agricultural industry of America. The farmer will not be exempted as the bill pretends that he will be from the effects of its provisions. When the board fixes codes of wages and hours for grain elevators, creameries, cotton gins, canning plants, compressors, packing plants, oil mills, and like character of plants throughout the agricultural sections of the country, it will be impossible to keep the action from extending directly or indirectly to agricultural employment in such sections.

Furthermore, the increased cost of operating all industries which handle agricultural products will be passed on to the farmer and will be reflected in reduced prices to him for his products.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BILBO. With the Senator's permission, I should like to offer an amendment to the pending amendment, so that the Senator may discuss it at the same time with the original amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to amend the pending amendment on line 4 by inserting, after the word "with", the words "the ginning of cotton."

Mr. AUSTIN. I assent to that, Mr. President. In fact, I think it is obvious to those who are interested in this measure that I would assent to the addition of every industry in the United States, because I believe the principle of the pending bill has been tried out and has failed. I am talking about the economic benefits that are sought for labor and industry.

Is there any difference in principle between this bill and the N. R. A.? Probably somebody can answer that question. It contains the centralized power of fixing codes and placing upon labor a strait jacket. The very first price that labor will realize here, in my opinion, is that it is in a strait jacket. Labor may work only so long as a Government at Washington tells labor it may work. No matter what the wages may be, is it not apparent that this element of the pending bill is identical with the N. R. A.? It fixes a limit to the pay envelope, regardless of the height of the rate of pay. It tends to destroy hope of progress.

By the operation of a statute through the executive department of the Government of the United States it effectually freezes the opportunity of labor to sell its services. You may assume whatever price per hour you wish to assume; I say labor will rue the day that it got itself or was forced into the position of a statutory monopoly of the right of labor to work.

Mr. President, is it possible that labor does not see this thing? I say no laborer in America should be so far degraded that he must submit to a supreme authority in Washington the question of how many hours he may work; and let no man undertake to say that this power is not given by the pending bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says labor should not submit to an authority prescribing the hours labor may work, or the wages it should have, referring now to minimum wages. The Senator would not carry that statement to its logical conclusion and say that labor should not be protected in some way against long hours or low wages, would he?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho expanded my statement to include wages, did he not?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I limited it to hours. I assumed in my statement the highest imaginable wages. I say, no matter what the wages may be, the fatal thing, the high price economically that labor pays for security, which we all want labor to have, is a freezing of the hours of the laborer's valuable life that may be used for the service of his fellow man and for the benefit of himself and his own family. That is what I said.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when I came to the Senate the steel industry was employing labor 12 hours a day and 7 days in the week. That, I am sure, the Senator would not advocate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. There had to be some way to stop it.

Mr. AUSTIN. As a matter of fact, there probably is no more glorious story of progress in humane relations between employer and employee anywhere else on earth than there has been in this free country; and how has it been done? By a supreme power, a fascistic power here in Washington bludgeoning labor and capital together? Or has it been done by the evolutionary process which is the result of intelligent cooperation and of intelligent competition—in other words, freedom; the right and the dignity of the laborer on his own part to say, "My service shall command such a price. I am willing to work so many hours. I have the right to say how long I will work and what price I shall get"?

It is through that process that progress in labor relations has been made, employer competing with employer all the time, a difficult and complex process, and a slow one, to be sure, but, nevertheless, steadily advancing and gaining all the time, reducing hours and increasing wages, until the men of this country are the finest laborers in all the world, and the women of this country are the smartest women in the world.

I have studied this problem, not merely by sitting here in the United States and looking around among my neighbors but also by examining the problem in Asia and in Europe under all kinds of governments and conditions; and I know as an eyewitness that there is no place on earth where the laborer and his wife are so fortunate as right here in the United States. They gained that wonderful position by virtue of free trade among the several States of the United States and a protected trade abroad.

Now, however, we are confronted by this fallacy, as I claim, of restricted, limited, regimented trade among the several States, and free trade abroad. Let us increase our business with the rest of the world. Let us invite here the products of the coolie, and set them up in our shops in competition with the products of men who are chattels, men who may not work more than a certain number of hours a day and a certain number of days a week. Put the products of cheap labor, rendered cheaper by the amazing generosity of the present administration, against the expensive and costly and well-made products of the United States, which will be made more costly, if the bill passes, by its restrictive clause reducing production.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I assume that the Senator believes in collective bargaining between labor and capital?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a fair assumption. He does.

Mr. WALSH. And collective bargaining can be successfully carried on, and to the welfare of the worker, only through the organization of workers. Is that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. The second premise is also correct.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. Then those workers and wage earners who are not organized, if they are to enjoy the benefits of collective bargaining, must organize and form unions or organizations of labor of one kind or another, or be assisted in collective bargaining and in preventing substandards by some governmental agency. Is not that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. Perhaps that is the solution. Certainly, however, it is not a solution for them to turn over to a government here at Washington the matter of bargaining for the sole thing of value they have to sell, and at the same time recognize the fundamental principle which this bill does recognize, that in this vast country of ours, spread over a whole continent, there are localities which differ from each other in respect of the kind of products that are produced; that they differ from each other in respect of the standards of living and the cost of living; that they differ from each other in respect of the advantages of transportation from them to their market and other things. I know the Senator from Massachusetts recognizes that the pending bill says to all the world that which the 30-hour bill of 2 years ago did not say: "We do not try to make a horizontal, level standard of hours and wages that is arbitrarily laid down over this vast continent, because it is absolutely unworkable"; and so we say, "Let this power at Washington adapt these hours and wage standards to the local conditions. There can be a set of codes and rules up in New England of one standard and another set in Louisiana of a different standard."

So the bill has done what in that respect? The bill has recognized what always ought to be recognized in the United States of America, as it was when we founded this Government, that for a great continent, with diverse interests, diverse cross sections of civilization, diverse products, there cannot be a centralized government at Washington applying one rule and one regulation over the entire country. We must recognize these diversities. Therefore I say that the aid which should come to the call of labor is the power and sovereignty of the several States. The bill has recognized that principle. The bill has no excuse for transgressing it, and it is a transgression of fundamental law to do it, as I hope to point out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a benefit which, in my opinion, the bill gives to employers, leaving aside, now, possible benefits to the millions of unorganized wage earners working in sweatshops and under other substandard labor conditions.

The Senator agrees with the principle of collective bargaining, and that it is operating successfully and beneficially to wage earners who are organized. This means that all employers who have organized wage earners working for them are compelled, by reason of the pressure of collective bargaining, to reduce their hours of employment and to increase their wages. Yet those very employers are compelled in the markets of the country to compete with employers who do not pay the wages the advanced and progressive employers do, and who require their employees to work long hours. So it seems to me one of the benefits of the pending bill is to raise the wages and to lower the hours of workers in the substandard industries, to the end that the industrialists who have good labor standards will not have to be subjected to ruthless competition from substandard industries.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the premise of the Senator from Massachusetts is perfectly accurate, and I wish to say to him that I know, from conversations with some industrialists in New England, that they would love to have the bill passed.

Mr. WALSH. I think that may be true of the larger units of industry that do not work their employees over 40 hours and have no wage under 40 cents per hour and that are now obliged, by collective bargaining, to meet these conditions, and it may be true of the units in large industries which are monopolistic and have not the fear of sweatshop competition and competition from industries which are substandard; but it is my judgment that most of the small industries, in every part of the country, New England included, are fearful of the bill, and they have some justification for that fear, because of lack of confidence in the inefficient administration of any law by a bureau. So I cannot agree with the Senator that there is a uniformity of approval of the bill among the the industries, even of New England. In fact, all industrials everywhere are opposed to subjecting their labor conditions to a Federal bureau.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not claim that. I do not think we disagree about the facts.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator, too—and he is pointing it out in his speech, as he has a right to do—that if the bill is not carefully administered, the net result will be injurious to the small industries of the country and promotive of the movement of all industry into monopoly, and as the next step in order to protect the consumers, as prices and wages go up and hours go down, there might have to be some legislation to control prices.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the judicial attitude of the Senator from Massachusetts. Of course, I should like to fight shoulder to shoulder with a man who takes the position he has indicated is his with respect to controversial matters. I cannot quite go with him, however, in this matter, as I am sure he understands.

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no doubt that what the Senator from Massachusetts says may be a consequence of this bill will occur, because it has occurred in another instance. We are not talking here about a theory which has never been tried. This principle was tried under the N. R. A., and the small industries went out of business. I can tell of a number of small manufacturers on our shining rivers up in the Green Mountains who had to break the law in order to live, and I can tell of others who complied with the law and died as an actual result thereof, obeying the terms of codes fixed by a centralized government under the advice of the big fellows, the conditions of whose operations were wholly and entirely different from the conditions of operation of the small industries.

For an example, there was a little mill which manufactured wooden golf tees on one of our small streams. Surrounding this mill were 20 small houses. There was nothing there at all for those people save that manufactory. I do not know the number of people there, but I guess there were a hundred altogether whose livelihood depended on that mill running.

The operator of the mill had no operating capital. He was operating on his contracts. He had contracts which required the delivery of the goods on time, because these goods are seasonal in character, and he had taken his contract to the bank, and the bank, out of a great deal of liberality to him, had taken that type of security and given him, by loan, the capital with which to operate. Along came the N. R. A. and commanded him, by virtue of codes that were made by his great competitors, to limit the hours of the work of those poor people, who were thoroughly satisfied with their condition, who loved their liberty and their ability to keep their heads aloft. The N. R. A. compelled him to turn those people out of the mill and lock the door at a certain hour of the day.

What was the effect? Had that man obeyed the law he would have locked his door permanently, because he could not find the capital wherewith to get the additional employees to come there and fulfill the contracts, in which time was of the essence of the contract, and on the breach or failure of which a penalty was imposed.

I wish to finish what I had started to say when I was interrupted. I started to point out that the bill is like the N. R. A. in respect of its capacity to freeze the opportunity of labor to work. I will read section 6 (a) found on page 62 of the bill:

> Unless an applicable order of the Board under this act shall otherwise provide, the maintenance among employees of an oppressive workweek shall not be deemed to constitute a substandard labor condition if the employees so employed receive additional compensation for such overtime employment at the rate of one and one-half times the regular hourly wage rate at which such employees are employed.

Why not leave that alone? Labor, do you hear my voice? Do you not want that opportunity to get time and a half? Can you get it? Hear the next sentence:

> But the Board shall have power to make an order determining that such overtime employment in any occupation shall constitute a substandard labor condition if and to the extent the Board finds necessary or appropriate to prevent the circumvention of this act.

It puts the power right in the fist of this great central Government, which, if we had passed the court reorganization bill, would have had nobody to stop it.

Time and a half? It may be enjoyed by you, Labor, if this centralized power in Washington does not deprive you of it by a finding, which cannot be meddled with, that it is appropriate to cut it off to prevent the circumvention of the act.

Let me say to labor, this measure is so tyrannical that if a laborer should happen to be on the premises after the hour when it has been determined by the Federal statute that he shall cease work, that would be prima-facie evidence that the act was being circumvented.

Mr. President, let us face this thing. In this country we depend on a market in Russia.; we depend on a market in France; we depend on a market in Japan and in China. In fact, labor has had that foreign market as one of its most stabilizing assets. What will this bill do to that?

One of the prices labor will pay for the security proposed to be provided by the bill is its liberty. "I lay down my liberty in order that I may buy the security which a benign master at Washington can give me." In a sentence that is the spirit of all legislation which undertakes to tamper with economic laws and to give the Federal Government the power to say what may be done in production, manufacture, and mining. It is proposed to give the Federal Government the power to violate the Constitution—not merely to regulate commerce among the several States but to reach within the State. Every one of these bills, by an artful device of language, undertakes to break through the barriers that our forefathers erected against the Central Government, and to reach into the State and undertake to regulate production and manufacture and mining.

Let me say, Mr. President, that this is not merely a price paid by labor; it is a price also paid by the employer, because if there is any one sure way of destroying capital, recognized by the Bolsheviks from the beginning, it is to get control of labor. A statutory control is better than any other, of course; but any kind of control of labor by government will ultimately enable government to seize capital by the throat.

Of course, it is better at the same time to have a breakdown of credit. That condition always expedites the process, because if a candidate for dictator wants to make speed toward his dictatorship he will get there a great deal faster if he can invent two crises where one crisis existed before. He is likely to be successful if he can beat the other fellow to two crises instead of one. So we always see devised for this purpose emergency—emergency!

Within a few months after the candidate for President was out on the stump bragging about the economic progress and recovery of this country, he was broadcasting that a tremendous emergency had arisen; and today, within 24 hours after his Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee bragged in Wisconsin about the continued advancement in prosperity of the country, we have this bill brought in here under the guise of emergency—of a crisis!

I may call attention to the testimony given on the 30-hour bill, which is applicable in principle to this bill, by Professor Saxon, who then was not in the employ of the Republican National Committee, as I understand, but was teaching in Harvard, and who had had business experience, and had made a special study of industry throughout the world. He said:

> I might say that unemployment in Great Britain is today at the lowest stage that it has been at any time since 1920, with the exception of the year 1926.
> All this has been effected without wage increases, reduction in hours of work, drastic price increases, limitation of production, et cetera. As a matter of fact, since the spring of 1933 our average price rise has been approximately 25 percent in finished goods and 38 percent in raw materials, while in England the maximum rise since the fall of 1921, when they suspended gold, has not exceeded 11 percent and for 3 years has held at not over 3 percent. In fact the trend has been toward lower real wages.

Mr. President, that is another price that labor must pay—lower real wages. That is to say, how much can be put in the market basket at the end of the period for the consideration found in the pay envelope? It makes very little difference how high wages may be in money denomination if the clothes the wage earner must wear, the food he must eat, the shelter he must have, cost so much more than they did before that the pay envelope will not buy as much of those things necessary for a good diet and a comfortable living.

Senators will study the record, I believe, in vain in an effort to prove from it either that the cost of production will not be increased, or that the price of living will not be increased; and labor will pay that price. There is a sales resistance on the part of every market to increases in the prices of goods offered for sale. It is followed by the taking of a diminished quantity. How will labor be affected by that?

I pointed out that I claim it will be affected by the price it has to pay; but it will also be affected in a worse and more serious way than that. It will be affected by the loss of employment, because in order to compete in the markets the producer, the manufacturer, must employ mechanization to reduce his costs, and mechanization to reduce costs drops men off the pay roll. Men are dropped off the pay roll in order to make it possible to lower costs, so that the goods may flow in the markets in competition with those that come here from countries where manufacturing is cheap.

With respect to our export trade, upon which a great many of our laborers depend for their employment, is it not obvious that a change of 33⅓ percent in the price Russia has to pay for the goods it buys of us would slow down the business; that Russia might go elsewhere than here to buy; that the Russians themselves might even develop manufacturing which would compete with us? I have used the figure 33⅓ percent because that was what the testimony showed the adoption of a 30-hour week would add in cost to the production of this country. Of course I recognize that the adoption of a 40-hour week would not involve so large an increase in cost; but, Mr. President, I have been unable to find in the present hearings evidence which would show what this increase of cost will be.

Against the export of goods we have the goods that we import. The goods that are imported, if they are of a similar character to the goods we produce in this country, represent labor. For example, a certain quantity of wheat imported would represent a certain number of farm laborers' work in this country to produce. That is so simple a proposition that anyone on earth will recognize it to be so. A shipload of shoes produced in a foreign country and brought in here would be in competition with American laborers making shoes. There is not any doubt about that, is there? And for every hour of work on that shipload of shoes it may be said that the laborers of this country have lost that hour of work.

Now we enter upon the fallacious plan, part of the New Deal, that we will reverse the system, we will reverse the plan and the policy that has made us great among the nations of the earth. Instead of having free trade among the several States, unregimented and flowing freely, but well regulated as interstate commerce, we will now regiment, we will now control it here at Washington. We will say that when goods cross a State boundary they shall conform to certain codes. And, so far as our foreign trade is concerned, we will reverse that, too, and instead of protecting labor here in America by a protective tariff, representing the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, we will now enter into that benevolent relationship of inviting more importations to our shores from foreign countries. In other words, we will "soak it" to labor in America, and we will bestow the benefits of the great American market to labor in Europe and in Asia. I am not for that, I am against it, and I shall continue to be against it just so long as I have the power to speak and to act.

But, Mr. President, however earnest I may be about that, what I claim is that the greatest cost to all the inhabitants of this country is the destruction of that higher value, a free government, a government that encourages the individual and incites him to do the most and the best that he can. The masses of the people are individuals. They are great; they are noble; they are productive if the individual is great and noble and productive, and they are just the reverse if they sell their liberty and their individuality and merge themselves in a mass and bow down to a centralized authority at Washington. That is what this bill and other bills of the New Deal contemplate. Why not be frank about it. There is a group in this country that do not like our Government. They want it changed; they are bound to change it. They know full well that if they went before the people of this country with a constitutional amendment designed to effectuate their purposes and offered it to them the people would emphatically say "No." So what do they do? They introduce a bill here providing just one little step in that direction and a bill over there making another step in that direction. If they could have secured the enactment of the court bill the Constitution could have been subverted and no citizen of this country would have had any sanctuary to which to resort for the protection of his civil rights or his economic rights or his liberty.

In this bill we find this language, appearing on page 55, section 8 (a).

SEC. 8. (a) Whenever the Board shall determine that any substandard labor condition exists in the production of goods in one State and that such goods compete to a substantial extent in that State with other goods produced in another State and sold or transported in interstate commerce, in the production of which such substandard labor condition does not exist, the Board shall make an order requiring the elimination of such substandard labor condition and the maintenance of the appropriate fair labor standard in the production of goods which so compete.

Mr. President, if that is not an artful, insidious, and cunning way of subverting the Constitution of the United States, tell me what it is. Senators, we have no business doing that. We have no power save the powers the people have given us by the Constitution. They have given us the power to regulate interstate commerce. Let us not by these sly and artful methods try to reach over that limitation and go into the States and regulate the production of goods, in the State of Vermont, for example. The board to be created, sitting here at Washington, is to tell a manufacturer in the State of Vermont, whose business is limited to the confines of that State, who does not sell a dollar's worth outside the State of Vermont, but all of whose business is intrastate, how many hours he may operate his plant and how many hours he may require his employees to labor. Why? Because when some big fellow from another State ships some goods into the State of Vermont he discovers, "Oh, the standard of living in Vermont is high." Why? Because the price of goods made by the manufacturer in Vermont is low and the contents of the wage envelope of his employees will buy more and fill the market basket higher than in the place where the big fellow operates his plant; and so the board at Washington says to him, "You have got to shut your doors at a certain hour of the day", and says to the laboring man there, "You cannot sell your time; you cannot sell your services beyond a certain length of time." Therefore, he has to ask in the State of Vermont a higher price for his goods, and he finds himself in impossible competition with the local manufacturer. Then, what happens? Under this tyrannical bill, if enacted, the Federal Government can go to the State of Vermont and undertake to regulate a purely domestic affair and impose a code on the manufacturer in the State of Vermont, who does not step outside of the State, just because he is in competition with the manufacturer from another State. Yes, we have got to roll up our trousers when it rains in Washington. That is the point of the program. That was the point of the court bill.

The only thing in the wide world that has preserved us from destruction as a free government has been the judiciary department. Yet the attempt was made to capture that department. Mr. President, if the court bill had passed and the Supreme Court had been packed and those members of that Court had passed upon the question of the constitutionality of the very act that seated them, where would we be? It would accomplish a coup d'etat as perfect and complete as if the United States Army was enforcing it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand from the remarks of the Senator from Vermont that he is looking now for safety to the Supreme Court so far as this proposed legislation is concerned, and he evidently expects the Supreme Court to say that Congress cannot regulate minimum wages and maximum hours. Is that the position of the Senator?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I would never be so intemperate as to take such a position. I am expressing my own opinions, and the opinions of no one else. I am praising a great court for a good record. Time after time it has stood as a barricade against crazy waves of emotionalism and suggestions of revolution and efforts to change and override the Constitution without submitting the question to the people. It has been the only sanctuary to which the laboring man could resort in order to be saved from having just what is proposed by this bill being brought about, namely, a statutory monopoly of him and his time and his wages. Strikes! Reserve the right to strike, and how long do you think, Mr. President, that it will operate? Once this step is taken, and the centralized Government here in Washington has obtained control of the hours as well as the wages of labor, do you think there will be any freedom left to labor to say whether or not it will work or not work?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Do you think there will be any safety in a strike which the centralized Government thinks ought not to take place? I say, once you start this thing you will destroy all elements of freedom that labor now enjoys. I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has made a very forceful argument upon his side of the case on the destruction of liberty of the worker if he is protected by law from unfair wages and conditions. I have thousands of letters from workers throughout the country. I have one very short letter from the city of New Orleans from a worker himself. I wonder if the Senator would object to my sending that letter to the desk and having it read in order that we may get the viewpoint of one of the workers?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection at all; but I wish, Mr. President, if it is not out of order and unseemly, to say to my colleague from Alabama that I recognize his idealism and broadmindedness; I know he has studied this problem with sincerity and that he has achieved a wonderful improvement in the bill. I will say that I think, from his point of view, that the proposal now being considered is far superior to the original plan of a horizontal fixation of hours and wages, as conceived in the original hour and wage bill. I compliment the Senator from Alabama upon that service.

Mr. BLACK. I appreciate the Senator's statement.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not agree with him, but we do not have to be unfriendly because of that.

Mr. BLACK. I thoroughly understand that, and I agree with the Senator, and I appreciate his statement. I wanted to get in the RECORD the letter at this point on the other side of the question of liberty, and for that reason only.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am quite ready to have the Senator do it. I will be glad to have the letter read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 19, 1937.

Senator BLACK,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: After reading your wonderful talk on your policy to aid workers in the Times-Picayune, I thought about writing you and telling you some of the working conditions in New Orleans. I have been a baker all my life and never have seen conditions as they are now. The majority of the shops work long hot hours with very little pay. They work on an average of 13 or 14 hours per day, and on week ends work 18 hours or over. I cannot say anything under this corruption, as we poor will lose our slaving jobs. I want to continue to exist. We have to take it and like it, as there is hundreds of other starving men with families waiting to take our job for a salary of $10 to $15 a week or even less. Some of the expenses we have to meet on that small sum: Rent, $18; water, $1.75; gas and light, $4 to $5; food, clothes, medical care, carfare, lunch—if there is anything to take along. As for amusement and recreation, it is out of the question. We are too tired, weak, and penniless. Its from work to bed and from bed to work. I firmly believe the life of a mule is better than the one of a poor working man, because they at least have their Saturday night and Sunday off, while we work 7 days a week and no days off—no rest, very little to eat, underweight, and undernourished, health ruined and life shortened. So unless something is done for the laboring people, and done soon, Heaven will be our only hope.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I believe that letter was written from Louisiana?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Wherever it is from, I should not like to consider that picture as accurate of all laborers in that State. I hardly believe the Senator from Alabama regards that as typical. I have no doubt he could produce a great many letters from all over the United States picturing very sad conditions which we all desire to alleviate and expect to alleviate. In doing so, however, we must consider the cost. My whole argument has been in favor of improving and ameliorating the conditions of labor. It has been against paying the price which this bill would make labor pay. That is the point.

Let me read a statement from another laborer which I think bears on the principle we are here discussing. I take this from an editorial published in the Burlington Free Press and Times of February 5, 1935. I invite particular attention to the following excerpt from the editorial:

This point of view is well set forth in an article by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, published in The Magazine of Wall Street.

Mr. President, I am firmly of the belief that the American Federation of Labor believes in what I am about to read:

Mr. Woll declares most emphatically that labor does not want any form of dictatorship. He said:

"Yet it is apparent that we are drifting toward some form of radical collectivism which seems to be a mixture of German Hitlerism and Italian fascism. If some of the present tendencies are not checked, if we do not regard more seriously essential principles which have been traditional since the founding of the Nation, we may find in the very near future that most of us are working directly for the Government or under orders from Washington."

That is what I am saying. I say when the Government at Washington, an executive department, can be vested with judicial power forbidden by the Constitution, when power can be handed out by the Congress of the United States to a department to step over the State lines and exercise the judicial function of finding facts and judging upon them with reference to labor within the States, labor engaged in nothing more than production, manufacturing, or mining, then labor will already have put itself within the powerful arm of despotism.

I desire to call particular attention also to this statement in the editorial, being a quotation from Mr. Woll:

Organized labor reserves the right to bargain collectively with employers without interference by government unless there be unusual violence in connection with a strike—then it becomes a matter for local or State police.

Not the Federal Government, not a board here at Washington appointed by the President of the United States, subject to removal by the President of the United States and under his control.

For the past 2 decades the relations between workers and employers have been steadily improving.

This is a quotation from a laborer that all the world knows well and in whom all the world has confidence.

But for the past year and a half, with government taking a hand and undertaking to settle all disputes by governmental fiat, has produced a record of unsual disputes and strikes.

Is not that according to facts? Every listener is a witness to that fact.

Organized labor and employers should be encouraged to settle their disputes as between themselves and without any assistance by commands and prohibitions devised by academic theorists in or out of Government service.

Mr. President, I ask that the entire editorial may be incorporated at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Burlington Free Press and Times of Feb. 5, 1935]

LABOR AND CAPITALISM

Organized labor is a stanch defender of capitalism, because it is realized by well-informed labor leaders that the moment capitalism gives way to fascism, communism, or any other system of a similar nature the Government will become the master and the worker will be its slave, without bargaining power. That is the case in Russia today, and to a lesser degree in Italy and Germany.

This point of view is well set forth in an article by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, published in the Magazine of Wall Street. Mr. Woll declares most emphatically that labor does not want any form of dictatorship. He said:

"Yet it is apparent that we are drifting toward some sort of radical collectivism which seems to be a mixture of German Hitlerism and Italian fascism. If some of the present tendencies are not checked, if we do not regard more seriously essential principles which have been traditional since the founding of the Nation, we may find in the very near future that most of us are working directly for the Government or under orders from Washington.

"Organized labor, in the second place, does not want any form of inflation", Mr. Woll declared. "Inflation is the inevitable outcome of a steadily increasing public debt.

"Our public debt—national, State, and local—is increasing at a terrifying rate. It must not be forgotten that the easiest way to turn a democratic government into some form of dictatorial collectivism is by running it so deeply into debt that business and industry can no longer carry the burden. This is the road along which we are traveling and will continue to travel unless and until the voters take the matter into their own hands and see to it that campaign promises of balanced budgets, economy in the conduct of government, and a gradual lessening of the economic burden under which taxpayers are staggering are kept."

Mr. Woll declared that what the working people of the United States want more than anything else is not charity but work. He said Government relief must be paid eventually by the people through taxes. "It makes no difference whether these taxes are paid in the first instance by big business, industry, the public utilities, the banks, or insurance companies, it is the ultimate consumer who pays them in the end, for they must be reflected in the price of everything which he has to buy for himself and his family.

"Organized labor wants to see a check placed on the further extension of Government into our economic life. By this I do not mean that business should not be regulated by certain forms of restrictive legislation. Natural monopolies such as the public utilities and the railroads must be regulated with a firm hand in the interests of both the public and the security holders in these enterprises. Insurance companies must be regulated in the interests of their policyholders for whom, after all, they act in a purely fiduciary capacity. Banks must be regulated in the interests of their depositors, their stockholders, and their customers for credit.

"But when I say that labor wants to see a very definite check placed on undue Government interference in business, I mean, first of all, the rapidly growing tendency on the part of Government to compete with its own citizens which, if carried out to its logical conclusion, must eventually lead to political ownership and operation of all of the processes of production and distribution. This may satisfy the aspirations of the average foreign worker but is entirely foreign to the aspirations of the average American worker."

Mr. Woll said electric utilities have done many things for which they should be condemned, resulting in rates out of all proportion to the service rendered, but added:

"I wonder, however, if they are seeking the solution of public-utility problems in quite the right way. The Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars—which will eventually run into billions—of the taxpayers' money in order to engage in a constructive competitive battle with its own citizens, and I sometimes wonder if the public really knows what the Government's hydroelectric policy, coupled with its policy of stimulating municipalities to go into the electric-light and power business in competition with local plants, really means to every man, woman, and child in the United States.

"First, it is bringing about the destruction of billions of dollars of security values, representing tangible operating enterprises in which millions of people have a very definite stake. These people are not confined to the security holders themselves. Every owner of an insurance policy is affected, because this scheme of political sabotage must affect insurance-company reserves established for the protection of the policyholder. In the same manner every man or woman who has a savings-bank account is affected, for the banks have hundreds of millions of dollars invested in public-utility bonds. Organized labor is no more in favor of political sabotage than it is in favor of industrial sabotage."

Mr. Woll declared he believed regulation of utilities in the public interest, so that the public will receive a maximum amount of service at a minimum cost, is preferable to Government competition to drive out the private utilities. He did not believe successful Government regulation to be impossible, as some say. With courageous officials appointing courageous and fair-minded men to public-service commissions, regulation can be made successful.

Mr. Woll is concerned over what will happen to the workers in privately owned and operated public utilities, such as coal, oil, gas, and transportation industries, if Government competition continues. He foresees the Government moving large industrial establishments where they can use the power developed in its hydroelectric plants, without regard to the effect on the community or workers in the industry, or else building factories of its own to enter into destructive competition with private industry.

"Organized labor reserves the right to bargain collectively with employers without interference by government unless there be unusual violence in connection with a strike—then it becomes a matter for local or State police. For the past two decades the regulations between workers and employers have been steadily improving. But for the past year and a half, with government taking a hand and undertaking to settle all disputes by governmental fiat, has produced a record of usual disputes and strikes. Organized labor and employers should be encouraged to settle their disputes as between themselves and without any assistance by commands and prohibitions devised by academic theorists in or out of Government service."

If this viewpoint represents the majority opinion of labor in the United States, New Deal theorists had better watch their step.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the statement by Mr. Woll contained in the editorial to which I have just referred is entitled to more consideration than the letter placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. I think the unfortunate condition described in the letter must excite the pity of every person hearing it. I also think the great State of Louisiana is more competent than centralized power here in Washington to assist labor with benign statutes which are adapted to the genius of the people of the State of Louisiana.

They are more likely to adopt a method of assistance to labor that is so adapted than are we here in Washington. They should know their own conditions, and I believe they do know them.

I feel, with respect to the State of Vermont, just as Ethan Allen did when he walked out and said to Congress, at a time when Congress was trying to force Vermont into the State of New York, "I am as determined to preserve the independence of the State of Vermont as Congress is that of the United States, and rather than fail I will retire with my hardy Green Mountain boys into the caverns of the mountains and make war on all mankind."

I feel that way. I feel that earnest about it. Although I would not incite any such consequences as implied in that remark I feel as earnest as that remark expressed Ethan Allen's earnestness, that we should, if possible, prevent the passage of this bill modified in any form, whether by amendment as offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] or in any other form that can be conceived. I regard the bill as pernicious and dangerous, and a great step in the direction of a dictatorship in the United States.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I placed in the RECORD a letter from Louisana, I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter which came with it, in the same envelope. It is very short. It bears the title of the Louisiana Manufacturers' Association. I call particular attention to the interest of the Louisiana Manufacturers' Association in the farmer. It will explain many of the arguments which have been made in connection with the farmer and this bill, because the same suggestions have been sent out by manufacturers from every other State and by the United States Chamber of Commerce with reference to the argument in regard to the farmer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read the letter, as follows:

LOUISIANA MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION,
New Orleans, La., July 16, 1937.

QUICK ACTION IMPERATIVE

Do these things at once:

1. Wire Senators ELLENDER and OVERTON your opposition to Black wage and hour bill, S. 2475. This modification of original bill does not remove objections. If you have already written or wired them, do it again.

2. Wire your Congressman.

3. Talk to the farmers in your community. Point out to them that if this bill passes fertilizer will cost $2 a ton more, that there will likely be a shortage of farm labor in peak periods, that ginning costs will be greater, that articles they buy will cost more, and urge them to write or wire their Congressman and Senators.

4. Talk to your banker. You know what this bill will do to you. He has a definite interest in your successful operation. Get his help.

5. Your merchants are interested. Enlist their help.

6. Talk to your newspaper editors. Get them to run editorials on this.

Takes time? Of course, it will. But it will take less time and less money than it will if the bill passes and you have to go to Washington and beg an arbitrary board for differentials in hours and wages.

The time element is important. Don't put this off. Don't depend on the other fellow—it's important to you, too.

SAM B. DUNBAR, Manager.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in view of a statement made yesterday very bitterly criticizing an official of the Government, Mr. Edward McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, for his activities in reference to the strike at the Apex Manufacturing Co. of Philadelphia, I should like to have the RECORD show that this morning, exclusively through the efforts of Mr. McGrady, the strike and the labor controversy at the Apex Manufacturing Co. of Philadelphia have been settled.

Mr. GEORGE obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	La Follette	Pope
Andrews	Connally	Lee	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Reynolds
Austin	Dieterich	Lodge	Schwartz
Bailey	Donahey	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Ellender	Lonergan	Sheppard

Bilbo	George	McAdoo	Smathers
Black	Gerry	McCarran	Smith
Bone	Gillette	McGill	Steiwer
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Green	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	Maloney	Townsend
Brown, N. H.	Hale	Minton	Truman
Bulkley	Harrison	Moore	Tydings
Bulow	Hatch	Murray	Vandenberg
Burke	Herring	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrd	Hitchcock	Nye	Walsh
Byrnes	Holt	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Overton	White
Caraway	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Chavez	King	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GERRY in the chair). Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think it would be well to inquire who is included in and affected by the bill as it now stands.

Broadly speaking, and without any attempt to cover every person who may be affected by the bill, it is proper to say that under the recent decision of the Supreme Court and under a provision of the bill to which I shall later refer, interstate and intrastate commerce employees and employers come directly within the purview and terms of the bill; so that virtually every worker who is in any way concerned with the production, distribution, or sale of any commodity may be considered to be engaged in interstate commerce or intrastate commerce, which is actually and substantially affected by the transportation and sale within the State of any article produced outside of the State under conditions fixed in the bill.

With the exception of local retail employees, who are specifically exempted, transportation and farm workers, practically all other workers in the country are within the terms of the bill.

On the question of who are exempted as farm workers, or what businesses affecting agriculture may be said to come clearly within the terms of the bill, let me say that I have no doubt that any primary processor of cotton, for instance, such as the operator of a cotton gin, certainly a cotton compress, certainly a cotton warehouse in the local community, and every employee in the cotton warehouse, is directly within the terms and purview of the bill.

Similarly, every peanut picker who goes from farm to farm to pick the farmer's nuts when they are ready for market is within the purview and terms of the bill.

Practically the whole operation from the time fruit is removed from the tree, and oftentimes the removal of fruit itself from the tree, are covered by the terms of the bill. Certainly the preparation of fruit for packing, its precooling, its storage in the packing plant, and its actual packing are steps in the processing or marketing of most fruits and most vegetables not performed by the farmers themselves.

The threshing of wheat and of oats, when done by the farmer or done by someone else for the farmer, but not by someone else under contract, is, of course, not within the purview and scope of the bill; but the threshing of oats or the threshing of wheat when done by someone other than the farmer for hire or for toll unquestionably falls within the terms of the bill as it stands.

Seamen, people who take sponges and fishes from the ocean and from other waters, are not within the bill. Girls who work—and if there are any underpaid, if there are any people who are worked excessively long hours in the United States, they are to be found in the department stores and in the chain stores operating throughout this country—are not given the protection of the bill. Certainly farm labor is low-paid labor in most parts of the country. So that the three classes of labor which may be said to fall within the lowest bracket—fishermen, including sponge fishermen, girls in department stores and employees in the chain stores, and farm labor—are not under the bill. All retail clerks and helpers in retail establishments and all agricultural labor are out of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator whether he believes that under the definitions which have been given of interstate commerce it would be possible for the Congress to regulate the hours of those working in the retail stores throughout the country? I am interested in the Senator's viewpoint, in connection with his statement.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will forbear, I will get to that in just a little while. I hope to discuss that phase of the subject.

In order to popularize the bill with agriculture it is said, for instance, to the cotton farmer, "You are not affected by the bill." He is affected by the bill when his cotton goes to the gin, because the ginnery and everyone working thereabouts is clearly within the terms of the bill.

He is affected by the bill when his cotton goes to his county or town warehouse, because the warehouseman and everybody working in and around the warehouse is within the terms of the bill.

He is affected by the bill in the increased cost of every tool and of every implement and of every piece and particle of machinery used upon his farm.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I decline to yield for the moment, but I will yield in a little while.

The farmer is affected by the bill in the increased cost of every bag and in the increased cost of every cotton tie.

He is affected by the bill in the increased cost of every yard of cotton bagging or jute bagging with which his cotton is wrapped.

He is affected by the bill in the increased cost of every pound of commercial fertilizer that goes to make his cotton crop, because all of these industries are within the terms of the bill, clearly and unmistakably within the terms of the bill.

Finally, he is affected by the bill, of course, by such general increase of wage levels as must result from the operation of the bill, if the bill is successful, as it is hoped by its proponents it will be.

Mr. President, I will not describe how other farmers are affected by the bill; but they are affected similarly.

Mr. President, what does the bill undertake to do? First it provides for the appointment of a board of five members, who are to be given jurisdiction over practically all the employers and employees in the country, except as stated heretofore. I, of course, have made no reference to the fact that employees of a city or of a State or of the Federal Government fall outside of the terms of the bill. They are not included in it. I have made no reference to the fact that the employers and employees of common carriers, who are affected by other law already, are not within the terms of the bill.

The bill authorizes the President to appoint five members to the board, who, incidentally, of course, are to receive $10,000 a year. The bill authorizes the President, moreover, to change from time to time, without restriction, the chairman of the board. Under the terms of the bill the chairman of the board may be changed overnight. Under the terms of the bill the chairman of the board may be changed whenever the President sees fit to order the change.

What may this board do in the first instance? The board may employ without limitation any number of people to carry into execution the powers vested in the board. There is no limitation upon the number of people who may be employed, whether attorneys, or people possessing executive experience, or clerks, stenographers, or what not. The number is unlimited. They may employ them to carry out the provisions of the law.

The board may sit at Washington; in fact, the bill provides it may sit at Washington; but it may sit anywhere else in the country. It may carry on its activities not only through its membership but through any agency selected by it. Through any person or agent selected and created by the board it may carry on its activities in any part of the country.

I dare say that we have given to few boards broader power to employ a large army of Federal employees, and I dare say, also, that we have given to few boards, if to any, the power to carry on its activities simultaneously through such agencies and through such instrumentalities as it may elect in any part of the country.

The board is called upon by the bill to utilize certain agencies of the Government in gathering the information which it is authorized to gather, and that includes everything that an employer may do in any line of business which comes within the measure. The board may examine his private papers, and it may publish them to the world, under the very terms of the bill. They may go into his books and they may publish them to the world. They may publish anything they find. They may do this through agencies and agents selected or utilized by the board.

Particularly, Mr. President, they are authorized to make use of the Secretary of Labor in the gathering of all of the information deemed by the board essential in the administration of the act. I have no criticism to offer of the Secretary of Labor, save as her public acts justify criticism. One thing is very clear—that the present Secretary of Labor does not believe in any differentials in the wages of industry in different sections. She has manifested that from time to time, and I dare say that no one will undertake to controvert the statement. If any differential is to be allowed, in the opinion of the Secretary of Labor, then the differential is inconsequential, wholly inadequate, at least, to preserve great systems of industry, which have not grown up under theories but which have grown up under competitive conditions and circumstances under which they were obliged to survive, if they survived at all. But the Secretary of Labor does not think so.

While I am on that point, let me say that the bill provides for the creation of an advisory committee, and it is entirely useless. It is an appendage which has little place in the bill. The committee authorized is all right, and the committee is to function in a very orderly way, and, presumably, the committee is to be of some service to the board; but what are the powers of the committee? When the committee has done all that it is authorized to do under the act, when it had made its investigation and submitted its report to the board, the board, quoting from the act, section 11, "may accept or reject, in whole or in part, the recommendations of an advisory committee."

I do not care how fairly the committee may organize; it is immaterial with what words and language the committee is brought into being and what fair and just and obviously proper things the committee may do; when it is written into the law that the board may reject the report of any advisory committee in any industry, in whole or in part, I know that the advisory committee is out of the window, and this country knows it.

There is no need for anyone to take refuge back of the advisory committee. There is no need for anyone to point to this committee and say, "Before we put hours and wages on you we are going to appoint an advisory committee", and that committee is going to protect you. It is wholly immaterial what that committee may think, what it may find, what it may report, what it may recommend; it is out of the window when the board says, "We reject it in whole or in part." Under the terms of the bill as it now stands the only recourse open to anyone who is aggrieved is to take an appeal to the circuit court. The report of the advisory committee is not affirmatively made a part of the record. None of its recommendations becomes a part of the record by virtue of the report itself. It may be made a part of the record, of course, by the board.

Mr. President, we now come to what the board may do. It may fix the maximum hours and it may fix the minimum wages within the limitations of the bill, and for the sake of brevity, at least, there is no need to go into that again.

Again, the language of the bill is very clear; that is, how it shall arrive at the maximum hours and how it shall arrive at the minimum wages. There is some poetry in the bill, poetry of the same kind as the poetry written into the bill for the purpose of creating an advisory committee.

The board may take into consideration, of course, the cost of living in one section of the country as compared with the cost of living in another section of the country. It may take into consideration a great many things as enumerated in the bill in fixing the maximum hours or the minimum wages.

But, Mr. President, we must look a little further than that if we want to see what the board is, and what, under the terms of the bill, we are asking of the board and what we charge it with doing.

In the bill it is textually stated that the objective of the bill is the fixing of hours not to exceed 40 and the fixing of minimum wages not less than 40 cents per hour. In language it is said that that is the objective of the legislation. That is the purpose of it. Indeed, it has no other purpose here, and can have no other, if that is not the purpose. It does not make any difference what we may say about taking into consideration the cost of living in one section as compared to the cost of living in another, the difference in the freight charges from one section to the consuming markets as compared to freight charges on the same goods from other sections to the same consuming markets. It matters not a whit what may be said about those matters. The legislative declaration is made in the bill that the objective of the board is to fix the maximum hours and the minimum wages at a given point; and everything else in the discretion of the board must yield to that declared public policy of the Congress. That the board will yield to it must be accepted by all open-minded Americans as beyond the peradventure of a doubt.

What has the National Labor Relations Board done? I am not going to say that it is not administering the National Labor Relations Act. I am going to say that the objective of that act is written in the act, and that the National Labor Relations Board is administering it with a view to the expressed public policy contained in the act itself. Everyone knows that. If we were running an industry in any part of the country, we would know it. If we have any experience with industries, large or small, big or little, in any State in the Union, we know that the National Labor Relations Board is administering the act in accordance with the declared purpose stated in the act as they interpret it.

There is no mistaking the objective of the bill, because the word "objective", when we come down to the final power of the board, is expressly used with reference both to hours and to wages.

Mr. President, under the terms of the bill the power of life or death over industry is to be given to the present Secretary of Labor, who long ago had the idea that the children in the South and the people of the South were without shoes, who long ago had the fixed and settled conviction that there was no sense in having a different wage in the same industry in the South as compared with similar industries in other parts of the country, although in reaching that conclusion the good souls who generally have written bills of this kind seem to have closed their eyes to all the facts of our economic life. They do not understand why there should be one wage paid in the far South and another wage paid in closely knit and thickly populated New England. They cannot understand it save on one theory, which ought to be repudiated by every southern man, and that is that both our employers and our employees are in the one instance without conscience, and in the other instance without a love of liberty and the power to protect themselves.

The industrialists of the South are as honorable as the industrialists of any section of the Nation. They are as wise; they are as well informed. The labor in the South is made up of as pure blood as can be found in the arteries of American men and women in any section of the Nation. Why, then, is there a different wage? We may account for it on a theoretical basis, but the hard fact is that wages in every section, by and large, in the long run are fixed by economic, natural conditions that we cannot change, drastically as it is proposed to be done in this legislation, without great injury to our whole business structure.

I want to repeat that I think the men who own and operate all of our industries, from the paper plant up through all the lumber interests of the South to all the naval-stores interests of the South, all of our iron and steel industries, all our textile plants of every kind and description are as good—they are not any better, but they are as good—as men engaged in similar business in any State and in any section of the country.

I repeat, they are as well informed, they are as humane, they are as honest, they are as decent, they are just as much Americans as men who own and engage in like business in any other part of this country. I warn southerners who defend this bill that those who write this kind of laws cannot understand the existing difference in wage except upon the ground that in the South we are deliberately guilty of exploiting the labor of our fellow men. The men who labor in the South and the women who labor in the South are just as honest, they are just as decent, they have the same love of liberty, they are doing their dead level best just as the men and the women in every other section of the country.

How are we going to fix this minimum wage and these maximum hours? Obviously, we cannot do it by considering individual cases. We would never get through with the task if we did that. Obviously, that is an impossibility. The bill recognizes that. The bill recognizes that it must be done through classification into groups of the persons who come under its terms, and who are affected by it. In no other way could it be accomplished. In no other way can anyone conceive of any board exercising the vast powers and meeting the vast responsibilities placed upon the board by this bill. So I am not quarreling with that provision of the bill; but it must be done by groups. It must be done by industries, with the power in the board, to be sure, to note particular cases and instances, but in the nature of things the board cannot give consideration to particular industries, nor to particular instances of hardship.

The proponents of the measure may think so. It does their humanitarian purposes very great credit to say that they do sincerely think so. But the board will not do it; the board cannot do it; and if it could, in the very nature of things, it would not be able to do it throughout a country that occupies a half continent and that has industrial conditions as variant and as divergent as are the industrial conditions in sections of the country itself.

So hours must be fixed with reference to groups, with reference to industries as industries. Even if the standard should be varied as between sections it would be a very remarkable performance upon the part of the board. But will the board do it? With the express objective set forth in the bill will the board do it, when the language of the bill is that the five members of the board must be appointed with reference to industrial and geographic conditions? How many members of the board will that give to the entire South? Not more than one. And what will one man do on the board? He cannot do a great deal; whatever his wisdom and his honesty and whatever his desire to be of service, he can do nothing under the bill which presents as its express objective the fixing of hours and wages at particular and given points and figures.

The Secretary of Labor may administer this bill through labor organizations. That provision is in the bill. I am not going to make any assault on labor organizations; I support organized labor in all its legitimate endeavors and activities; but when it is understood that the Secretary of Labor may march into a department store in Atlanta or in Oklahoma City or in Waco, Tex.; when it is understood that the Secretary of Labor may send down her agents to a little packing plant in southern Georgia or southern Mississippi or southern Virginia or North Carolina; when it is understood that into every industry in the country she may send her representatives, and that under the bill she may also send a representative of organized labor, what sort of a picture is presented? What will the bill do to the country?

Suppose, let us say, that the Secretary of Labor should send Mr. John L. Lewis down into a rayon plant in North Carolina; suppose, let us say, that she should send Mr. Lewis down into a little cotton mill in Alabama or Georgia; suppose that she should even send Mr. Sidney Hillman, a close associate of Mr. Lewis—I am using them merely as examples—suppose she should send them into the mills and factories of the South to look at the books, to examine the private correspondence, to go into all the intimate details of the business, and to make those things public in America—think of it!

I do not understand how maximum hours and minimum wages may be fixed on any fair basis by people who all during their existence have been fighting upon one side or the other of a given issue. I am not overstating what this bill provides.

I do not say that the Secretary of Labor will do so, but suppose, let us say, that she should send John L. Lewis or Sidney Hillman down into Georgia and into a little mill where for days and days a strike had been in progress, where, until the Secretary of Labor suddenly discovered it was illegal to carry on a sit-down strike, a sit-down strike had once been inaugurated. Is that going to do labor any good? Is it going to do the men and women who work in our mills and our factories and our warehouses and our jobbing houses any good? Is it going to do business any good? Is it going to do America any good? That is the question, Mr. President, that ought to be asked in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN of Michigan in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield in just a moment.

The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] read into the RECORD during the course of the first day's discussion of the bill certain letters from large sawmill operators. The letters were entirely proper, and those operators had a right to send the letters. I believe that any citizen has the right to approve or disapprove pending legislation. I am not going to quarrel with them; but I am not surprised that some large sawmill operators should have written here approving this bill.

Mr. President, the big sawmill operators approved the N. R. A. They approved it when the little mill was being closed. They approved the quota system which it was attempted to put on the little mill, and under which the little mill could cut only so many thousand feet of lumber per day or per week or per month. They approved it for the express purpose of driving out competition; they approved it for the express purpose of establishing a monopoly, and in the South they did establish a monopoly. Wherever the little sawmill operators and lumbermen were frightened by the N. R. A. and screams of the "eagle", they took to the woods. Down in my State, in the very beginning, I stated to a sawmill man, "Do not pay any attention to it." The agents of the N. R. A. went out into the woods and found a little sawmill man who had paid all his money, all his earnings of a lifetime, for a tract of timber, and they said, "You have got to pay a certain wage, you cannot work your employees more than a certain number of hours, and, moreover, you cannot cut more than so many thousand feet of lumber per month." One such sawmill operator came to me and said, "Here is my timber tract; in it are invested the earnings of a lifetime, but under the hour and wage scale they have prescribed I cannot earn a penny out of it, and on the quota they give me my lease will have expired before I can cut one-third of my timber." I said, "Do not pay any attention to them; you bought that timber; go ahead and cut it within the terms of your contract. You have a 12 months' or a 24 months' or a 36 months' lease on your timber. It is yours. I do not care what kind of quota they put on you; go ahead and cut it."

But what happened? The little mills closed up all through the Carolinas and all through Georgia; small lumbermen went out of business, and literally hundreds of them who did not go out of business went up to the very door of bankruptcy, and today they are bankrupt because they undertook to comply with the requirements and conditions fixed by the N. R. A. That is not theory; that is fact; and everyone familiar with the situation knows it to be a fact.

The finishers of lumber came day after day and said, "We want to sell the lumber at a certain price, flooring and ceiling and finished lumber; but the N. R. A. says we must sell it at a higher price. We do not want to ask a higher price, because our customers cannot buy it at a higher price, but they can buy at a price at which we are willing to sell and at which we can make a reasonable profit." But right then the big lumbermen were saying that the N. R. A. was a godsend. Of course, it was a godsend, because the big lumbermen had created a monopoly through the very agency of the Government and had driven the little competitor out of the field. So the big operator could put his prices up to anybody's code; indeed, he helped to make the code; he wrote it. The same big lumberman thinks he is in sight of another N. R. A., and so he likes this bill. But the hundreds of little lumbermen do not like this bill, and the thousands of men who work for them do not like this bill, because they believe, as I believe, that yielding to economic conditions their employers are willing to meet them half way and to deal with them on a fair basis.

Mr. President, let me reply to another thing that has been injected into the debate. It has been said that in all the great industries of the country labor is organized—and it should be. It is said that through organization labor is enabled to assert its rights. In a measure that is true, and I am glad that it is true. But it is said that in a large number of other industries labor is not organized and there is, therefore, no collective bargaining in a very true or real sense.

Answering for the industries of the South, and I believe it is largely true everywhere, labor is organized or will organize whenever there is any real reason for organization. But in the little industries, where a fine personal relationship exists between the employer and the employee, labor organizations have not been able to make much headway for the very substantial reason that there is no actual necessity for an organization of the type that exists in the large key industries of the country in such businesses or such enterprises.

Labor has the right to organize down to two men, down to three men, down to a minimum. Labor may do it if it wishes, and it may affiliate with a national organization. I think it should in all industries where the industry is large enough to make impossible that intimate relationship which exists in the smaller enterprises of the country. Wherever labor desires to organize it may do so, and labor will organize in the smaller industries of the country when there is any substantial reason for it, because all of our people are one; they are moved by much the same motives and purposes; they are controlled by much the same sentiment in consideration of self-interest and advancement; and labor in large and in small enterprises now unorganized will organize whenever there is the necessity for it.

Mr. President, I am no apologist for cheap labor. I do not desire cheap labor. I am no apologist for unusual hours of labor. I do not desire long hours for labor. Locally I have said many times, sometimes when it cost a little to say it, that I thought the labor in the community was not paid enough—the labor on the farm, in the store, in the little manufacturing plant. That is my sentiment and that is my view.

I know that through legislation we can do much so far as excessively long hours are concerned, particularly in hazardous enterprise and industry, particularly in an industry which presents any element of danger or any factors which produce or ordinarily produce unhappy results either in the physical or mental or moral character of the people employed in those industries. Much can be done through proper regulation of hours. Much can be done, unquestionably, through legislation in the fixing of reasonable hours, or at least outlawing unreasonable hours.

But when we undertake to fix either a flat minimum of wages or maximum of hours through any board at Washington for all the industries of the country under a law that will not admit in actual practice of any real differential or any substantial differential or any peculiar consideration of special hardship cases—when we undertake to do that we undertake to do what nature, what economic laws, what the development that has gone on in this country simply say we cannot do unless we want to disrupt and disorganize the industries in some parts of the country.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I believe the minimum wage paid by the Government through the Works Progress Administration is approximately $22 for common labor in Georgia, and for the same labor in New York City approximately $52. If the Senator is correct in the statement he made a moment ago, that, in his opinion, there would be no differential, how could we reconcile the action of the Government through the W. P. A. making a differential of $30 in the minimum wage for Government employees and through another department of the Government striving to see that there is no differential?

Mr. GEORGE. We would not be able to reconcile it. The Secretary of Labor would probably reconcile it on the theory that Works Progress Administrator Hopkins had done it, and therefore it must be all right. That is the only basis on which it could be reconciled.

Mr. President, I want to refer to some of the things the board is authorized to do by way of investigation. I invite the Senate to keep in mind the fact that under the terms of the bill the board is specifically directed to carry on, wherever feasible or possible or practical, these investigations through the Secretary of Labor:

> The board in its discretion may investigate and gather data regarding the wages, hours, and other conditions and practices of employment in any occupation subject to this act, and may inspect such places and such records (and make such transcripts thereof) and investigate such facts, conditions, practices, or matters as it may be deemed necessary or appropriate to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act.

In a subsequent section, section 15, the board is specifically charged in this language:

> So far as practicable, the board shall utilize the Department of Labor for all the investigations and inspections necessary under section 12 (a).

I read only a part of the things that could be investigated under section 12.

> The Secretary of Labor shall have the powers enumerated therein in the conduct of such investigations and inspections and shall report the results thereof to the board.

The Secretary of Labor may, if she wishes, select one of the branches into which organized labor unhappily finds itself divided at this moment, may select one branch of the great labor group in this country, and send them down to make investigation, to go into the places of business and to find out all these facts, making transcripts of records, and subsequently publishing them as the act itself provides.

Let us suppose the Secretary of Labor did, in all of the investigations, take only one division of organized labor as it exists today. Let us suppose, for instance, that she never sought any agent except an agent of Mr. Lewis and those associated with Mr. Lewis, for all the purposes of investigation under the provisions of this bill. What would be the situation in this country? Would we not be inviting labor troubles and labor difficulties? Would we not be disorganizing labor and industry? Would we not actually be retarding progress in the United States?

Mr. President, there are many other phases of the bill that ought to be discussed. I shall refer to one. Recourse is given to any party aggrieved, whether an employee or an employer, to the courts, as I have just said, to the circuit courts. Obviously that should be amended so that any aggrieved person should have a right to make appeal to the district court of the district in which he resides.

But passing that by, what may the court do after the appeal is taken? The court may correct errors of law, and it may correct a finding of fact if there is no evidence on which the finding is based; that is, if the finding is arbitrary and capricious.

What does that mean? It means that an aggrieved person has an appeal only on error of law, because if there be any fact or any evidence on which the board fixes its finding, the court cannot say that it was an arbitrary and capricious ruling by the board.

Every lawyer understands that principle. Every lawyer knows it. Not only is that true, but in the bill itself it is declared textually that the board shall not observe or be bound by technical rules of evidence or procedure. The bill takes the board as far away as it can from the finding of legitimate facts which are subject thereafter to review by any impartial tribunal. It gives to the board the power to find all the facts on which the industry of the country may be raided by the board without a right of appeal to any court of the land, save on a question of law or on a finding of fact which was so obviously unsupported by any evidence, which does not have to comply with technical rules of evidence or procedure in its presentation, as to enable the court to say, "Here is an arbitrary and a capricious finding by the board."

Not only is the board here at Washington, the chairman of which may be changed overnight, given the power of life and death over the industry of the country, but it is charged with one objective. It has before it constantly one objective, and all the poetry with which it has been clothed may be thrown to the winds.

Not only that, but its finding of fact based on the conclusions of Secretary Perkins and of such labor organizers as she wants to select to conduct the investigation never can be called in question in any court of law or of justice in America if there is a single line of evidence to support it. Will not partial investigators always find some evidence to support it? Is there a single employer who cannot get one man in his mill to swear that the employer is an angel in disguise? Is there a single business in all the Union that cannot find in its list of employees one who will swear that the employer is a devil in human form?

So there is no appeal. There is no right of appeal. This thing is bureaucracy run mad, with power of life and death over every industry in America, with minor exceptions. This thing, within 12 months after it is set up, will be the right hand of some partial labor group favored by the Secretary of Labor.

I am speaking plainly, Mr. President, because I owe it to my people to speak plainly. Down there in the South we have over 70 percent of the actual spindles in this country in our textile mills, and we consume more than 80 percent of the cotton produced and consumed in America. Will that condition be allowed to go on under a Secretary of Labor who has said in effect that the people of my section are incapable of asserting their rights? Will that condition be allowed to continue under a Secretary of Labor who, time after time, has said that the South was not entitled to any material wage differential in any of her industries; under a Secretary who can close her eyes to all the facts that actually exist in this country, and account for them only on the supposition of lack of character and conscience upon the part of our employers, and lack of character and strength and decency on the part of our employees?

I subscribe to no such doctrine. This is the wildest dream that was ever presented to the American Congress. The N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, but before it was declared unconstitutional it was falling of its own weight; and that is what will happen to any law of this kind whenever the Government commits itself to the folly of trying to regulate all the industry and all the wages and all the labor in a country with such divergent interests, stretching over so vast an area as ours.

Will that be healthy? Will it be good for America? Let no one say that those of us who oppose this thing want to see low wages continued. We do not; but we know very well that wages must keep pace with economic conditions. We know very well that the cost of property, the cost of taxes, the cost of transporting or carrying goods to the consuming market, are all matters that must be considered when industry is established anywhere, in any part of this or any other country; and we know very well that those things will not be considered by this board. I state deliberately that no appeal has penetrated the minds and hearts of the men who compose the National Labor Relations Board save an appeal that they wanted to hear and wanted to entertain; and no appeal will ever reach the hearts and souls of this board that it does not want to hear and does not want to entertain.

Mr. President, no group of men in all the long stretches of human history has ever been entrusted with absolute power over any long period of time without abusing that power. I know what this means. In my own conscience, I know what it means. The people of the South know what this thing means; but let not southern industry and southern labor think this measure will affect them alone.

Through the mechanism provided for in this bill the ax will fall more swiftly and more certainly and with greater force upon the neck of the South, upon the industry and business of the South; but back of this thing is something far greater than the crucifixion of the industries of a single section. Back of this thing is the same steady encroachment upon the liberties of the citizen that has actuated those who have written much of the law we have been called upon to pass during the past 4 years. Back of this thing stands the almost undisguised purpose of putting into the hands of a board at Washington all the industry, all the labor of America, with all its economic and political consequences. That is far more important than the crucifixion and burial beyond possibility of resurrection of every little mill and factory and place of business in all the South that would come within the jurisdiction of the bill.

Mr. President, let me read section 8 (a) to see the breadth of the operation of this bill on industry:

> Whenever the board shall determine that any substandard labor condition exists in the production of goods in one State and that such goods compete to a substantial extent in that State with other goods produced in another State and sold or transported in interstate commerce, in the production of which such substandard labor condition does not exist, the board shall make an order requiring the elimination of such substandard labor condition and the maintenance of the appropriate fair labor standard in the production of goods which so compete.

There is the end of State lines. Here is the doctrine of the Shreveport case carried to an extreme, carried into every little cotton warehouse, carried into every store, save as the retail stores have been excepted by the terms of the bill; carried into every little sawmill, carried into every little manufacturing plant of every kind, character, and description. There is the end of State authority and of State power, the doctrine of the Shreveport case carried to its utmost limit.

What happened under the Shreveport case? I see about me Members of the Senate who have occupied positions as chief executives of their respective States. What happened to the freight-rate structure in this country under the Shreveport decision? The State commission was stripped of its power. The State commission could not put in a sidetrack on a little railroad that had its beginning and ending within a single State without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission here in Washington. They lost all power to say at what cost an intrastate railroad, with both ends of its line within the State, never having traversed a State line, must carry the perishable fruits and vegetables of the farmer to a near-by market within the State. The State commission lost all power over it, and they have not gotten the power back, and will not ever get it back.

If section 8 (a) is written into the law, there will be written into the law a provision giving power to the Federal Government to regulate practically all business, because pretty nearly every business will be included within this broad declaration in section 8 (a) of the bill. Once that power of the State is lost, it will be lost for good; that will be the end of it; it will be gone.

Mr. President, there is a statement I do not care to make, and yet I think I should make it. Our friends would disclaim any purpose or intention of regulating labor on the farm, with regard to either hours or wages. I would favor a higher minimum wage on the farm if it could be accomplished by law and safely and properly provided by law. The friends of this measure would disclaim all purposes of regulating wages on the farm.

Let me remind the farmers, however, that already in one bill having to do with and relating to agriculture in the Congress it is textually provided that no benefits, benefits which come out of the taxpayers' pockets can be paid to any producer of a particular commodity unless that producer has complied with the age, wage, and hour restrictions and limitations fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture or his administrator.

As certainly as that the day follows the night, and even upon a basis of justice and equity, if the pending bill shall be passed and shall stand with this provision in it, it will ultimately, and at no distant date, include those excepted classes of labor, at least, which now fall outside of the terms of the bill, and it will also be ultimately extended even to agriculture itself.

Mr. President, I have just one other observation to make. There is an observable tendency on the part of some of those expert in the drafting of legislation, who have had far more consideration during the last few years than they ever deserved, and far more than they deserve in and of themselves—there is evidence of a tendency to include within the legislative scheme which has been constantly developing the vast populations in the industrial centers in America. I acquit the administration entirely as not desiring to be unfair or to deal unequally with agriculture, but there are unmistakable signs, as I have seen them—and I have tried to see them fairly—of an intent and purpose to bring under Washington, under a bureau at Washington, under an agency at Washington, with vast power, virtually unrestricted and unrestrained, the great populations in the industrial and commercial centers.

What does it mean? I hope I am wrong, but I think I have seen in it the possibility at least of controlling America through a group of industrial and commercial cities in America, and not the least effective means of control will be agencies at Washington which possess a power which should never be vested in any board or any bureau, or delegated by any Congress, conceding that Congress has all of the power that is sought to be given by the bill.

Whenever that day comes, Mr. President, in one way or another, through these agencies, and through the power which may be exerted by these agencies and bureaus, it will be quite possible to control a majority of the people of the United States through the control of the great American centers of population. Indeed, it will be quite possible for government in power to exert a political control which ought not to be desired by any party, and which can never be safely delegated or given by the people to any political party in America.

Mr. President, the pending bill should go back to the committee. It demands an impossibility. It assumes that a board, wise enough, well informed enough, disinterested enough, may be found and organized to exercise safely, and even wisely, all of the vast power given this board. It assumes it is necessary to give that power directly to the board, when no Senator knows how many people within his own State would actually come within the operation of the measure, when no Senator here can tell what the average minimum wage in his own State is today.

Moreover, Mr. President, it assumes this at a time when there is no emergency, at a time when business is on the upgrade, and for many months has been steadily on the upgrade. It assumes it at a time when we are faced by no necessity for prompt and unconsidered action.

The bill should go back to the committee, and the committee should be given ample time to find out all of the essential and pertinent facts upon which this kind of legislation should be based, if it is to be passed by this Congress, or by any subsequent Congress.

When the N. R. A. was enacted we were at the depths of the depression. There were many in this body who supported the N. R. A. probably who did not approve it. But, with few exceptions, we recognized the necessity for immediate emergency measures and action. That condition does not obtain now; there is no excuse for hasty action at this time. In my opinion, there can be no justifying cause for keeping the pending bill here, after the Congress has been in session for 7 months, when it is literally worn out with its labors and ought to be permitted to go home. Above all, Mr. President, the people of this country should have time to consider and weigh this bill and to understand fully its meaning, if they wish the Congress to pass it.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am as anxious to go home as is any other Member of the Senate, but I want to announce that I am willing to stay here until Christmas Eve, if necessary, in order that some definite legislative action may be taken to relieve the cotton farmers of the South from the bankruptcy which faces them. When we view the present condition of the cotton market we find there is something wrong somewhere. There is a dead cat on the line somewhere. The cotton farmer of the South seems to be the unfortunate member of the great agricultural family.

By examination of the reports from the markets of the country it will be found that today all the major crops are enjoying parity prices. The wheat farmer has had a bounteous yield, and he is getting parity for his wheat, as figured by the experts in the Department of Agriculture. Corn is bringing a parity price. Hogs are bringing a parity price. Cattle are bringing a parity price. But when it comes to cotton we find a different condition. The parity price of cotton today is estimated to be between 16 and 17 cents a pound, yet cotton is selling now for 11 and 12 cents a pound, or between 5 and 6 cents a pound below its parity price. There is something mysterious about it. It cannot be the result of the surplus that exists, because the surplus is low. It cannot be the threatened cotton yield, because thirteen or fourteen million bales, the estimated yield, is not an abnormal yield. If we were to have a possible yield of eighteen or twenty million bales of cotton the situation might be different.

Mr. President, I think the Congress owes it to the cotton farmer of the South, who is getting the raw end of the deal, to do something before it adjourns, and I call upon my colleagues of the Cotton Belt to take some interest in and make some move to have a resolution adopted or some legislation passed to relieve the cotton farmer. I specially call upon the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate to answer to the cotton growers of the South why something has not been done, and what is going to be done.

I am not advised whether the Secretary of Agriculture or the President himself has the right to peg the price of cotton. If it can be done, that fact should be announced promptly to the farmers of the South, who are now beginning to pick and market their cotton. They should be notified of that fact. If the fault lies with the speculators in the cotton market, they should have notice that they are not going to be allowed to beat down the price of cotton and then sell the market short.

Mr. President, something ought to be done for the cotton farmer. I beg of my colleagues to object to every suggestion of an adjournment sine die until something is done to guarantee at least a parity price to the cotton farmers, when all the other major crops that have been protected and helped by the Government are today enjoying the parity prices.

It has been suggested that one reason why the price of cotton is low is because of the overproduction of cotton in foreign countries. I do not agree with that suggestion. I know that our exports of cotton have been cut short, but, my friends in the Senate, the crop in prospect today will not justify the present price.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk four amendments which I intend to offer to the pending bill. I will ask the clerk to read them, and then I should like to have the amendments printed and lie on the table

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendments submitted by the Senator from Louisiana.

The Chief Clerk read the amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. OVERTON to the amendment reported by the committee, as follows:

On page 51, line 2, after the word "in" to insert the following: "the ginning and baling of cotton."

On page 59, line 13, after the word "living" to insert the following: "in the particular locality wherein the person is employed."

On page 60, line 2, to insert the following new paragraph:

"The difference between various localities and sections of the costs of transportation to market."

On page 60, line 20, to insert the following: "Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection shall not be applicable with respect to any person employed in connection with the processing of beets, cane, and maple into sugar and sirup."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, inasmuch as I wish to address myself partially to the amendment which I yesterday submitted, I ask now that the amendment be read.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	La Follette	Pope
Andrews	Connally	Lee	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Reynolds
Austin	Dieterich	Lodge	Schwartz
Bailey	Donahey	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Ellender	Lonergan	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The clerk will read the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment reported by the committee at the proper place it is proposed to insert the following:

That it shall be unlawful for any person to employ in interstate commerce or in the production of goods to be shipped in interstate commerce any person for more than 40 hours in any week and to pay to any person so employed a wage of less than 40 cents an hour.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person to transport any goods in interstate commerce in the production or processing of which goods in the United States any person was employed for more than 40 hours in any week or any person was paid a wage of less than 40 cents an hour.

SEC. 3. No provision of this act shall supersede or justify noncompliance with any State law or municipal ordinance establishing a minimum wage higher than that wage established by this act or a maximum workweek shorter than that established by this act.

SEC. 4. No provision of this act shall impose any liability or penalty upon any common carrier for the transportation in interstate commerce in the regular course of its business of any goods not produced by such common carrier, and no provision of this act shall excuse any common carrier from its obligation to accept any goods for transportation.

SEC. 5. Any person who willfully performs or aids or abets in the performance of any act declared to be unlawful by any provision of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year. As a part of the judgment of the court in any criminal proceeding for a violation of this act the court may issue a permanent injunction prohibiting further violations of this act by the defendant.

SEC. 6. (a) This act shall not apply to agricultural laborers as defined by the Department of Agriculture, nor to executive, administrative, and professional employees.

(b) It shall be lawful to employ any person for 48 hours in any week if such person is paid for any work in excess of 40 hours but not exceeding 44 hours in any week at a wage for each hour equal to one and one-quarter times his normal hourly wage, and for any work in excess of 44 hours but not exceeding 48 hours in any week at a wage of one and one-half times his normal hourly wage.

(c) In the case of any industry covered by this act that normally operates less than 26 weeks per year, it shall be lawful for an employer to employ workers for more than 48 hours in any week if such hours of employment and the rate of pay therefor are arrived at by collective bargaining between the employer and his employees.

(d) It shall be lawful to pay any person less than the minimum hourly wage provided for by this act if the department of labor of the State (or its duly appointed representative) wherein such person resides certifies that he is an apprentice or a learner.

(e) It shall be lawful to pay to any person less than the minimum hourly wage provided for by this act if the public-welfare agency of the town, city, county, or State wherein he resides certifies that his earning capacity has been impaired by physical or mental injuries or defects.

SEC. 7. No person receiving relief or work relief which is financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by Congress shall be paid a weekly wage in excess of 80 percent of the weekly minimum wage fixed under this act as applicable in the State wherein the relief is being given.

SEC. 8. Section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, shall be administered in such manner, without regard to the limitation imposed by such section upon the total increase or decrease in the rates of duty expressly fixed by statute, as to equalize the differences in the increased costs of production or processing of any domestic article resulting from this act and the cost of production or processing of any like or similar foreign article, including any article with respect to the importation of which into the United States a foreign-trade agreement has been concluded.

SEC. 9. (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Committee on Sectional Wage Differentials (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee").

(b) The joint committee shall be composed of six Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and six Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A vacancy in the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(c) It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate and determine the advisability of establishing sectional wage differentials in different parts of the country, and to report to the Senate and the House, within 6 months after the date of enactment of this act, its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

(d) The joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of said joint committee, and shall be served by any person designated by him. Amounts appropriated for the expenses of the joint committee shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena, or to testify when summoned, under authority of this section.

(e) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

(f) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000 to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 10. Sections 1 to 8, inclusive, of this act shall take effect upon the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, at the proper time I propose to offer to the so-called Black bill the amendment which has just been read by the clerk, which, if agreed to, would strike out the entire substance of the pending measure and substitute what has just been read.

I am approaching the wage-hour problem and wage-hour legislation from a little different angle than most of the other Members of this body. For a long, long time I have believed in minimum-wage and maximum-hour legislation. In the State of New Hampshire, during the period when I served as Governor, I advocated and put into actual operation a minimum-wage department, which is operating successfully in that State. I have long advocated the principle of a shorter workweek and a higher minimum pay. I think those principles are sound.

I am opposed to the Black bill, so-called, because I believe it is unsound and un-American in its approach to the problem. I am opposed to it primarily because of the vast delegation of power conferred upon one board, a board composed of five members, to be appointed by the Chief Executive.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand, the Senator's proposal is that he prefers fixing by law an absolute workweek of 40 hours per week for the employees of all industries whose products enter interstate commerce, and an absolute minimum wage of 40 cents an hour, the law to become operative 1 year after the date of passage?

Mr. BRIDGES. That is the substance of my proposal, with certain exceptions.

Mr. President, as I was saying, I am opposed to this delegation of power to a five-man board, first, because I have no confidence in the board that will be appointed, based upon the evidence of past appointments to similar bodies, such as the National Labor Relations Board. The bill as drawn proposes an absolute delegation of power and will make the men constituting the board virtually czars of all American industry and labor.

Industry and labor are not unanimous for the pending bill. This morning the president of one of the great unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, Mr. John Frey, head of the United Metal Workers of America, called at my office and told me very frankly of his opposition to the pending measure. His sentiments are expressed by others, both leaders of industry and leaders in the labor movement.

My judgment is that the pending bill, if enacted into law, will result in a millstone being hung about the necks both of American labor and industry in the years to some. Such discretionary power as is proposed should be given to no board and to no individual in this land for any purpose.

The power given to the board would involve the economic life or death of American industry and the rights of American labor. The board could make its own rules. Justice could very well become a mockery. It would discriminate against small businesses, because small businesses would be unable to lobby and present their rights to a board having such wide discretionary powers as would big businesses.

When Mr. Roosevelt took office as the Chief Executive of this land we had approximately 583,000 Federal employees. Today we have approximately 835,000 Federal employees. The bill, if enacted into law, would vastly increase this number.

I agreed with the distinguished Senators from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] when they, in the first day of the debate, advocated separation of the child-labor features of the bill from the measure as a whole. It is important that child labor should receive individual consideration, and legislation regarding it should stand on its own feet. I believe the child-labor features should be segregated from the bill and enacted separately.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator support the child-labor provisions of the Wheeler-Johnson bill?

Mr. BRIDGES. I will.

Mr. President, briefly I want to analyze the differences between a direct approach to wages and hours of labor legislation and an indirect approach to the same objectives by means of a board given wide discretionary power, a board as to whose personnel no one knows anything, but as to which many may be suspicious of the influences which may be brought to bear upon the appointments to be made.

In section 3 of the Black bill provision is made for the creation of a board of five persons, to hold office for a period of 5 years. The board will be vested with wide discretionary power, and it will require an extensive staff of probably more than 10,000 employees. The amendment which I have offered provides for no board and no administrative staff. The provisions of my amendment, if enacted into law, would be enforced by the United States district attorneys and by the Federal courts. No discretion would be involved in the application of its provisions. It is a straightforward attempt to place upon the statute books of the country minimum-wage legislation and maximum-hour legislation. It is as simple and straightforward an approach as it is possible to make.

The Black bill provides that the board can fix a minimum wage of not more than 40 cents an hour, but that this wage may be varied from industry to industry, from plant to plant, and from region to region at the discretion of the board. The amendment which I have offered provides a mandatory minimum wage of 40 cents an hour applicable to all industries subject to the bill. There is no discretion involved in the application of this provision of my amendment.

Relative to hours of labor, the Black bill provides for the fixing of a maximum workweek of not less than 40 hours. This can be varied from industry to industry, from region to region, from plant to plant, at the discretion and whim of the board. My amendment provides for a uniform maximum workweek of 40 hours applicable to all work falling under the authority of the statute, with no variation.

Overtime: The Black bill allows overtime at the rate of time and a half, but the labor standards board can prohibit all overtime if it so desires. The amendment which I have offered permits overtime at the rate of time and one-fourth up to 44 hours per week, and time and one-half above 44 hours to a maximum of 48 hours.

Occupations exempted: The Black bill exempts executive, administrative, and professional employees, persons engaged in local retailing, seamen, railway workers, and persons employed in fishing and agriculture. My amendment would exempt executive, administrative, and professional employees and persons engaged in agriculture.

Applications: The Black bill applies to interstate commerce and to intrastate commerce so far as goods produced in intrastate commerce compete with goods produced in interstate commerce. My amendment would apply only to interstate commerce.

Employment of apprentices: The Black bill would permit the employment of apprentices at less than the minimum wage fixed by the bill. The licensing of such persons would be conducted by the board itself. My amendment provides for the payment of less than the minimum rate of pay to learners and apprentices certified by State departments of labor.

Employment of physically or mentally incapacitated persons: The Black bill allows the employment of physically or mentally incapacitated persons at less than the given rate of pay, and the existence of such incapacity to work is to be determined by the board. My amendment would permit the employment of physically and mentally incapacitated persons at less than the rate of pay when such incapacity is certified by the welfare society of the town, city, county, or State.

Penalties: The Black bill provides for a fine of $500 or imprisonment for each offense, and each person employed would constitute a separate offense, which would be a tremendous penalty to inflict and one that would ruin almost any industry or any business if applied. My amendment would provide a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for 1 year, but each person hired would not constitute a separate offense.

Discretion: The Black bill confers upon the board absolute discretion to classify employers regionally, by occupations, by industries, by size of plants, size of communities, and so forth. This would give the board almost unlimited power to discriminate against any plant or employer, making it a lobbying proposition. Under my amendment no discretionary power would be allowed.

Labels and licenses: Under the terms of the Black bill labels and licenses may be required by the board. This is comparable to the "blue eagle" of the N. R. A. Under my amendment none would be required.

Regional differentials: The Black bill would permit a board of five men to allow regional differentials, or would give them the power of economic life and death over industries in different sections of the country. My amendment provides for a congressional committee of 12 members to make a thorough study from a scientific and economic viewpoint of wage differentials and report to the next session of Congress.

Tariff: Both bills had the same effect as to tariff, but I may point out that with Secretary Hull's policy of reciprocal-trade agreements the provisions of the Black bill would be nullified.

Seasonal industries: The Black bill makes no exemptions in this respect. My amendment provides that seasonal industries that normally operate less than 26 weeks a year may be exempted.

Relief work: A very important consideration involved is the question of wages on relief work. The Black bill contains no provision on that subject. My amendment provides that persons on relief may not be paid more than 80 percent of the minimum wage provided by the bill. It is a very constructive step in the direction of removing from relief rolls some of those names now found upon them.

Mr. President, I approach wage and hour legislation from the viewpoint of a friend of such legislation, but I am not content to give discretionary power to a board to sit here in Washington and determine the life or death of the industries of the people of my section of the country or the life or death of the people working for a livelihood in my section or the industries and workers employed in industries all over this great Nation.

Such action is not based on sound public policy. Congress is dodging the issue when it delegates that responsibility. Let us have minimum-wage and maximum-hour legislation, but let us meet the responsibility. Let us put it upon our statute books as a straightforward statute that is clearly definable. Let us not create any more executive boards with wide discretionary powers in view of the fact that probably, with some of the influences that may be brought to bear upon the Chief Executive in making the appointments, we may have another biased board. From the point of view of labor and from the point of view of industry, they have everything to gain and nothing to lose by having written upon the statute books an out-and-out standard of minimum-wage and maximum-hour legislation. The small industries and isolated groups of labor have a great deal to gain by such a type of legislation. Let us provide definite standards, both as to minimum wages and as to maximum hours, but preserve the right of collective bargaining above those standards.

I should like to see this bill recommitted to the Committee on Education and Labor and a thorough study given to this problem, and after due consideration a sounder measure brought forth having the same objectives, but not the same objections.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when this body assigned to the Committee on Education and Labor the task of presenting a bill on the question of minimum wages and maximum hours, it assigned it a most difficult task. As difficult in many respects as any measure coming before the Senate since I have been a Member. This measure involves principles as far reaching, economically and politically, as any bill which could be presented upon a question of this nature.

I am a member of the Committee on Education and Labor. During most of the time when the committee was considering this bill I was deeply interested in another question; but I found time to read all the hearings, and I attended the sessions of the committee when the measure was being framed. I desire to say that I think the committee as a whole recognized the great difficulty of the problem, and I am sure it earnestly labored to find a solution for it. The bill which came from the committee itself, as contradistinguished from the bill which was first introduced, discloses the earnestness and ability with which the committee dealt with the measure. I have only commendation for the ability and sincerity of my colleagues on the committee.

Mr. President, to me this problem is one of method. The question is, How shall we reach the problem of minimum wage and of maximum hours? I feel that every man or woman who is worthy of hire is entitled to sufficient compensation to maintain a decent standard of living. It is upon that theory that I proceeded to the consideration of the measure, and upon that theory I now consider it.

We are not undertaking to fix a full wage; we are not dealing with that question at all. We are not undertaking to fix a maximum wage; we are not dealing with that subject at all. We are dealing with one question, so far as wages are concerned, and that is a minimum wage. I associate the question of a minimum wage with what I call a minimum standard of decent living. I think every part of the country North or South, East or West is prepared to pay a sufficient wage to maintain workmen in a standard of decent living. As a nation we must do that.

I do not think any business has the right to demand the labor or to employ the labor of another at a wage below that on which the employee can live, and live in a fairly decent way. It must be that our industries can take care of that kind of a standard. If we were dealing here with the question of a full wage or maximum wage, I could understand perfectly that it would be impracticable to deal with it without taking into consideration questions of differentials and questions of location, environment, and all conditions. But it costs just about so much to live fairly decently in every part of the United States, and it seems to me that we ought to be prepared, as we are moving out of the depression which we have suffered, to pay a wage which will maintain the workman upon a standard of decent living.

Therefore, I felt that we could establish a uniform minimum wage in the United States. I would recognize immediately, as I have said, that if we were dealing with the full wage question no such uniform rule could be established, but when we are dealing purely with the question of a minimum wage, which must not be lower than that upon which the workman can live, and as it costs about the same to live in different parts of the United States, I thought we could approach a reasonable minimum wage and write it into the law. That was my view as I entertained it after studying the hearings and talking with my colleagues. I recognize the arguments against a uniform minimum wage but after considering the matter from all angles I favor writing the minimum wage into the law. I look upon a minimum wage such as will afford a decent living as a part of a sound national policy. I would abolish a wage scale below a decent standard of living just as I would abolish slavery. If it disturbed business, it would be the price we must pay for good citizens.

I am unable to get away from that theory. I feel, as a legislator, that I owe a duty to the minimum-wage employees in the United States, and that I ought not to shift that responsibility to a board over whom I have no control, who may take care of the minimum-wage employees according to my conception of what is right and wrong, or who may not.

Mr. President, I cannot forget that during the days of the N. R. A. the small-business man, or what we might call the little man in the industrial world, did not have a fair chance to present his cause, and that was not necessarily by reason of the fact that anybody desired to deny him a fair opportunity; it was by reason of conditions and circumstances which no one could control, and over which no one had control. The small man would come here to Washington, stay a day or so, or a week, if he got here at all, and then be compelled to return to his home. The men of great means, of powerful industrial organizations, were here all the time. They had their agents and representatives here all the time. They had their case complete and thorough, ready to present, and in the end it was their view which prevailed, necessarily.

I have a very strong feeling that the employees of this country, who most need protection, will never see the proposed board, and the board will never see them and never hear of them. If the members of the board take trips over the country, they may see where the employees are at work; but so far as the real facts of the employment and the conditions which confront them are concerned, the facts with which the board has to deal, I have a feeling that as a practical proposition the board will never be able to reach them, never be able to see them, never have their case before them.

The question of a minimum wage will be presented by the employer. He will have the case thoroughly organized and thoroughly fixed for presentation. He will come here to Washington, or meet the board at the office of the leading citizen of the local town or city, the meeting place of the community where the board goes, and he will present the case. Then, associated with this employer will be the business concerns of the city, the business concerns of the community, those who are opposed to increasing wages, fearing it will hurt business or close up business. All the facts, all the arguments, all the pressure will come from those who will say these industries cannot pay higher wages; if you increase wages they will have to quit. The man or woman working for 15 or 20 cents a day will not have much to say. As a legislator, I feel it is my duty to write his protection in the law.

Mr. President, I feel from experience and observation that the man who most needs attention will not get attention from the board. I am not one of those who are concerned with or feel uneasy about the board jacking up the minimum wage too high. I do not feel concerned about that. The tremendous pressure which will be brought to bear on the board to leave things as they are in the different parts of the country will prevent any radical uplifting of the minimum wages. But I do fear that these wages will be left almost indefinitely where they are.

I would, therefore, fix a minimum wage. I would fix it upon the basis of the reasonable cost of decent living. No one has a right to call upon labor on any other basis. I would write it into the law. I would make it uniform, so far as minimum wages are concerned, throughout the United States. For this reason I hesitated to follow the committee in establishing a board.

Another reason why I hesitated to support the proposition of establishing a board was that if we give the board sufficient power to do what it is necessary for it to do, we have to grant it a power which I hesitate to grant to any board.

I am of the opinion that the proposed board would practically control and determine the industrial interests of the different communities of the United States if it should exercise the power proposed to be granted it, and undoubtedly it would do so.

It is entirely too much power to grant to any five men. If they should exercise the power unwisely or inefficiently, it would be disastrous. If they should undertake to exercise it efficiently, it would take 1,000 men instead of 5 men in order to survey this entire situation, get the conditions as they say they must have them, and understand the different situations in which the people work. If you depart from a uniform wage based on a decent standard of living and undertake to examine into all questions touching possibility of injury to this or that business, it is an impossible task.

So we are imposing upon them a task which in the first place, in my judgment, will be governed largely by those who are interested in maintaining the wage at its present level. All the powerful influence of newspapers in the community, and the business in the community, and the employers in the community, and everyone else concerned with the community, will be telling the board how it will break up business if you increase wages in this community. I prefer to write it into the law. I think it can be done, and I think that was the view of a number of the labor leaders, although not of all of them.

Mr. President, if we establish this precedent of giving to a board the power to fix minimum wages and the power to fix maximum hours, what does that precedent mean when we come to follow it up throughout the course of the years and consider how it may be used in other instances? We will be used to justifying things now now contemplated. When you establish a precedent in a new field we ought to hesitate long, and try to think out where we are going.

I recall under Mr. Hoover's administration that we established the precedent of permitting Mr. Hoover, through his Tariff Board, to increase or decrease tariffs, 50 percent up or 50 percent down. It was said on the floor of the Senate at the time that that precedent would be spread over the entire subject of tariffs and revenues, but the power was granted. I recall that when the succeeding administration came in it availed itself of the precedent established by Mr. Hoover and extended it to international tariffs, and today, my friends, the Congress of the United States sits on the side lines and has not a thing on earth to do with the question of exports and imports or with tariffs and revenues from that source.

That is the way it spreads. And when we establish the precedent of giving to a board the power to fix minimum wages and maximum hours it must inevitably follow in years to come that prices will be fixed in respect to other matters.

Yesterday there was a spirited debate on the floor of the Senate for a few minutes on the question of dictators and dictatorships. Mr. President, ordinarily when we speak of a dictator we think of some strutting colonel at the head of a ragamuffin army, or of street barricades, or regimented "shirts." We may have in mind some person of extraordinary ability who, appealing to the homeless and the hungry, undertakes openly to seize the reins of arbitrary power. But that is not the way that arbitrary government will come in the United States. That is not the way by which arbitrary power will be established. For myself, when I think of "dictator" in the United States, I think of precedents rather than persons. I think not of individuals but of systems. I do not think of some adventurer whom the assassin's dagger might remove, but I think of institutions set up, often for a perfectly good purpose, which secretly, silently, remorselessly undermine and sap the character and the stamina, the self-reliance, and the self-governing capacity of the people. I think of governmental institutions superimposed upon the people, but which the people are powerless to change. And what power could the people have over these five men? Who could control them so far as the people are concerned? They are not elected by the people. They are not subject to their recall. They are created from another source, and you have to travel many different ways to reach them at all.

It is precedents of which I am afraid. Washington might have been President as long as he lived had he desired. As conditions then were it would have been as well, but it would have established a precedent upon which personal government might have been and probably would have been established in this country. Abraham Lincoln is the only man in the history of the world, so far as I, from my limited reading, have discovered, who at the head of a vast army, devoted to him, in the midst of civil war, permitted his continuance in power to rest upon the result of a popular election. Doubtless no thought of doing otherwise ever entered his mind, or, if it did, it did not linger long enough to taint the loyalty of his steadfast soul. But we know he was surrounded by able men, leaders and statesmen, who contended that the Constitution was suspended, that he could not be elected, and that if he was not elected the cause would be lost. So we can hear them say to him, "It is your duty to save the Union, and after you are through with the emergency restore to the people whatever rights they may have left."

We know, my friends, that when Bruening appealed to article 48 in the Weimar Constitution he established a precedent which enabled his successor to walk in and without even the violation of law wipe out the last vestige of liberty of a great people.

It is easy to establish precedents and to do so with the best of faith, but we certainly ought to stop, when we are establishing a precedent, and see in what respect it will ultimately work as to the interest or to the disadvantage of the American people.

I noticed the other day in the press dispatches that beginning in September and continuing for 1 year Rome is to celebrate the two-thousandth anniversary of Augustus Caesar. That calls up a wealth of precedents. It tells the story of how the Roman Republic passed into the Roman Empire through precedent, never by acknowledged violation of law—always under color of law, never in avowed violation of law, but by establishing precedents having the appearance of loyalty.

When Julius Caesar was assassinated in the senate chamber his great-nephew, young Octavius, was 18 years of age. When Mark Antony read Caesar's will over the body of the dead chieftain it was discovered that the great-nephew was also his adopted son. Immediately young Octavius desired to raise an army of 3,000 men, composed of his uncle's veterans, and place himself at the head of the army. But under the constitution of Rome no private citizen was permitted to place himself at the head of an organized force. To do so would bring him speedily to the Tarpeian Rock. Young Caesar appealed to Cicero, the greatest authority on the constitution in Rome, the defender of the constitution, and asked Cicero to find him a way by which he could be permitted to raise an army of 3,000 men, he agreeing to pay the expenses himself. There was no precedent for it. There was no law permitting it. But Cicero finally engineered a plan by making Caesar praetor, which was also in violation of the constitution, and permitted him to raise an army of 3,000 men. Two years after that, both consuls being killed upon the field of battle, young Caesar desired to stand for the consulship, but the constitution of Rome required that the consul be 40 years of age, and Caesar was only 20. So Caesar sent word to the senate that he desired to stand for the consulship. The senate promptly rejected the proposal. Thereupon Caesar sent a deputation from this little army which he had been permitted to raise advising the senate that he desired to stand for the consulship.

The senate—rather reluctantly, but finally—rejected the proposal. The next news which reached the senate was that the little army which he had been permitted to raise was on the march to Rome. Thereupon the pusillanimous senate began to hunt for precedents which would justify permitting young Caesar to stand for the consulship. They could find no precedents, but, their courage giving out, they permitted him to stand, and he was elected consul. Immediately upon his election he procured the election of his cousin, a complacent and rather inconsequential person, to the other consulship. Thereupon Caesar made friends with Mark Antony, with whom he had been in conflict, and they formed the first triumvirate. Immediately upon forming the first triumvirate they established a court composed of their own friends to try their enemies, and there began the bloodiest proscription that Rome ever knew. The first head to come off its shoulders was that of Cicero, who had helped to establish the precedent 2 years before which enabled Caesar to raise his own army.

It is by establishing precedents, oftentimes in perfect good faith, that we encroach further and further upon the rights of the people, possibly not intending and not desiring to do so, but nevertheless effectively limiting their rights and their powers. I say that when we place all the minimum-wage employees of the United States under the control of a board at Washington we have placed them at the mercy of a board over which they have no control and against which they can exercise no power. It is a precedent almost startling in its significance. It will be relied on to do things we have no thought of justifying by our action at this time. I do not want to place the wage earners of this country under control of a bureau.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will not the board be appointed by the President, and must not the nominations of members of the board be confirmed by the Senate under the bill?

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. What distinction does the Senator from Idaho make between the board selected in that way and the method that is now employed in appointing the judges of the Federal courts?

Mr. BORAH. I do not make any distinction at all. The judges of the Federal courts, however, are confined to the duty of deciding only such matters as the citizen brings before them and according to law written by the people or the representatives of the people.

Mr. ELLENDER. But they are appointed for life, whereas in the case of the board its members would be appointed only for a short tenure, 1 year to 5 years under this bill, and they could be removed, could they not?

Mr. BORAH. I suppose they could be, but not at the instance of the minimum-wage worker. The man or woman dissatisfied with their wage would have no say, no appeal—they are powerless.

What I am contending is that it is attempted to give the board a power which is supreme with reference to the rights of the workers. Suppose the board should fix a minimum wage that is unsatisfactory to the people in the Senator's State, what would he do about it?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Suppose, under the plan of the Senator from Idaho, the Congress should fix a wage that was unsatisfactory; how would the workers get relief?

Mr. BORAH. The Members of the Congress, both in the Senate and in the House, have to be elected, and the people could express themselves at an election and remove them from office if they desired.

Mr. ELLENDER. In the same way, I say that a board which fixes wages which were unsatisfactory could be kicked out.

Mr. BORAH. They could not be kicked out by the power of those who would be affected by the minimum wage which had been fixed. They would have no control over that situation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Would their retention not form the same issue at an election?

Mr. BORAH. I suppose one could say that if he thought it was the best he could do. I do not say that. I say that when we place over the workers a power which they cannot remove, which they cannot control, and which I cannot control, then I have shifted my responsibility. I contend that it is my duty, as a legislator, to say what the minimum wage should be, and it is no more difficult for me to find that out than it is for the board to find it out, and I am directly responsible to my constituents. I do not for my part propose to speculate with human misery or procrastinate with human needs. Who knows when this board will act; who knows what it will do when it does act? Who knows what relief it will give to those working at pauper wages? No, no; we cannot shirk our responsibility.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McADOO. I am very much interested in the argument of the Senator from Idaho, and I should like to ask him whether he has in mind any minimum wage which he would incorporate in the proposed legislation?

Mr. BORAH. I would provide in the first instance 30 cents an hour. I would give time to readjust and then I would increase. We are in session every year.

Mr. McADOO. And what would the Senator provide as to maximum hours?

Mr. BORAH. I would leave the provision concerning maximum hours as it is now. I do not think there is so much trouble about maximum hours. There are instances where maximum hours of 40, perhaps, would work some injury; but if we are going to establish the rule of minimum wages and maximum hours, we have got to consider that it will be necessary to pay something for it somewhere in order to be right in this matter.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he would impose such a rigid minimum wage as that upon an industry which could not possibly continue to exist and pay such a wage?

Mr. BORAH. That brings us right back to the proposition of which I have just spoken. Are we going to select a commission of five who will permit employers to pay a wage upon which the workers cannot live? That is what we are selecting them for. The truth of the business is that we are turning this job over to a board which is going to do what we do not want to do; namely, leave wages where they are. The whole argument in favor of the board is in favor of letting these low wages stand.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a further question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator from Idaho not overlooking the fact that in respect to the board exercising the power conferred by this bill they will act as a fact-finding body, in the first place, and raise the existing wage up to 40 cents, when such a raise of an existing wage can be made without curtailing opportunity for employment, without reducing production, in the case of a reduction of hours, and without disturbing or dislocating business? In other words, the power of the board is to require a fair division of profits when it can be done, so as to raise the existing wage, whereas the Congress——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me to conclude, whereas the Congress, in fixing an arbitrary minimum, would exercise no discretion whatever and could not possibly have the facts before it to justify the exercise of such judgment?

Mr. BORAH. The Congress has one fact before it, which is easily ascertainable and easily demonstrable, and that is what it costs to live.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator expect a private individual to pay other private individuals the necessary cost of their living out of the employer's business when he cannot afford to do that?

Mr. BORAH. I take the position that a man who employs another must pay him sufficient to enable the one employed to live.

Mr. PEPPER. What if he cannot afford to pay it?

Mr. BORAH. If he cannot afford to pay it, then he should close up the business. No business has a right to coin the very lifeblood of workmen into dollars and cents.

Mr. PEPPER. What becomes of the constitutional guaranty against taking property for private use without just compensation?

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand that that would have any application.

Mr. PEPPER. We entrust boards with the power to regulate public utilities. Can any board require a public utility to put into effect a rate which will not give it a fair return on its investment without violating the due process of law provision of the Federal Constitution?

Mr. BORAH. No. A public utility is a public carrier, and, of course, being a public carrier, it is impressed with a public interest and we can control it. But we are not even attempting to do that with business concerns. We simply say that a certain wage shall be the minimum wage, the lowest upon which a person can sustain a decent standard of living. We are not calling upon John Jones or John Smith to employ any man; we are not compelling them to employ anyone at all; we are simply saying that the worker is entitled to so much, and if they want to employ him they must pay him that wage. They need not employ him if they do not desire to do so. Let us not make the mistake of assuming that the employers own these people and that we are taking their property without just compensation.

Mr. PEPPER. What difference is there between the Senator's position as he is now expressing it and the position he would be taking if he said the Congress and not the Interstate Commerce Commission should fix freight rates?

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly it would be a more difficult proposition for the Congress to fix freight and passenger rates, but we would have the power to do it, and it is our primary duty to do it. I recognize that there are times when administrative boards are necessary but not here. I would never extend bureaucracy beyond absolute necessity. We selected a commission to do it but fixing freight rates is a wholly different proposition in my mind from fixing the wage the man must receive in order to live.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. At that point, let me ask the Senator what would be the difference? In one case the effect would be upon industry and in the other the effect would be upon labor. What other difference would there be?

Mr. BORAH. One affects human life, human existence, and the right to live. I insist that American industry can pay its employees enough to enable them to live.

Mr. ELLENDER. Without exception?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; without exception. If it cannot do so, let it close up. I say that we have not any right to work slaves in this country, either white or black. I am opposed to peon labor, whether it is employed by one man or another. I start with the proposition that the right to live is higher than the right to own a business.

Mr. ELLENDER. I agree with the Senator, except as to the method of accomplishing the purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want a board created to which big lumber companies can come and control, and leave unprotected the poor devil who must live upon a wage that would be less than he could actually sustain life upon.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course the Senator from Idaho is assuming that the board would be controlled by big business.

Mr. BORAH. I have never seen many bureaus in Washington that were not. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I will yield in a moment. I know that one of the brainiest men and one of the most candid men at the head of the N. R. A. said to one of my colleagues, "I feel sorry for the poor devil, but the time has come when the little man must go. Our economic system does not fit in with him." I do not want the little man to get into that kind of a situation.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is not the Senator from Idaho now making the same argument against the creation of a proposed board to carry out a congressional function that was made against the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Reserve Board, and all the other boards and commissions that have necessarily been created in order to administer acts of Congress because the Congress could not do the necessary work itself without assuming to do it as a town meeting and undertaking to go into the details with respect to all matters of freight rates, and passenger rates and practices on railroads, and also into the functions of finance and banking, and undertaking to do the same thing with respect to illegal practices that are now corrected or regulated by the Federal Trade Commission? All these boards and commissions have been created because the Congress, from time immemorial, ever since it realized it had to enter such fields, recognized the fact that it could not sit continuously and do the things that were necessary to be done without the intervention of some board as its agent.

Mr. BORAH. I was not here when the Interstate Commerce Commission was created. Very likely I would have said something like I am saying now, but it would have presented a different case entirely to my mind. I am not misled about what is happening here. I know perfectly well we are creating a board for the purpose of having these things to continue. The whole argument in favor of a board seems to be that we must raise wages. A board gives delay.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that is true, though I am sure the Senator does not mean to do so, yet by implication he impugns the good faith of the committee which has tried to work out this matter. At least by implication he undertakes to convince the Senate that the committee and the Senate and the Congress, if they passed this bill and create the board, are doing it deliberately in order that the status quo may be maintained with respect to low wages.

Mr. BORAH. I am not impugning my colleagues at all. I discussed this matter in committee. I am not impugning my colleagues at all. I have a high respect for my colleagues, as they well know.

Mr. BARKLEY. The implication is that this is being done in order to maintain the status quo.

Mr. BORAH. I do not go into men's motives. I have been here too long to inquire into men's motives. I cannot find out anything about what their motives are. I do not question the motives of anyone. I am dealing with a fact, and I say the creation of this board will result in millions of these people never being helped at all.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am sure the Senator is quite familiar with the much-talked-of case of Adkins against Children's Hospital and the opinions rendered both by the Court and the dissenting Justice in that case. In connection with the argument the Senator is now making about minimum wages, in the dissenting opinion which was rendered in that case Mr. Justice Holmes, as I am sure the Senator will recall, had this to say:

> I see no greater objection to using a board to apply standards fixed by the act than there is to the other commissions with which we have become familiar or than there is to the requirement of a license in other cases.

Mr. BORAH. I have a very profound respect for Justice Holmes, but with some of his opinions I thoroughly disagree.

Mr. MINTON. And that is one of them?

Mr. BORAH. No; I might agree with him in that opinion. They were fixing it for the District of Columbia. He was a great Justice, a very great Justice. I wish we had more of his like.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand the Senator from Idaho, he would have Congress fix the rate of pay. How would that be enforced?

Mr. BORAH. It could be enforced in numerous ways.

Mr. ELLENDER. What would be the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. BORAH. We could provide a penalty for its violation.

Mr. ELLENDER. To the same extent as has been provided in the bill now before the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. I do not remember the penal offense provided.

Mr. ELLENDER. The bill provides a penalty if the regulations of the board are violated.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator would follow the penal clauses contained in the bill?

Mr. BORAH. I have not looked into the penal clauses in this bill, and I am not familiar with them. I would make it a penal offense. I do not know whether I would use the language contained in the bill. The committee was very fortunate in its use of language and very likely I would adopt it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Suppose the district attorneys throughout the country failed to do their duty, or suppose they were dominated to the same extent as the Senator apprehends the members of the board may be, what then, may I ask the Senator, would happen—would not labor be penalized to the same extent, following your same line of argument?

Mr. BORAH. In the first place, any private citizen could file a complaint and have the violator prosecuted. He would not have to depend on the district attorney for the filing of the complaint. I am not assuming that district attorneys would likely disregard it if anybody filed a complaint.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. For my own benefit I want to get a statement from the Senator to enable me to determine whether I correctly construed the answer of the Senator in which he made the remark, concerning the Adkins case, that the wage was fixed for the District of Columbia. As I understand, practically all the minimum-wage laws we have, in Oregon, New York, the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, provide for the creation of a board and give that board the power either upon the first standard which we had in our Washington and Oregon laws to fix a standard of living, or upon two standards, as in the New York case, where they said the job was worth that amount as well. Almost uniformly in the passage of minimum-wage laws by the States that power has been given the board.

In answering the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] the Senator from Idaho said it was all right because it was for the District of Columbia. I should like to know at this point whether or not the Senator's objection is to the fact that there is one national board governing the whole country or whether his objection is to the giving of the power to the board itself.

Mr. BORAH. In the first place, I think the fact that the national board covers the whole country makes it practically impossible of application. Fundamentally, I am opposed to creating these boards which deal with the most vital matters of human life and, we might say, with practically no power upon the part of those who are directly affected to control the board. It may be that I am all wrong. I am perfectly satisfied the other way is all wrong.

We are up against the proposition of whether we are prepared in this country to pay a reasonable wage based upon the standard of a reasonable minimum decent standard of living. Are we ready to do it? If we are, let us put it in the law as we do in democracies. Let us enact a law which shall serve as a rule and a guide for every citizen so he may know where he stands, what he has to do, and that he does not have to come to Washington to find out that he will not have to take the ipsi dixit of a board; that he may know as a citizen that his country has laid down the rule, and that guides him. That is democracy.

I am just as much opposed to bureaucracy as I am to dictatorship. I am not nearly so much concerned about dictatorships, which we ordinarily speak of, as I am about bureaucracy.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] said I would be opposing other propositions of this kind. I have always done so. I presume it does not make any difference, but it is a conviction which I carry with me, and I have always done so. I may not live to see the day when it happens, but I am just as well satisfied as that I am living that the time will come when the people will uproot and throw out of existence a vast number of these bureaus. The most burdensome, the most demoralizing system of government on earth is the bureaucratic system of government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator, therefore, abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission? Would he abolish the Communications Commission, that brought order out of chaos in the air?

Mr. BORAH. If the Communications Commission continues along its present course I certainly would abolish it without the slightest hesitation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even though it restored the atmosphere to the chaotic condition which existed when the Commission was first created?

Mr. BORAH. It would not follow that the air would have to be restored to chaos if the Commission were abolished.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator vote to abolish the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. BORAH. No; I think that exists on an entirely different basis. I favor the Federal Trade Commission. It is wholly different from this.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I would. I would make radical changes it in, although that board is wholly different from this.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. I voted against the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator did?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I did. I was opposed to it and I have never been more proud of any vote in my life than of that one.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there had been no Interstate Commerce Commission, if there had been no Federal Trade Commission, no Communications Commission, no Federal Reserve Board, no Power Commission, what would have been the condition of the people of the country with an unregulated monopoly in the fields with which those agencies were set up to deal?

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does he contend that there was no way by which to deal with those matters except through commissions?

Mr. BARKLEY. I contend that Congress, by detailed legislative regulation, cannot deal with them. There may be some other way to deal with them besides the creation of a board. It may be that one man could be set up to do it, and in that event we should not have a board, but should just have one man, and would approach nearer a dictatorship than with a board. But in a vast region like the United States of America, where our country has been knitted together by rail and wire and by every form of modern transportation, where business seeks its own level as water seeks its own level, without regard to artificial or natural barriers, I do not see how Congress could attempt, by detailed legislative regulation, to protect the American people not only from injustice and from monopoly, but from chaos in carrying on our great economic and industrial enterprises and in the adjustment of our labor relations.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator assumes that the commissions do protect the people, that the commissions do protect their rights. I do not agree with that. Many of them spend the people's money and waste the people's savings.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume, and I think it is true, that the only protection the people get is through the commissions.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes; what they get! What justice they get they get through the commissions. That shows how little they get. [Laughter.] I do not admit that the Congress of the United States cannot establish rules which will govern these cases to a very large extent. I do not say at this time that I would abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission, but there are a number of commissions which I should unhesitatingly abolish.

Let me ask the Senator from Kentucky whether he believes in turning over the entire money power and the entire regulation of the money power of the United States to a board.

Mr. BARKLEY. I voted for the Federal Reserve System and for the creation of the Federal Reserve Board; and while I have not always agreed with the policies which it has adopted in the exercise of its authority, I know of no way by which the so-called money power—by which, of course, we mean not only the control of the issue and circulation of money, but also the means by which the banking institutions of our country, which are known as money institutions, are regulated and controlled—can be regulated and controlled except through the creation of an agency which has the power and the necessary coherence of organization to do that. In other words, I do not think Congress, sitting as a Congress all the time, could do that efficiently, or at all. Therefore, we must create these agencies to carry out the policies of Congress, because Congress itself cannot do anything more than to lay down broad rules and regulations which must be followed by the boards.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator be willing to write into this bill a provision that all goods produced by monopoly shall be excluded from interstate commerce?

Mr. BARKLEY I should want to think that over before I committed myself to it. Who would exercise the right to determine what goods were produced by monopoly?

Mr. BORAH. This omnipotent board of five men.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator, then, is in favor of a board to do that?

Mr. BORAH. No, I am not; but I say there is just as much reason for putting the monopoly-controlled interests of the country under a commission as there is for putting these other things under a commission; but we have never done it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Considering the various geographical situations and the differences in conditions of the whole country, does the Senator think Congress could intelligently write into the law a rigid requirement that there should be a minimum wage paid in all industry, to be the same in all sections of the United States, so that nobody could change it, and nobody could make any variation in it, and nobody could make it flexible, depending upon the conditions which might exist in various sections of the country?

Mr. BORAH. I take this position, Mr. President, which I have stated once, and I state it again:

When we are fixing a minimum wage we are undertaking to determine what is a minimum standard of decent living in the United States; and that is all we are undertaking to determine. We are not undertaking to determine what a full wage should be or what the different conditions may be which affect wages in different circumstances. We are simply determining what it costs to live; and, in my opinion, that can be determined with a fair degree of certainty; and it is much more desirable to undertake it than it is to leave its determination where it will be uncertain, because those who will suffer most will be those who need protection most.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think Congress knows what it costs to live in various parts of the country?

Mr. BORAH. I think some Congressmen do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Have we the information which would enable us to fix an inflexible standard which would not work injustices in various communities?

Mr. BORAH. Some of the great labor leaders and some of those who have studied the labor question most say we have.

Mr. BARKLEY. And some say we have not; so there is no agreement there.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I do not know; I think it is very generally agreed. I do not think it requires very much investigation to determine the cost of living in the different parts of the United States. I should not expect the figure to be exact, but I should make it high enough so that a person could live.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. How will the board know what the standard of living is, or how to fix the minimum wage? It will have to make an investigation in order to do it. It seems to me, if a board can do it, Congress can do it. Certainly, if Congress cannot find it, I do not believe a board can.

Mr. BARKLEY. The board would be in perpetual session and not subject to seasonal or long adjournments, to which Congress is subject.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, today there is scarcely a human being in the United States of America who does not believe in collective bargaining. That was not so a few years ago. That was not so until very recently. The approval of collective bargaining between capital and labor has been brought about by education, and by law recently enacted by the Congress; namely, the National Labor Relations law.

A great deal has been said about the National Labor Relations law. It has been very extensively criticized. The objective has not been criticized. The criticism has related to its mechanism and the methods of enforcement. I think it appropriate, because it is interlocked with the proposal now before the Senate, that we ask ourselves just what the National Labor Relations law provides; but before asking ourselves what that law provides, and before asking ourselves what this bill provides, let us recall the fundamental fact that virtually all laws are the result of evils or abuses practiced upon human beings through some irresponsible elements of human society.

There is no reason for a law to regulate the relations between honest and humane and conscientious employers and employees. There is no need of a law guaranteeing the right of collective bargaining to honest and conscientious employers and employees. There is no need of a motor-regulation law to regulate the speed at which motorcars shall be run by careful and conscientious motorists. There is no need of a law against larceny upon those who are honest and conscientious, and do not covet the property of others. Laws, as a rule, are enacted to eliminate and eradicate abuses. We are dealing here with human abuses and inequalities and we are confronted with the problem how and in what way we should eliminate these abuses.

Let us revert to the National Labor Relations Board. What was the abuse there? We all believe in collective bargaining. Honest and conscientious employers recognized it, and dealt with their employees; but here and there, when a small group of employees sought to organize, the economic pressure that employers possess was exercised, and one by one the employees were marched out from the factory and sent into the ranks of the unemployed because, forsooth, they were seeking to organize their fellow employees in order to engage in that which all of us conceded, and the Supreme Court said in its decision, is a "fundamental" right inherent in labor.

Not only was there that abuse, but abuses existed in other ways. Some employers even refused to recognize committees of their workers for purposes of collective bargaining. They did not think the workers had any right to consult with them as a group about the terms of their employment and the terms of their occupation. To eliminate these abuses and to define the rights of wage earners in their relationship as human beings in partnership with their employers in the production of goods and profits, we enacted a law which permitted employees to knock on the door of their employer and say, "Mr. Employer, will you please sit down with us and talk over problems of mutual interest and mutual concern?"

That is all we did. We provided the right of an employee, without pressure from his employer, without being discharged, without being intimidated, to join an organization of his own choosing, and to send free, independent agents to negotiate with the employer as to the labor conditions under which he should work.

There is nothing in that law which compels a workingman to join any union. There is nothing in that law which compels or permits any one union more than another to be used as an agency of collective bargaining by employees. There is nothing in that law which compels an employer to sign any agreement whatever with his employees. It does suggest to the employer, "Mr. Employer, your employees have the right to assemble and gather together and organize for the right to talk to you about the things that concern their and your mutual welfare, about the things that concern their social rights."

That is, in brief, the law called the national labor relations law. I am frank to admit that the enactment of that law led to a tremendous rush, a tremendous movement into organized labor unions in this country. It was not our purpose to bring this about. We were trying to remove the evils that prevented wage earners from freely organizing. I frankly concede that it did have that effect. Many new unions sprang up overnight, new and untried and inexperienced leaders reached leadership that they were not equipped to assume. Rivalries between different labor organizations followed; and, unfortunately, nearly every one of the strikes and other labor troubles we have had has been due to rivalries between different labor groups, inexperienced leadership, and not to fundamental differences between employer and employee.

We now realize that it was inevitable, as the result of the enactment of this law, that millions of workers and wage earners should enlist to enjoy the privilege of collective bargaining by joining some form or organization of organized wage earners.

I will frankly make another concession. I do not think the Federal agency created has functioned to perfection. A host of difficulties has followed. The board is sailing through uncharted waters. I think there has been a failure somewhere in officialdom to execute some of the fundamental laws of this country in order to stop some of the abuses which have followed as a result of the enactment of the law.

Officials are as much, if not more, to blame than misled wage earners for much that has occurred in recent months. I think that we can rely, as we always have to in the last analysis, on the public conscience. In the last analysis the public conscience will say to labor and to capital, "You shall not continue these abuses and lawlessness which are in violation of the public interest."

Every human being has at stake an interest in every strike which takes place in any part of the Nation. The strike in the glass factory on the far western coast affects the automobile industry in every part of the country, and the workers in that industry. There is not a strike that can occur in this country that does not vibrate its consequences all over the country, and as time goes on, and as capital and labor and these new leaders come to realize their responsibility, in my judgment the public conscience is going to settle this matter by compelling labor to exercise its rights in an orderly way and not in violation of law and compelling capital to respect the law and do justice by its employees. So much about the National Labor Relations Board.

Did we by that law solve all the evils suffered by men and women who toil and work? The act gave them a right to go to their employer; it demanded that the employers should hear them, with no compulsion as to what the result would be. It left the employer free, as he must be left free, to close his shop and factory when he sees fit; and leaving the employee, however small or large the group, the right to refuse to work whenever they saw fit to. Unless we are going into the business of legalizing slavery, we cannot compel any man to work when he does not want to work, and we cannot compel any employer to keep his factory open when he does not want to continue to operate and carry on his business.

Oh, yes; you may point out abuses of the power we entrusted to the National Labor Relations Board. It has not insured industrial peace. It was intended to promote and facilitate peaceful settlements of disputes in industry by encouraging collective bargaining thereby minimize strikes, but it does not preclude them. Temporarily it might appear to have the opposite effect. The law is a safeguard to labor, but it is not a cure-all, and as to the question of hours and wages, it has no application whatsoever except by providing the means intended to facilitate collective bargaining to that end. It is possible that some of the members of the board have not performed their functions conscientiously and honorably. I do not know about that. It is possible they have been dominated or controlled by one side or the other in the performance of their official duties. But the principle that a man or a women is free to join their fellows for the purpose of negotiating agreements with their employers for their general welfare no one can deny. We might have to reform the administration of the law, but the principle stands as almost one of the inalienable rights defined in the Constitution.

Nor is that all. What is the next abuse? The workers have the right to organize; but there are millions of wage earners in the United States who are not organized, who have no way of organizing. Shall we say to them, by direction or by statute, "Go out and organize and take advantage of the National Labor Relations Act and we will guarantee you the right to enjoy collective bargaining—organize and exercise your right to negotiate"?

This in many small industries is impractical—it is impossible. As soon as it is whispered in the little factory that John Brown is seeking to organize his men, John Brown is dismissed, and the next leader of the employees is dismissed.

Let us be practical. We are talking perhaps about the few and extreme cases, but they exist. All the evils in human nature are the result of selfishness and greed. Men organize themselves into corporations and industries for the purpose of getting more profits through organized units. That is the fact. Instead of investing our $5,000 in some undertaking, four of us come together with $20,000 in order that we may get more by putting $20,000 together than by investing $5,000 as an individual. We are dealing with human nature, and it is inherent in human nature to be selfish and greedy, and when these large units get together and treat men and women like machines, as they have done, selfishness knows no limit. Unless they can meet this urge to increase profits as organized resistance upon the part of the wage earner, the wage earner is the victim of injustice and economic exploitation.

What are we to say to the group of workers in the lowest scale of wages and who are the most exploited? Are we to tell the workers to form a labor union? We have told them we would protect them if they did.

Let me give the Senate some figures which have been handed me by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. Unfortunately, when we talk about the problems of the wage earner with the employer we think we are talking about the steel industry, and the automobile industry, and the textile industry, and the other great industrial units in the country. We might eliminate them all in the consideration of the bill. The wage earners in those industries can take care of themselves. They are organized. They are winning, in a very effective and emphatic way, the benefits of collective bargaining. But what percentage of the wage earners in this country do these big units represent? Let us see.

Where the average number of employees is between one and five there are 57,152 establishments.

Where the average number of employees is between 6 and 20 there are 40,176 establishments.

Where the average number of employees is between 21 and 50 there are 18,576 establishments.

Where the average number of employees is between 51 and 100 in an industry there are 9,262 establishments.

Where the average number of employees is over 100 and under 500 there are 10,304 establishments.

Where the average number of employees is between 500 and 2,500 there are only 1,661 establishments.

Where the number of employees in an establishment is over 2,500 there are only 120 establishments, which represents an insignificant percentage of all the wage earners of this country.

These millions in small industries are unorganized; they are in competition with industries and employees that are organized. They are in competition with employers who have accepted the principle of collective bargaining, and who have lessened the hours of employment and raised wages. They are in competition with the organized employees, because when such an employee goes to the door of his employer and presents his requests and demands, his employer presents to him the long hours of employment and the low wage scale in these establishments that are unorganized. He soon realizes that his unorganized fellow wage earners are retarding his efforts for better working conditions. To be sure, to this mass of unorganized wage earners working in these small establishments we have given the right to engage in collective bargaining, but for purposes apparent to all, they are not in a position to organize. The national labor relations law is ineffective so far as they are concerned. The organized wage earner is now handicapped by his fellow wage earner who cannot enjoy collective bargaining.

The pending bill does nothing more nor less than say, "You will not be left helpless. You few wage earners in the most remote part of this country, you 200 wage earners in a mill along the Canadian border, far from the centers of population, who cannot organize, you in sections of this country unable to exercise the right of collective bargaining—we will not leave you helpless. We will not permit your plight to injure the progress made by other employees who have acquired better working conditions. We will not punish the employer who has yielded to them. We will see to it that you, too, are given some of the benefits and some of the privileges of collective bargaining."

The bill does nothing more nor less than reach down to the lowest-paid wage earners in this country and provide machinery to enable them to engage in collective bargaining. That is all there is to the bill. The machinery is not composed of the representatives of a labor organization but the machinery is the Federal Government seeking to control and undertaking to regulate wages and hours of employment in the industries engaged in interstate commerce.

There is nothing more to the bill except the administrative features of it. The purpose and intent of the bill is that the poorest, the lowest, the humblest wage earner in this country shall not be left helpless because he has not the facilities of a labor organization to help him enjoy social justice. The Federal Government will study his plight, examine his situation, determine what are the conditions under which he works and lives, and seek to provide for him a limited number of hours of work and a minimum wage.

This bill is not concerned about wage earners that can protect their rights through collective bargaining. It excludes them from its provisions. It is only the lowest unprotected and unorganized wage earner that it seeks to protect from exploitation.

I appreciate more than any man on this floor the reluctance which we all have to delegating this great power to a Federal bureau. When I listened to the masterful speech of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the powerful and, as always, effective speech of the great Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] I could not help but feel that the argument which they made—and I do not criticize it—must have been made against every effort to establish regulation of social abuses in this country. It must have been made when the Interstate Commerce Commission was being established. It must have been made when the Federal Trade Commission was being established. It certainly was made when the National Labor Relations Board was being established. We have never set up a commission here when the force and power of that argument could not be made and has not been made. I do not resent it, for it might possibly result, in case this bill shall be enacted into law, in restraining and checking the purposes or desires of boards and commissions to exercise functions and powers that the Congress never intended to give them.

Mr. President, what is the practical question? As a member of the committee dealing with the question, I have come to believe that we could not provide for having all these protective rights settled and provided for in the bill. I sought in the first instance to have the bill provide that every industry in this country should limit its workweek to 40 hours. What was the result? Every large industry in this country welcomed the suggestion. Every organized industry welcomed the suggestion. Why? They already have a 40-hour week. They do not need the law. The law does not reach them. The law does not reach in any way, shape, or form or manner any industry in this country that is working its employees 40 hours or under. So the big industries were not disturbed and were not concerned about it.

Suppose we wrote a 40-hour week provision into the law, what would happen? What would happen to the 5 or 8 or 10 small industries in my home town in Massachusetts that are working their employees more than 40 hours a week, and paying their employees from eight to twelve and thirteen and fourteen dollars a week? What would happen if with one fell swoop we enacted a law cutting down hours of employment which in some instances are as high as 72 hours, to 40 hours a week? It would ruin and bankrupt every small industry in this country. In our desire to help the small-wage earners we would put them out on the street. The improper enforcement of this law may yet do it. But I am talking now about how we are going to meet this problem, whether we are going to leave the exploited wage earners alone, or whether we are going to endeavor to find some method which will be of assistance to them.

Mr. President, think of the proposal to enact a law that will become operative abruptly, in which every single little operating plant, and in which every person engaged in interstate commerce must go on a 40-hour-per-week schedule. How is it to be done? It ought to be done. There ought to be some way for these millions of men and women, wage earners who happen to be in small industries and have not got the power or influence of organized labor, to be enabled to get the 40-hour-per-week schedule. This bill does the only thing that can be done—it leaves it to a bureau to determine and fix the schedules. Realizing as I do all the arbitrary methods, the mistakes, and all the shortcomings of bureaucracy, yet I see no other way of dealing with the problem effectively. The board will not be in a position for weeks and months and years to get all the industries of this country down to 40 hours per week, to say nothing about the objective minimum wage of 40 cents per hour.

Mr. President, the other proposal in this bill relates to wages. There is nothing in this bill which requires this board to fix any minimum wage whatever that would injure any existing business or that would cause any unemployment. It is emphatically expressed in the bill that the objective of this Government is to express through its Congress that we shall reach, as soon as practical, for all wage earners, 40 hours per week and that we shall reach, as soon as practical, a minimum wage of at least $16 per week. But there is nothing to prevent this board from fixing the wage for the next year in many of the industries of this country at $12, at $10, at $15 or less.

Mr. President, with this background, what is the problem before us, so well stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] today? We want to help these poor unfortunates. We cannot in justice to many employers do it by specific and definite hour-and-wage provisions in the law.

What defense have we to offer when we go back to these wage earners and look them in the face? Can we explain to them and their families by asserting, "I did not trust a bureau. I did not rely on a commission. I believe you are working too long. I believe you ought to have some rights as unorganized workers. I believe your pay is low and miserable and I would give it to you if there were any way of doing it, but the country is so diversified, with so many industries, we could not pass one general law in Congress, and we were afraid, we were frightened to entrust your rights to a bureau, lest it be too arbitrary"?

As for me, I have reached the conclusion that my duty in helping to improve the working conditions of these classes of wage earners is fulfilled by writing into this bill every limitation, every suggestion, every condition that we can think of, and then leave all question of final adjudication and judgment as to maximum hours and minimum wages to this board.

Mr. President, I have not made this argument for the purpose of influencing anyone. I want the RECORD to show my position, and this position I have come to after long study, after long consideration of this measure, after trying to find some way under heaven that we could get rid of another bureau or could find some other way of handling this problem. I confess that I have failed to find any other way without immediate ruin and destruction that would accomplish this most important desideratum.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks the table to which I previously referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

1933

	Number of establishments	Percent of all establishments	Average number of wage earners	Percent of all wage earners
0	4,518	3.2
1–5	57,152	40.3	158,275	2.6
6–20	40,176	28.3	445,088	7.4

2,501 and up	120	.1	546,196	9.0
	141,769	100.0	6,055,736	100.0

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the remarks I made sometime ago I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD certain tables which were submitted to the Committee on Education and Labor during the hearings on the bill now under consideration. These tables will show that in 71 industries employing a total of 784,000 employees, 287,582 were receiving less than 40 cents per hour. The percentage of the number of employees receiving less than 40 cents per hour is 36.7 percent of all employees.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Employees with hourly wages less than 40 cents, classified by industries (prior or during N. R. A.)

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I desire to discuss briefly an amendment which I have submitted in the form of a substitute for the committee amendment, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

That (a) there is hereby created a Board, to be known as the Labor Standards Board, which shall be composed of five members who shall be appointed by the President and with the advice and consent of the Senate and in such appointment industrial and geographic regions shall be given consideration. The President shall from time to time designate one of the members of the Board to act as chairman. One of the original members of the Board shall be appointed for a term of 1 year, one for a term of 2 years, one for a term of 3 years, one for a term of 4 years, and one for a term of 5 years, and their successors shall be appointed for terms of 5 years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

(b) A vacancy in the Board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Board. The Board shall adopt its own rules of procedure including provision as to the number of members necessary to constitute a quorum but no order establishing a working week shall be made except by a majority of the Board. The Board shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(c) Each member of the Board shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment.

(d) The Board may select, employ, and fix the compensation of an executive secretary and such attorneys, examiners, regional directors, accountants, special consultants, and experts as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties of the Board, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States. The Board may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other employees as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties of the Board and shall fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Board may establish and utilize such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed. Attorneys appointed under this section may at the direction of the Board appear for and represent the Board in any case in court. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Board, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

(e) The principal office of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all of its powers at any other place. The Board may, by one or more of its members or authorized representatives, or by such other agents or agencies as the Board may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its functions in any part of the United States.

(f) The Board shall submit annually a report to the Congress covering the work of the Board for the preceding year and including such information, data, and recommendations for further legislation in connection with the matters covered by this act as it may find advisable.

SEC. 2. (a) The Board shall take a census of unemployment, as hereinafter provided, for the purpose of determining the number of unemployed persons in the United States over 16 and under 65 years of age who are physically and mentally employable. Said unemployed persons shall be classified by race, sex, age, customary occupation, and the causes and duration of their unemployment.

(b) The Board shall establish throughout the several States and the District of Columbia local agencies and, where practicable and desirable, shall establish one such agency in each county and one for approximately each 30,000 of population in each city of 30,000 population or over, according to the last census taken or estimates furnished by the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce. Such agencies shall consist of three members, who shall be appointed by the Board without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

(c) All said unemployed persons shall register with such local agencies in such manner and at such times and places as the Board shall direct. Upon the completion of such registration, the local agencies shall report promptly the results, classified as provided for in paragraph (a) of this section, to the Board and such local agencies shall then be abolished.

(d) Beginning on January 1, 1938, and every 3 months thereafter, said persons, so long as they remain unemployed, shall register at the nearest office of the United States Employment Service in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Board shall prescribe. The Director of the United States Employment Service shall report promptly the results of each such registration to the Board.

(e) No part of any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for relief or work relief shall be used or expended, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of any person who willfully fails or refuses to register as provided for in this section.

SEC. 3. (a) Upon the receipt of the registration report provided for in paragraph (c) of section 2, the Board shall establish working weeks as follows: (1) If more than 8,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 30-hour working week; (2) if more than 6,000,000 but not more than 8,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 32-hour working week; (3) if more than 4,000,000 but not more than 6,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 34-hour working week; (4) if more than 2,000,000 but not more than 4,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 36-hour working week; or (5) if 2,000,000 such persons or less are found to be unemployed, a 40-hour working week.

(b) The working weeks established by the Board shall continue in force until the subsequent registration reports provided for in paragraph (d) of section 2 show a sufficient change in the number of such persons unemployed, in which event the Board shall establish a new working week in accordance with paragraph (a) of this section.

SEC. 4. On and after January 1, 1938, no article or commodity shall be shipped, transported, delivered, or received in interstate or foreign commerce which was produced or manufactured under conditions which are inimicable to the public interest in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed: Provided, That upon the submission of satisfactory proof of the existence of special conditions in any industry included herein, making it necessary for certain persons to be employed for a longer period of time than that provided for in the established working week, the Board may issue exemption permits with respect to such persons, relieving the employer from the provisions of this act with reference to such persons.

SEC. 5. (a) No article or commodity shall be purchased by the United States, or any department or organization thereof, from any business enterprise operating contrary to any provision of this act, or if such article or commodity was produced or manufactured in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed on and after January 1, 1938, for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed on and after such date.

(b) Each contract made with a contractor for any Federal public work shall contain a provision that the contractor will buy no article or commodity to use on or in any public work from any business enterprise violating any of the terms or provisions of this act, and will buy no article or commodity which was produced in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed on and after January 1, 1938, for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed on and after such date.

SEC. 6. (a) No Federal governmental agency shall make or renew any loan to any employer of labor in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed on and after January 1, 1938, for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed on and after such date.

(b) On and after January 1, 1938, any such employer of labor who applies for a loan from any such governmental agency shall agree at the time of making application for such loan that so long as he is indebted to the United States he will not permit any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, to work for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board and that he will not employ child labor. In the event that there is a violation by any such employer of his agreement, the full amount of the unpaid principal of the loan made to such employer shall be immediately payable.

SEC. 7. On and after January 1, 1938, it shall be unlawful to sell, ship, transport, deliver, or receive into any State any goods or commodities produced or manufactured in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed, if the State into which such goods or commodities are delivered or proposed to be delivered has in effect a statute prohibiting the employment in such business of employees for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or a statute prohibiting the employment of child labor.

SEC. 8. On and after January 1, 1938, it shall be unlawful for any employer subject to any of the provisions of this act to reduce, directly or indirectly, the daily, weekly, or monthly wage rate in effect on such date (or, in the case of an applicant for a loan from a governmental agency, on the date his application is submitted) with respect to any of his employees until a reasonable opportunity has been afforded to his employees, through representatives of their own choosing by a majority vote, to meet with the employer or his representatives and to discuss and consider fully all questions which may arise in connection with the reduction of such wage rate.

SEC. 9. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this act, or who fails to comply with any of its requirements, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned for not more than 3 months, or both.

SEC. 10. (a) This act shall not apply to commodities or articles produced or manufactured prior to January 1, 1938.

(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to agricultural or farm products processed for first sale by the original producer.

SEC. 11. As used in this act—

(a) The term "30-hour working week" means a period of time in any calendar week consisting of not more than 5 days in any one of which not more than 6 hours of work is required or permitted.

(b) The term "32-hour working week" means a period of time in any calendar week consisting of not more than 5 days in any one of which not more than 6⅖ hours of work is required or permitted.

(c) The term "34-hour working week" means a period of time in any calendar week consisting of not more than 5 days in any one of which not more than 6⅘ hours of work is required or permitted.

(d) The term "36-hour working week" means a period of time in any calendar week consisting of not more than 5 days in any one of which not more than 7⅕ hours of work is required or permitted.

(e) The term "40-hour working week" means a period of time in any calendar week consisting of not more than 5 days in any one of which not more than 8 hours of work is required or permitted.

(f) The term "child labor" means the labor of any person less than 16 years of age.

SEC. 12. If any provision, clause, or paragraph of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision, clause, or paragraph to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 13. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I shall not trespass long upon the time of the Senate nor impose upon its patience. Mine is a simple amendment, written in simple language.

No one appreciates more than I do the handicap I suffer by speaking after the sincere oration of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the enlightening address of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the educational and penetrating speech of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the devastating speeech, as it seems to me, of the brilliant Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the impassioned plea for distressed people made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

There is not much new in the amendment I have offered.

Sometime ago, before the introduction of the so-called Black-Connery bill, I introduced a bill which is in large part the same as the amendment about which I speak at the moment. The pending bill came rather suddenly upon me out of the committee, and I felt a need for a hurried preparation of an amendment. Just a little while ago we observed the experience of one piece of proposed legislation which the President of the United States vetoed because it developed that the Congress had undertaken to usurp the executive power.

In my original bill, in an attempt to avoid bureaucracy completely, and in a further attempt to avoid any unnecessary expenditure of money, I proposed that a Federal unemployment commission should be created. It was my suggestion in that bill that the commission be composed of the Attorney General, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Chairman of the Social Security Board. I was of the opinion that those officials, high among those in administrative circles of the Government, were, and should be, more closely connected with this subject than anyone outside of Congress. But, fearful that this was trespassing upon the powers of the Executive, and anxious to submit an amendment to a bill which it seemed to me was to be hurried through the Congress, I adopted in part a proposal which came originally from the Committee on Education and Labor. A large part of the amendment which I have offered is in the exact language of the proposal which came from that committee.

I am perfectly willing that there should be a board, a salaried board, to administer the provisions of the bill if it should be enacted into law. I am willing to give some power to a board or a bureau, but I am not willing to put into the hands of any bureau or governmental agency the power to punish or the opportunity to make grave mistakes. In the very simply phrased amendment which I have offered, which contains little that is new, there is afforded the power to a board to relieve industry, to answer some of the questions raised by members of the Senate from various parts of the country, to take care of the canner who might be affected, to take care of the farmer who is engaged in a seasonal processing of his own product, or to take care of any emergency that might arise, in order that industry might not be penalized by too exacting a law.

Mr. President, since the beginning of the depression I have favored regulation of working hours. It has always seemed to me that we were challenged by inventive genius, and that it became the responsibility of the Government and the Congress to meet that challenge. I say this lest someone have the mistaken notion that this proposal of mine is an attempt at sabotage. I want the Senate to adopt my amendment. I want my substitute for the Black-Connery bill to be adopted. If I may be sure of a reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow morning by the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, I am sure it will get more than passing attention.

I have no particular pride about it, but long before the regulation of working hours was considered by anyone in the Congress I considered and made such a proposal. I believe—and I say this with some hesitancy, but for the purpose of impressing upon my colleagues my sincerity of purpose and intensity of feeling—that I was the first public official in this country to propose a Federal regulation of working hours.

I have in my hand a pamphlet that I published on May 16, 1932, and sent to every Member of Congress at that time, entitled "Governmental Regulation of Working Hours and Permanent Relief." I have not changed my mind a bit since that time. I have thought that a 30-hour bill might be drastic, but in the dark days I would have favored it.

I voted to regulate Wall Street and voted for the "death sentence" on holding companies, and have tried to aid in attempts to restrain unfair monopolistic abuses. I would join in an effort to banish investment trusts, because they represent something worse than monopoly. There will be no trouble in getting me to give my probably feeble assistance in any attempt to regulate any public utility, and I think my record of 5 years in Congress will prove it. I could not vote a day or two ago for the so-called 70-car bill, sponsored by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], because I personally felt that it was a kick at the railroads when they were down. A vote for the bill appeared to me to be a vote against labor, and a vote against collective bargaining, and a vote against safety; for under constant pressure the railroads cannot survive as independent transportation systems, and we shall see them pass to governmental ownership and operation.

I want to avoid that. I am opposed to the Government being in business, although I think it is a governmental responsibility to regulate certain kinds of business. In New England our largest railroad is in process of reorganization. The stockholders are being wiped out. The railroads cannot of their own desire raise rates to meet new expenses. The added millions they would be forced to expend under the 70-car bill, in my opinion, might well mean a curtailment elsewhere that would hurt labor. If they felt compelled to raise rates—and recently they were lowered—some of their business would go elsewhere. That would afford little comfort to railroad men and their families.

I may say parenthetically, however, that I had no hesitancy in voting for another proposal presented by the very able Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. I remember that it was decided by one vote. I voted for the McCarran prevailing-wage amendment because it seemed to me it was of great concern and need to labor.

I voted for the Wagner Act. I voted for the first Agricultural Adjustment Act, and I voted for the N. R. A. at the same time, and for the same reasons, because there was distress, Mr. President. We were then staggering helplessly and blindly, and some persons were staggering hopelessly, in the wilderness.

I can vote for almost any kind of a regulatory bill. The amendment that I propose in the form of a substitute bill this afternoon is not anything more than a 40-hour-week bill. That is all it provides, unless there are millions of men out of work. After that, it is intended to give labor economic force by creating a little competition for labor. I am willing that there should be a minimum wage, although I make no provision for that in the amendment; but to me it seems a farce to propose a minimum wage of $16 a week. I want to give labor a position of strength by keeping apace with inventive genius. My amendment is intended to do that, and will do it.

The original bill may have the effect of retarding wages. There is a ceiling for wages in the bill, but there is no floor, Mr. President.

My amendment cannot be laughed off or brushed aside by those who want to help labor. As I said a few moments ago, I introduced it in the form of a bill before the pending original bill came to the attention of the Senate; and I should like to take just a moment to say that I experienced a pleasant feeling just a little while ago when the so-called Black-Connery bill was under consideration before the combined committees of the House and Senate.

I noticed that the proposal which I now offer was submitted to the House by no one other than the able, brilliant, generous, self-effacing, and self-sacrificing chairman of the Committee on Labor of the House. I did not ask Representative Billy Connery to introduce that bill. I do not know why he did it, Mr. President; but I assume that he must have seen some possibilities in it, that he must have recognized some plausibility in it, when of his own accord he presented it to Congress in order that it might be before his committee.

In fairness to him and in fairness to my own feelings, I think I ought to take just a moment here—and I am sure the Senate will not deny me this—to pay a word of tribute to that great chairman. There used to be a practice here, Mr. President, as you (the President pro tempore in the chair) will remember better than some other Members, of setting aside in the Senate a day each year when Members of this body might digress from their regular labors to give expression to their sentiment and their admiration and their feelings for Members of the body who had been called away. It seemed to me a noble and a beautiful practice. I am sorry it has been abandoned, because while all of us here have the right to get up and pay any kind of tribute we may desire, there is a feeling on the part of some of us who do not speak often that it is trespassing a little bit on the regular business of the Senate. Such a practice exists in another body. A great many Members there have paid tribute to this man who worked so untiringly and successfully on behalf of labor; and for my own sake and comfort, and because of the great admiration and affection I had for him, I should like to pay a word of humble tribute to my former colleague in the House.

Mr. President, I said that this is a simple amendment, but I want to point out that it approaches the subject of unemployment in a way that seems to me most important. It has been said on the floor of the Senate this afternoon that no member of the Committee on Education and Labor can know how many industries will be affected if the pending bill becomes law. There is a great difference of opinion concerning how many persons are out of work. We use different figures at different times. We do not know how many industries will be involved. We do not know how many persons who are without employment are physically and mentally able to go to work. It seems to me that even at this late day Congress should assume its responsibility and take steps to find out what is the true situation concerning the greatest problem that has ever confronted the American people except in time of war.

Recently Members of Congress suffered great mental anguish because of a proposal concerning the Supreme Court. We have been torn almost apart many times because of unusual proposals which have come before us concerning agriculture and concerning industry.

I come from an industrial neighborhood. I hope not, but perhaps I am a little partisan in that direction. I like to believe that I am just as much concerned with the sharecropper of the South and the tenant farmer of that section, and just as much concerned with the little man who lives in a dimly lighted home on the plains or on a hillside in Vermont, as I am interested in the people of my State. But most of our problems, most of our legislative proposals of serious importance, go back to one thing—the subject of unemployment, the need for taking care of those people who are out of work.

I was stirred, as were other Members of the Senate, by the eloquence and the sentiment of the speeches of the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Massachusetts. I remember the campaign pledges of my party in 1932 and 1936. I am concerned with the forgotten man, the forlorn woman, and the forsaken children. All because of unemployment we are here this late, and experiencing a great difference of opinion.

The proposal I make provides for a census of unemployment, not one that will take months, not one that will require a great army of men, but a census just like that taken during the uncertain days of another period, the uncertain days of 1917, when millions and millions of the young men of this country went to the schoolhouses to enroll, on one day, the 5th of June, I think it was.

There is now scattered all over this country almost enough machinery to start such a proposal. In every district are the reemployment offices of the Department of Labor, manned by those familiar with unemployment, men who to a considerable extent are familiar with the details which go with unemployment.

The proposal I make intends to set up boards comparable to the draft boards of another day, not compelling, but inviting people who are unemployed to register, with an additional provision; and I ask the attention of those Senators who are concerned with balancing the Budget, and I ask the attention to those Senators who were willing to submit the residents of my section to the necessity of a pauper declaration in connection with the relief roll. I call attention to the proposal in this amendment that if men willfully refuse to register in this voluntary census with purpose or intent, they be denied the opportunity to further obtain work on governmental relief rolls.

I might say, as I made an appeal for this proposal, that it will get little applause from industry. I cannot honestly believe that industry wants this suggestion of mine carried out. I did notice in the press, however, that one man who operates three factories in this country suggested to the chairman of the combined committees of the Senate and the House that they discard the proposal they were considering and accept the proposal I had made.

I did not in person ask labor how it felt about this proposal. The idea is my own. It probably needs correction and revision, even if it can work; but I have not had a word of opposition from any of those concerned with labor, and I have sent copies of the proposal far and wide among laboring men. I have heard of no opposition from the heads of any large labor organization.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point, in connection with my remarks, a letter which came to the offices of Senators yesterday from Mr. John Possehl, general president of the International Union of Operating Engineers. I commend it to the attention of Senators. It is a most interesting analysis of the matter now under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF OPERATING ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., July 23, 1937.

Subject: Fair Labor Standards Act of 1937 (as reported with an amendment).

Mr. WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: On date of June 3, 1937, I addressed to you an analysis of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1937, as originally introduced in the Senate and the House of Representatives by Senator BLACK and Representative Connery, respectively. I am taking the liberty of sending you now an analysis of the amended bill as it is at present before the Senate:

On May 24, 1937, the President sent to Congress a special message in which were discussed methods for the establishment of fair labor standards. On the same day two bills—S. 2475 in the Senate and H. R. 7200 in the House, and together known as the Black-Connery bill—designed to fix such standards by law, were introduced and referred to appropriate committees. Hearings were held before a joint committee and on date of July 8, 1937, Senator BLACK reported S. 2475 to the Senate with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and a report, No. 884.

The bill, and hereafter that term refers to the bill as amended and reported, exhibits marked changes in a comparison with that originally introduced. It is less devious. More important, it does not carry, providing it is enacted into law, so sweeping an assumption of authority. On the other hand, it does include elements which are faulty and which should be discussed.

From the legislative declaration part I, section 1 (a) have been eliminated two clauses: (4) Which states that the employment of workers under substandard conditions "causes industrial dislocations directly burdening and obstructing interstate commerce"; and (6) "causes undue price fluctuations impairing the stability of prices of goods in interstate commerce." It seems a reasonable conclusion that the clause last quoted was excluded with the thought that in it were to be read potentialities if not necessities of price fixing. An assignable reason for the omission of the first of the two quoted clauses does not as easily come to mind. Its principle appears to be clear and if it was the truth in the original, it probably is also the truth in the amended bill.

Whatever may have been the motives or the reason on the broad ground that the phrasing of legislation should be made as simple as possible, the result of the two exclusions is doubtless salutary. The opening sentence of the section, however, remains unchanged, and it still stands as the declaration of the evils of employment under substandard labor conditions in the production of goods for interstate commerce or "otherwise directly affecting interstate commerce."

But little commerce exists which does not directly affect interstate commerce. In a nation woven into as solid a unit as are the several States of the United States through all the varied systems of communication that part of commerce which is so purely intrastate as to have no direct effect on interstate commerce is relatively unimportant. In those few words last quoted the pending bill holds a device which opens the way for Federal regulation of all commerce.

In the section given over to definitions one commendable change is to be noted. The offending definition of a labor organization which made possible the legal recognition of the company union has been omitted. Others have been excluded, including that perfect rhetorical gem which stated that "The singular includes the plural and the plural includes the singular."

Other definitions are broadened. That, for instance, of employees includes workers in agriculture, as in the original bill, and then proceeds to define agriculture as including cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, market gardening, poultry, and so on through a substantial list of activities. In respect of that definition a single thought is expressed, that in some branches of agriculture, particularly the last three of those named above, are employed workers of exactly the same trade classifications as those to be found in other forms of industry who are presumed to benefit under the terms of this bill.

The definition of child labor is also greatly broadened. That, however, is not discussed here, nor are any of the effects of the bill upon the employment of child labor given discussion. It is felt that those parts of the bill can be treated much more effectively by those whose field of endeavor brings them more clearly into contact with that form of employment.

In no important particular does that section devoted to the Labor Standards Board vary from the corresponding section in the bill as originally introduced. Indeed, with the single exception that the amended measure includes a statement giving to the board authority to adopt its own rules of procedure, the two are identical. That fact does not indicate, though, that the section is not open to critical comment.

The truth is quite the opposite. In the matter of the appointment of the board there is no lessening of the evil, no shrinkage in its impracticabilities. The difficulty of reconciling industrial areas with geographical reasons is present in the same language as before; the same complete lack exists of expressed qualifications which shall be possessed by those who may be appointed to membership on the board.

The failure to define requirements satisfactorily for service makes that section of the bill objectionable to organized labor. It is not necessary, it will be observed, that members should be acquainted with even the most simple rudiments of industrial practice. No requirement is introduced that members shall possess any specialized skills. There is no suggestion that there should be demonstrated any degree of interest in the problems of labor, whether organized or unorganized.

Parenthetically, it should perhaps be said that at the convention of the American Federation of Labor held in 1936 at Tampa, Fla., the question of legislation covering various aspects of labor relations held the attention of the committee on resolutions. That committee reported a resolution, unanimously adopted by the convention, which assumed the position that the American Federation of Labor would not support legislation which did not provide for direct representation of labor on any administrative body to be established by the measures under discussion. The pending bill carries with it no such provision.

The fourth section is opened with a series of propositions followed by a declaratory paragraph which concludes subsection (a) of that section of the bill. Of those premises there are six with some of which complete agreement comes swiftly and quite without effort. Others require thought before full accord can be reached and in one instance it is difficult to give much more than a somewhat qualified assent.

There is but little hesitation in saying that a weekly wage of $5 or less is unconscionably low. There is none at all in a further statement that if the conditions of the business are so unstable, if its debit and credit relationships are so precarious or its margin of profit so narrow as to compel the payment of a $5 wage, then the time is at hand for that business to conclude its affairs and to turn its capital into other channels of investment. To those industrial organizations which, operating under normal conditions, find it essential to engage in a workweek of 84 hours, the same thoughts, though perhaps somewhat modified, are applicable.

No doubt can be entertained that such low schedules of wages and such high schedules of hours create unfair competition among employers of labor. The necessity that workers in the United States be protected by the elimination of substandard wages and hours will not be denied. General agreement will be found in the expression of an opinion that the changes necessary to achieve the results must be developed carefully and cautiously without disruption or dislocation of business and industry.

On that last a word may be offered. It must not be construed as a defense of low wages and high hours when it is said that the resulting change, if the bill becomes law, is bound to be drastic. No matter how careful and cautious may be the procedure, disturbance and dislocation of industry are certain to occur. It is impossible through mandate having the force of statute, to impose new schedules of wages and hours upon an industry without disturbing that industry. The disturbance may or may not be far reaching; it may or may not be particularly grave. It may extend over a long period or be only temporary, but disturbance will follow.

Against the premise which says that those workers whose wages are the lowest and whose hours are the longest and who are unable to improve their condition through the medium of collective bargaining, a certain dissent must be laid. There are organizations ready and qualified to give them aid. There have been such organizations in the past. On that single point nothing further need be said.

The series of propositions having been stated, it is declared to be the policy to maintain minimum-wage and maximum-hours standards at levels which shall be conducive to the general well-being of workers and, at the same time, operate to the profitable operation of business. It is all notably praiseworthy.

The text plunges, then, into the details of the measure. First to be noted is that it is mandatory upon the board to declare minimum wages, whereas in the original bill that was a qualified authority; that is, only when the board had reason to believe that wages lower than fair minima were paid was it obliged to make investigation and determination and to issue corrective orders. Until the board had been persuaded of a substandard condition nothing could happen.

Providing, then, that opportunities for employment shall not be curtailed, the board shall from time to time declare minimum wages which shall be adequate for the occupation or occupations to which they are applicable. From the context the word "occupation" obviously refers to the means of livelihood pursued by the worker. There is no reference to industry.

The omission is important. An occupation in one industry may command a different scale or wages, may differ widely in its requirement of skill from the same occupation when pursued in another industry. The tool maker in the precision-instrument industry is in every way, excepting only in the knowledge of the fundamentals of his craft, a different mechanic from the tool maker in an industry where the principal requisite of the tool is that it be sufficiently rugged to withstand long service under hard and not particularly intelligent usage.

It is not necessary to confine illustration to skilled trades. Common labor, for example, employed in the foundry industry is not the same as common labor employed in, say, the knitted-fabric industry. The differences are both quantitative and qualitative.

Still speaking of common labor, the same differences persist in the separate units of the same industry. In the machinery and machine-tool industry both quantity and quality vary as between the foundry, the several contributive divisions, and the machine shop proper. One of the conspicuous characteristics of common labor is that, in the sense ordinarily accepted, it is not common.

So, if minimum wages for an occupation are to be declared without regard to the varying requirements demanded of that occupation by different industries, the problem, insofar as the board is concerned, is comparatively simple—that is taken strictly in a comparative and not an absolute sense. Great inequities and grave injustices to large groups of workers will result, but those do not affect the problem as it is before the board. If minimum wages are fixed with full consideration of all the differing qualifications for workers in the craft imposed by each one of the employing industries, the board has before it a problem of great and widely ramifying perplexities. If attention is extended not only to occupational characteristics as modified by the needs of the different industries, but beyond those to the distinctions of those characteristics within each industry taken by itself, perplexities multiply beyond ready imagination.

Notwithstanding the enormous maze of detail, how, indeed, can minimum wages otherwise be declared than with full regard to the refinements of differences in occupational employment. If a workman is so unfortunate, so hapless in his birth, family, training, education, ambition, and mentality as to be incorporated into the great mass of common labor, is he to be deprived by statute of the scant advantage in earning power which is his by reason of the fact that he is the possessor of the narrowest of margins of intelligence, physical strength, and willingness over his fellow workers? Whether or not it is easily believed, the fact is that even in the great body of common labor are gradations of ability. They would not be visible to the collective regulative mind of a board but they are clearly apparent to direct employers and to the other workers in the group. It is no denial of the principle of minimum wages to say that those degrees of difference should be recognized and their rewards protected.

Perhaps something of that sort is rather vaguely contemplated by the bill, for it reads that minimum wages shall be declared for the occupation to which they are applicable from time to time. The meaning is not clear. Does it mean that a minimum wage will be fixed for an occupation in one industry at one time and for the same occupation in a different industry at another? Or does it mean that wages for the same occupation in the same industry will be subject to frequent change, or again does it mean that adjustments will be made so carefully and so often as to take account of all or many of the different individual gradations of ability? The last question is probably not the correct one, and yet if it is not, how small a degree of equity, in last analysis, resides in the bill.

After all, the industry in which the occupation finds expression is a most important factor. To the industry, as before mentioned, there is no reference. Apparently, it is not considered necessary that the members of the board should be acquainted with the peculiarities of requirement of the different industries. To it, no matter where or how employed, a laborer is a laborer and that is all there is to it.

It may be the intent to compensate for the failure, to mention industry or the board's conceivable lack of knowledge of industry through the appointment of advisory committees as provided by section 11. There once more is a departure from the original bill, for the measure now pending makes mandatory the use of advisory committees. In the bill, as first presented, the use of such committees was discretionary with the board.

Even in that section of the bill no mention is made of industry. The personnel of advisory committees—equal numbers of persons representing the employees and the employers in the occupation under investigation—justifies a hope that the minimum wage determined will be declared for the occupation in a specific industry, but that is pure assumption. The bill does not so state. The reference is solely to the occupation. By the composition of the advisory committee the difficulties above discussed may be reduced, but not necessarily so. They will not be eliminated.

The minimum wages to be declared by the board shall be as nearly adequate "as is economically feasible, without curtailing opportunities for employment", to maintain a standard of living necessary for health, efficiency, and general well-being. Excellent. But in the minds of the authors of the amended bill as in those who drafted the original measure, although not so clearly apparent, is the same haunting fear that effectuation as law will reduce opportunities for employment.

The feeling is not without justification. How could the fact be otherwise? Again, without defending the low-wage industry or a section—either producing or geographical—of an industry which is definitely substandard in the matter of wages, how is a new-wage structure to be imposed without affecting employment? It cannot be done.

If such an industry employing, for example, a labor force made up in large proportion of unskilled or common labor has reason to believe its average hourly rate of wages is subject to sharp increases ranging upward to perhaps 100 percent, what is likely to be its attitude toward immediate business relationships? Obviously it could well be one of caution. It will be slow to accept orders or contracts involving any considerable volume because of an apprehension that increasing wage costs under law will bring positive loss instead of anticipated gain. It will be reluctant to make substantial commitments for raw materials lest increased cost succeeded by an increased selling price will cause goods to remain unsold or to become stagnant and unmoved until the market shall have had time to adjust itself and become accustomed to the change. So delicate is the mechanism of the market that once out of balance it does not always move back rapidly to a state approximating equilibrium.

Those two conditions out of many which could be recited are not offered in opposition to the adoption of schedules of minimum wages. They are presented merely as indexes of a certain decrease in the employment of labor. Hesitancy in the solicitation of new business and slowness in making commitments for necessary materials can result only in the curtailment of opportunities for employment.

That is not all. What of the workers in the occupational wage brackets next above those for which minimum-wage schedules are declared? Suppose the minimum wage for an occupational group were to be advanced by order of the Board to 40 cents per hour. What happens to those who received that rate before the increase was ordered?

Will the wages of those be correspondingly increased? Probably not. Indeed, from the viewpoint of the employer why should they be increased? If the services they rendered before the enactment of the statute were worth only 40 cents per hour, why should they be worth more after the passage of a law which admittedly does not apply to them? They are not, of course, worth more.

Occurs, then, a congestion of labor around the 40-cent level or at the level to which the board has advanced minimum wages for the occupational group. The employer notes a decided bulge at the declared level and as he believes should be the case with an overexpansion in any particular group of workers at any specified wage rate, he proposed to himself that it be reduced. Let those who have been benefited under the law earn their increased wages. If 40-cent men must be employed, let them earn 40 cents per hour.

The possibilities of curtailment of employment through numerical reduction of occupational groups extend much more widely and in far greater detail than can possibly be recited here. Those constitute a study in themselves. Merely as an index of the evils inherent in the fixation of wages by statute a single and altogether obvious illustration will suffice.

Three workmen, one at 35 cents and two at 30 cents have been employed on a particular job—a total wage cost of 95 cents per hour. Why not speed up a bit—two 40-cent men required under statute—and drop one of the others. The result is both interesting and, as the employer sees it, extremely practical: one man less, a reduced wage cost of 15 cents per hour, and complete obedience to the law. The scheme is sound and it will be followed.

As earlier suggested, the bill carries no price-fixing provisions. It is not argued that such requisites should be included, but in their absence increased wage costs are extremely likely to be translated into increased costs to the consumer. Evidently the authors had that rather strong possibility in mind when the bill was drafted, for in section 8 is found a provision which authorizes the United States Tariff Commission to investigate increased costs resulting from its operation should it become law, and to propose adjustments in rates of duty which would not hold domestic goods in a position of disadvantage in relation to foreign goods.

In identical language, excepting only that the words "maximum workweek" are substituted for the words "minimum wages", the board is placed under mandate to declare a maximum workweek for any occupation or occupations which shall be as nearly adequate as possible to maintain the health and well-being of the workers. The discussion directed toward the minimum wage provisions of the bill does not require any very substantial modification to render it applicable to the subsection devoted to maximum hours. No new points of consideration are raised.

One fact coming from the combination of maximum hours with minimum wages does require brief mention. A maximum of 40 hours of work per week applied to a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour above and below which, respectively, the board cannot function, brings a wage of $16 per week. On the basis of 50 weeks of work—under present conditions a hope rather than a conviction—the return to the individual would be $800 for the year's work. It is not much money.

That is not written scornfully. Any advance that can be secured to labor is worth a great deal. On the other hand, it must be noted that according to the Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1936, the average wage paid common labor in the United States in 1935 in several different industries, all of which come within the terms of the bill, was slightly in excess of 45 cents per hour. The inadequacy of that figure and the data which support it is admitted, but it does point to the strong probability that the benefits of the legislation, if completed, will not extend as widely as its supporters have hoped.

Succeeding that section given over to the establishment of minimum wages and maximum hours is section 5, by which agreements consummated by collective bargaining are presumed to be afforded protection. Apparently a satisfactory measure of protection is granted, but by some who have analyzed the bill it has been pointed out that the inclusion of the phrase "allowed by law" in the opening sentence of the section extends its protective features to the company union. If that is true, then nothing has been gained by omitting from the amended text section 2 (a) (8) of the original bill, which opened the way to legal recognition of that form of organization.

Even in the face of the probable intent of the language it is difficult to resist a feeling that the bill operates to weaken the structure of collective bargaining. There seems to be evident no reason why employers should enter into agreements with those labor groups which come within the scope of the bill. They will observe the law, if passed, and stop short with observance, excepting only as some unforeseen or uncontrollable factor forces them into a more advanced position. Certainly there is no reason why employers should make collective agreements, for example, 42 cents if under statute they can secure equally good labor at a legalized rate of 40 cents per hour. More and more labor will be brought within the wage schedules fixed by the Board—increases in wages will be met, in large part, by reductions and the strong tendency will be to delay collective-bargaining agreements and to permit existing agreements to lapse without renewal, until by each employer the limit of regrouping labor within declared schedules has been reached.

In section 9, where are recited the general administrative provisions of the bill, it is required that a labor standard order "shall define the occupation or occupations, the territorial limits within which such order shall operate, and the class, craft, or industrial unit or units to which such order relates." In that language the objection that no reference is made to industry appears to be answered. That, in truth, is precisely not the case.

What is meant by the term "industrial unit"? Does it mean one industry—the steel industry, for example—as differentiated from another, say, the leather goods industry? Or does it mean the manufacture of shoes taken apart from the basic leather industry. Or further, could it mean without regard to other materials, the manufacture of fabric shoes. Or once more, could it mean only the foundry division of the machinery industry, and if that is the event, what community of basis will be discovered between the commercial foundry and the foundry as a single unit included in any broader industry?

In that is perplexity, in what follows is real danger, for not only must the board define the class or craft covered by its order, but it has permissive authority to classify employers, employees, and employments. A host of questions immediately arises. They are so many and so varied that they cannot even be suggested here.

Let it be stated briefly that the classification of employers and employees or employments constitutes a task of enormous, if not insurmountable difficulties. So far as this analysis is concerned, employers may be left to speak for themselves and this paragraph will be limited to employees. By whom are they to be classified? Classifications made heretofore by bodies organized for that purpose have wandered so far from fact and practicability as to reduce quickly to absurdity. Most industrial plants, whether they employ many or only a few, have among their workers some whose duties are such as to defy classification by employer, by the employee himself, or by other employees. Even accurate classification, if it were possible, would not satisfy the basic question: the real criterion of the wage lies in the value of the work and not in the classification to which he may be assigned.

In that section of the bill no matter how conscientiously administered, lie certain injustices and an incalculable harm which cannot be avoided. Classification of employees and employments inevitably will rob great numbers of individual workmen of the fruits of their aptitudes. It will take away the rewards of lesser skills and reduce all workmen in the lower wage occupational groups to the level of the mass.

In many respects the bill holds no improvements over the measure as originally introduced. The exempting paragraphs include all the evils, particularly those respecting the employment of learners which were apparent in the bill as first drawn. The full use and meaning of the union label is endangered now as it was before. Probably it is genuinely the intent to limit the operation of the bill strictly to interstate commerce, but ambiguities of language suggest possible confusion in that direction. If anything, the time element is given even less consideration than before. In the bill, as it now reads, almost any period can be devoted to investigation before declaration need be made by the board. That stands as the most serious kind of fault, for it is still a truth—without meaning to be at all cryptic—that the best time to adjust a labor issue is before it arises.

In the bill as it is today before the Senate, appears but little of positive good to labor. It holds even less of positive good for industry. It may be argued that it represents a start toward better conditions for labor and that very likely is true, but any gain which may be accomplished must accrue at such tremendous cost to all, excepting only the comparative few who will benefit directly—to the great numbers of the workers, to the employers, to industry, and to the Nation—that it seems better to postpone those scant advantages until through further time and considerable study, a bill may be introduced which will be demonstrably utilitarian in its scope.

It is but a cold and cheerless argument to say that a poor bill is better than no bill at all. A poor bill is altogether unnecessary. A bill hurriedly prepared is equally unnecessary. The possibilities of positive harm are too grave and far-reaching; the potentialities of danger too apparent to justify hurry. In this case time should not be of the essence.

With kindest regards. I am,

Fraternally yours,

JOHN POSSEHL, General President.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I do not know Mr. Possehl, but I should like to take the time to read a telegram which came to me at noontime in the Senate. A part of this I should like to disregard, that part making personal reference to me, but I want to show the opinion of at least one labor organization. I have since been advised that this is the opinion of other labor organizations about the country on the proposal I have made. The telegram reads:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29, 1937.

HON. FRANCIS T. MALONEY:

This organization heartily supports your effort to substitute your amendment for the Black wage and hour bill now pending in the United States Senate. Your efforts to secure a 30-hour workweek, to our knowledge, was in full force 5 or more years ago when you were mayor of Meriden. We trust your efforts will be successful.

This telegram is signed by John Possehl, a gentleman I have not met, general president of the International Union of Operating Engineers, and Frank A. Fitzgerald, general secretary and treasurer of the organization.

Mr. President, I have pointed out that this proposal sets up machinery for the purpose of finding out how many physically and mentally able people who are seeking work are without employment. It seems to me that if we are to regulate working hours—and I am committed in that direction, and active as I can be in the movement—we should regulate working hours on the basis of unemployment and need, not by guesswork, not hoping that we can find out by rubbing Aladdin's lamp, or looking into a crystal ball, what the facts are. This is too exalted a stage on which to play that kind of a drama. We should regulate working hours on the basis of the existing situation, and I maintain that this census proposal I have made will furnish to the board which we would create to administer the law the necessary information in a very short time.

I would not stop there, however, because I would not give that board the power to set the hours. So this proposal makes provision that there shall be a flexible and a fluctuating scale of working hours.

I said before that my amendment was really a 40-hour bill. It provides that if 8,000,000 or more able-bodied, physically and mentally efficient people are out of work, we shall have a 30-hour week. It further provides that if there are 6,000,000 and less than 8,000,000 of that type unemployed, we shall have a 32-hour week. It makes the provision that if there are 4,000,000, but less than 6,000,000 of that kind of people without gainful occupation then we will have a 34-hour week, and so on. It seems to me that this provision is most fair. It does not seem to me that those who believe in the regulation of working hours and the need for them can successfully make argument against this suggestion.

Mr. President, I am going down the pathway of the chairman, the very able and brilliant chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor. He wrote a mandatory proposal a long time ago. He proposed a 30-hour week bill. It cannot be said that my suggestion is more drastic than that. Happily the need now is not so great, but I build on his suggestion; I accept his idea and his philosophy, a philosophy that he abandons with his present proposal, and I do it—and I say this with a feeling of humility, of course—upon the economically and scientifically sound suggestion that we have a census to determine what the situation might be.

Mr. President, if Senators want to try to help, if they want to avoid the danger of bureaucratic power, if they want to keep unto themselves the control that belongs to the Congress of the United States and they still want to vote to regulate the hours of labor within reason, they can do it within my proposal.

A little while ago the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made an interesting statement. Perhaps I will not use his exact language, but he began his remarks by the citation of a precedent that was established under the administration of President Hoover, when the Congress delegated its power, within limitations, concerning the tariff. He said he made the prediction here at that time—and I was then a distant admirer of his—that a precedent was being established which would some day come back and haunt the Congress and the American people. This afternoon he said, "I told you so", because in recent days a law was enacted concerning reciprocal tariff treaties, and now Congress sits on the side line.

That can happen here, Mr. President. We can delegate this authority if we so desire. I question the constitutionality of the delegation. I question very much the wisdom of the procedure. I do not say the board will cause havoc. I do not say that this board under any circumstances will create chaos. I cannot be certain that it will not work just as well as the great-hearted chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], hopes it will work. But I know the inherent danger that lies in it. I have been a long time with this proposal. I know the possibilities that may result from it. I know the uncertainty that it gives to men in an industry. I know that they will wonder today, as they like to plan for tomorrow, what may be in store for them.

So I say again, Mr. President, that those who want to give economic force to labor, who want to do something for labor, for that kind of labor which gets more than $16 a week, as well as for the unfortunate and abused and exploited labor that gets less than $16 a week, cannot do it through this proposal, and I seriously doubt that they can do it through the original bill. I cannot see that this proposal is helpful to the vast majority of men and women who work in this country, because most of them get more than $16 a week. There is no protection there for them, excepting the possibility that by taking care of some of the few—and I hope they are few—underneath, we can add to the spending power.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator does not understand, does he, that the bill under consideration is limited, insofar as hours is concerned, to those who make under 40 cents an hour?

Mr. MALONEY. No; if I understand the bill correctly, however, the board can set hours at 68 hours a week, if it so desires.

Mr. BLACK. The board has the right to fix hours down to 40; the Senator is correct. I do not understand the Senator, do I, to believe that the Government should attempt to fix wages in the higher brackets? I understood it was an implied criticism of the bill, because the bill does not attempt to fix wages over 40 cents an hour.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to say in reply to that, that up to now it has not seemed to me necessary that we attempt to fix wages. It seems to me that our problem is to provide a way for men to go to work, a way to provide an economic force for labor, a way to create competition for labor. If we give labor an economic force, labor in this country is well able to take care of itself concerning wages.

Mr. BLACK. Then, as I understand, the Senator does not believe that this bill should attempt to adjust wages in any way over 40 cents an hour, does he?

Mr. MALONEY. It would not hurt my feelings by going above that. As I said a moment ago, I have left it entirely out of my proposal.

Mr. BLACK. I understood that the Senator did not favor even a minimum wage.

Mr. MALONEY. I did not say that. I am sorry if my language misled the Senator. I said that I left that from my bill. I say that I would not oppose it. I am not sure that it is necessary. I think perhaps a minimum wage is necessary, but I think it is rather futile to set a minimum wage at $16 a week, and I say that with this qualifying statement that I know it would do good, because in my part of the country I have seen labor exploited.

I have seen sweatshops move in there from other places. No one here needs to make a sentimental speech to attract my vote. No one here needs to make any special plea concerning people who work in order to get me on his side. I know more about it than most Members of the Senate. I know what it is to go to work before the break of dawn in the morning and get home after dark at night—and work for 5 cents an hour. I know where this one-third of our people, who are ill-clad, ill-nourished, and ill-housed, live. I know their problems. I have lived where they live. I have worked where they work. I want to write a law that will protect these people. I am concerned with that subject.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. As I understood the Senator—I may have been wrong—he criticized this bill impliedly because it left the jurisdiction to fix a minimum wage at 40 cents an hour. The committee was of the opinion that it was not wise for the Federal Government to attempt to fix wages in this country above the minimum. The committee was of the opinion that that should be left to bargaining between the employees and the employers, and that the jurisdiction should be left at that point—simply to provide a minimum wage. Is the Senator out of sympathy with that position of the committee?

Mr. MALONEY. Let me answer the Senator by saying that I am in hearty accord with that.

Mr. BLACK. I thought the Senator was, but I wanted to get that clear in the RECORD.

Mr. MALONEY. Yes; I am in hearty accord with that, but otherwise the bill does not go far enough for me.

Mr. President, I have said that if Senators want to avoid the delegation of power to a bureau, if Senators want to hold in Congress the power that belongs to Congress and still want to vote for the regulation of working hours, my amendment affords a way.

If Senators want to relieve manufacturers of the terrors of uncertainty and still help labor, it seems to me the amendment which I have offered points the way. If Senators want to regulate working hours without raising the question of the delegation of congressional power, it seems to me my amendment affords the opportunity. If Senators want to try to help those whose training and skill carry them above a $16-a-week wage, it seems to me my amendment gives that chance. The minimum-wage proposal does not very much help anyone who now gets over $16 a week; but if Senators want to kill sweatshops, if they want to help the honest and fair manufacturer who is concerned with fair treatment of those who work for him, in my opinion, my amendment gives that opportunity.

There is a difference of opinion in the Congress and a difference of opinion everywhere concerning the plight of agriculture, concerning the way in which agriculture could best be helped. There are those who come from the farming sections of the country who maintain that we should take care first of the farmer. Most of the time here, about all of the time, if my recollection serves me well, I have been concerned with helping the man who devotes his life to agriculture; but it seems to me the best way we can help agriculture is by giving a buying power to labor through economic force. Give labor a chance to buy the produce and the products of the farm. Men and women in the large cities, men and women in the urban communities, have no chance to buy in abundance the things raised on the farm; but if Senators will join in the adoption of my amendment, which would regulate hours of labor and protect industrial workers, I am satisfied they would be casting bread upon the waters.

I might say that, although it was not contained in my original suggestion, my amendment contains a clause relating to child labor. I inserted it because it was in the original bill and because I favor it. To those who are concerned with the great and terrifying problem of foreign labor, foreign competition, the importation of foreign-made goods, "coolie labor", as it was called on the floor of the Senate today, I say that my amendment will safeguard against those things.

Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Members of the Senate for listening to me so long. If I have impliedly made any charges against the Black-Connery bill, I did not mean to make them. I think the Committee on Education and Labor, as has been said by other Senators, under all the difficult circumstances, did a splendid job, considering, too, the brief time they had to devote to the proposal. If we are going to act upon that kind of a measure, let us have a little more time. Let us not give away something that we cannot get back. Let us not give away something that I sincerely believe cannot much help labor.

I know this proposal has some labor applause in high places. I know this is an administration bill. I know how it came up here. Mr. President, I love it here, and I should like Presidential favor. As much as any man, I want Presidential friendship, and I think I have it. I said sometime ago, in another body, in a speech, that the President of the United States would burn at the stake for his opinion. If that is true—and I believe it is—he must have a great respect for every man who would go far to maintain the convictions he has. He must have a natural admiration, because he is that kind of a man, for one who will endeavor to foster the things he thinks right.

I believe the Black-Connery bill is not the best way to go about this matter. I believe that if there is a right path, if there is a safe road within the Constitution and the traditions of democracy, it is pointed out by my amendment, and I commend it to the consideration and judgment of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. HARRISON. Is not the question on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] offered an amendment inserting the words "the ginning of cotton." The pending question is the amendment of the junior Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. Therefore, any other amendment is not in order at the present time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table in order that I may offer it at an appropriate time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Oregon will accept my amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I was about to announce that fact. After conferring with a number of Democratic Senators I have perfected my amendment by including the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. I ask that the clerk may now report my amendment as perfected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon, as modified, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 60, line 20, before the period to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection shall not be applicable with respect to any person employed in connection with the ginning and baling of cotton, the canning or other packing or packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges, or picking, canning, or processing of fruits, or vegetables, or the processing of beets, cane, and maple into sugar and sirup when the services of such person are of a seasonal nature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has the right to modify his own amendment by incorporating in it the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. Therefore the question is on the modified amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon whether his amendment applies only to hours, or whether it applies both to wages and to hours.

Mr. MCNARY. It applies only to the provision relating to the maximum hours for which labor may be employed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am really in search of information. As I heard the amendment read—perhaps I was mistaken—it seemed to strip the bill bare of almost everything. I should like to ask for a statement as to the number of employees earning low wages who would be excluded from the protection of the pending measure by the proposed amendment as now modified.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have not any data with regard to the number of employees. The amendment touches only seasonal labor, and only that portion of the bill which affects the hours of employment, and not the wage to be paid.

Mr. WAGNER. It affects only what type of labor?

Mr. MCNARY. It affects seasonal labor only in the enumeration set forth.

Mr. WAGNER. Does that include the canneries throughout the country?

Mr. MCNARY. Those that have seasonal employment of labor. Furthermore, the amendment affects only the hours that may be worked, and not the wages to be paid.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course there are some canneries in the country which have so reorganized their operations that they are no longer seasonal in character. They operate throughout the year; but it would be a very simple matter for them to revert to a seasonal plan in order to escape the operation of this measure.

I am thinking of our experience in New York. I am wondering if the Senate would desire to exempt from the operation of this measure cannery employees of the class whom we discovered in our own State to be among the most exploited industrial workers. The canning industry is a truly manufacturing industry. The canneries employ very young persons, and even extreme child labor is used in many States; although in New York some years ago we entirely abolished this type of exploitation.

What is being proposed here is that an exploited class of workers who are employed in a manufacturing industry shall be excluded from the protection of the bill. It is not a question of children working upon the farm, or picking berries, or something of the kind. I visited many of them in my State as head of a commission and I know that the canneries are large manufacturing institutions all over the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I know of some canneries which operate only a few months during the year. The work is entirely seasonal; and in some of those cases the farmers who raise the product that is canned are themselves interested in the canneries. As I say, some of those canneries operate only 6 weeks or 2 months during the year, and, of course, it would be impossible for them to observe an 8-hour day or a 7-hour day, because the products spoil very quickly, and sometimes the canneries have to run all day and all night. How would the Senator deal with cases of that kind?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am not familiar with these very small canning institutions. There may be some such as the Senator mentions; but, in any event, my answer is this: I do not care whether the manufacturing unit is a small one or a large one; the American people are opposed to the exploitation and oppression of workers in plants of any size.

We discovered, during our investigation in New York, that prior to the time any legal protection was afforded, women were actually working 19 and 20 hours out of 24 during the seasonal period, under the apology that "the work had to be done in a short time." After the disclosures, we passed laws which limited the hours of work, absolutely prohibited child labor, and we also regulated wages. The same canneries today are more prosperous than they were during their enjoyment of the privilege to exploit the young and defenseless.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to understand the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. First of all,

I understand that his amendment does not ask for any exception as to compensation in the case of wage earners in the industries mentioned in his amendment. He provides that they shall all be subjected to the provisions of this measure in their desire to receive a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour. Am I correct?

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment simply and solely seeks to eliminate the penalty provided in the bill if more than 40 hours' work per week are required in the case of seasonal occupations and excludes all industries which work more than 6 months per year?

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. In view of those facts, I am inclined to support the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the amendment again. I expressed my views on it yesterday. I fully agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] in the views he has expressed.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I dislike very much to disagree with the chairman of the committee; but I understand that the only purpose of the amendment to exclude industries which operate only 6 months in the year, during the rush season of canning, from the penalty provided for working over 40 hours per week.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that I stated on the floor in the beginning that, in my judgment, it would be improper for industries purely of a seasonal nature, such as those that can perishable fruits or vegetables, to be brought under the law by the board. I made the same statement with reference to the business which has been mentioned by the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the cotton gin. These are purely seasonal industries that require work to be speeded up during the brief period of operation. There are others in the canning business, however, such as those mentioned by the Senator from New York, that are not purely seasonal.

Mr. WALSH. Where such establishments can give their wage earners only 6 months' work during the year, if they can give them 10 hours' or 12 hours' work a day during those 6 months, why should they not have the right to do so without being penalized?

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator that they should. The bill at the present time provides for such matters being taken up by the board which is to consider them in order that we may not exclude from the operation of the bill other establishments of the type mentioned by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, the difference between the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Alabama is that the Senator from Oregon wants the exception definitely fixed in the bill, while the Senator from Alabama believes that the bill itself provides discretionary power for the board to make the exceptions.

Mr. BLACK. There is no disagreement whatever between the Senator from Oregon and me as to the necessity for excluding purely seasonal activities which cannot operate in any other way except by speeding up the work at a particular time. The difference is that the Senator from Oregon has an amendment which proposes to write it into the legislation. It is my idea that in doing that the act might go further than even the Senator from Oregon, or some other Senators, desire to have it go, because I am sure the Senator from Oregon does not desire that institutions which are not seasonal, and which can extend their work over the year, should be excluded from the operation of the law. It is merely a difference in method and not a difference in opinion as to the particular type of activity.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if I may make a statement, I understood from the Senator from New York that the bill does include at the present time seasonal occupations, such as canning. Quite frankly, if we are to exclude them—and it is said they are excluded now—they can be excluded under the bill, whereas under the bill it is simply left up to a board to exclude them. If that is the case, I should rather see written positively into the law a provision to exclude them than I would to have it left to a board to say whether they should be excluded or should not be excluded. I had thought that the bill provided that they should not be excluded.

Mr. BLACK. Those of a seasonal nature. The bill does give the power to provide exemptions for those of a seasonal nature, as in my judgment, it should do.

However, I may state, as I said yesterday or the day before, I have no hope of defeating in the Senate any amendment which is brought up with reference to the canners. I have had such amendments up before, and while I would like to hope they could be defeated, I have little hope that they can be defeated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Oregon a question. Is not 6 months a little long for a seasonal period in canning industries? The canning season is during the tomato season or the fruit season. Is not a period of 6 months a little lengthy?

Mr. McNARY. That criticism was suggested, and I met it by striking that provision from the amendment, which now reads "seasonal in nature."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am still looking for enlightenment. Of course, there are industries other than the canning industry which run for a period of 6 months. One of the great studies upon the question of employment has dealt with "regularization", namely, the spreading of job opportunities over the full-year period.

But so far as this amendment is concerned, every industry which is not "regularized" is left free to grind its workers down for 20 out of the 24 hours. What Senator wants to leave an opening for that kind of oppression?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I agree with all the Senator has said about the miserable wages paid in the canneries and the long hours the employees work. But the pending bill will give permission to fasten upon any industry that is in the canning business 40 cents an hour as the minimum wage, and the amendment of the Senator from Oregon would permit them to get 40 cents an hour 2 hours or 4 hours longer during the short period they are working. I agree with the Senator that if there were no provision written into the bill giving them control over minimum wages the Senator would be absolutely correct. All the amendment does is to provide, "You will have control to limit it to 40 cents, but all we will require is that, in view of the fact that you are not going to work the year around and these people have to earn in a short period enough to support them the year around, we will let them work 10 or 12 hours, but the minimum wage shall be paid for every hour."

Mr. WAGNER. You do not say 10 hours. You say they may work whatever hours the employer may exact from them.

Let me say something about the employees in the canneries. They are not an organized group. Most of them are women, and in many of the States children as well. How are they to be protected against conditions ruinous to their health?

Mr. WALSH. I am surprised to hear the statement from the Senator from New York. I would assume the State of New York would have taken some action earlier.

Mr. WAGNER. The State of New York did.

Mr. WALSH. Could they not stop it?

Mr. WAGNER. We did stop it; but it is being permitted under this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Where?

Mr. WAGNER. In the proposed law the only limitation placed upon the employer is that he is compelled to pay a certain amount per hour, but the number of hours that the unfortunate person may be compelled to work is not limited. There is no free will in the matter when work is the only alternative to starvation.

Mr. WALSH. Under the system in effect in the past they were hired by the day and employed 15 or 16 or perhaps longer hours. The proposal is that they cannot be hired for more than 8 hours, which would penalize them, because it may be useful and important for them to have 10 or 12 hours a day, in view of the fact that they work only 6 months. But in working them these hours the employer must pay them 40 cents an hour.

Mr. WAGNER. Will you limit it to 10 hours per day? If so, I will go along with you.

Mr. WALSH. I do feel that if a wage earner is living in a locality where the only hope of earning a livelihood is to get 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 months' work, he ought not to be restricted to working 8 hours a day, the same as the worker who works 12 months in the year; and if the employer is in a position to give them 2 or 3 hours' more work during that short period of time, and compelled to pay them a decent living minimum wage, I cannot see very much objection to it. To my mind, it is to the benefit of the wage earner. He gets 80 cents a day more if he works 2 hours longer than 8 hours.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me repeat that tremendous numbers in the canning industry are women; and I cannot understand how anybody can say that it is to the great advantage to women who are forced to work to be forced to work excessively.

Mr. WALSH. Are they now paid per hour or per day?

Mr. WAGNER. Per hour.

Mr. WALSH. Paid per hour now?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. So the Senator's objection is not that they do not get enough wages per hour but that they are obliged in this period of time to work 16 or 18 hours a day?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. I do not think it is a healthy thing.

Mr. WALSH. Do they get this minimum wage we are providing for?

Mr. WAGNER. When we made the investigation in New York, we took pictures of children 7, 8, and 9 years of age.

Mr. WALSH. When were children 7 years of age working in New York for wages?

Mr. WAGNER. Up to 1911. I do not know whether in the Senator's State children are forbidden to work in canneries, because in most States canneries are excluded from the provisions prohibiting child labor.

Mr. WALSH. My State has had for years a very rigid and a very strict child-labor law and a limitation upon the hours women can work anywhere.

Mr. WAGNER. Including canneries?

Mr. WALSH. Including everything.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator will find that in most States canneries are an exception. But even so far as the Senator's State is concerned, protection would be denied under the proposed measure where the employers are engaged in interstate commerce. For then the State law would have no application, and the only law applicable would be the law which we are now considering.

Mr. WALSH. The State law would have application until the passage of this pending bill. When this bill is adopted, then, I understand, the industries engaged in interstate commerce will come under Federal jurisdiction and be lifted from under State jurisdiction.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to debate endlessly. But I shall never assent to the proposition—whether it be in canneries or anything else—that in this age of enlightenment any employer should be permitted to enslave women or men for 24 hours out of 24. That is what would be permitted if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. President, perhaps I am too advanced. Or perhaps I am too narrow-minded. Possibly women should be permitted during the busy season to work 23 or 24 hours per day. But I cannot believe so. The doctors who went with our commission said that such long hours of work were destructive of women; that it destroyed their opportunity for motherhood; that it undermined them bodily and spiritually.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am glad I come from an advanced State which has State laws which do not permit women to work in the canneries 20 or 24 hours a day nor permit men to work in sugar factories or in any other industries for such long hours. However, I wish to ask the Senator from New York a question. In the case of a substandard industry located in any State, an industry engaged in interstate commerce, are not the bars being thrown down by saying to the bureau which it is proposed to establish, "You can permit this industry, by reason of the fact that it is engaged in interstate commerce, to work people longer than the State law provides"?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to answer that question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The bill does not make any such provision.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course it does not make any such provision. However, when Congress passes a law applicable to factories of the type I have mentioned, is the State law effective then so far as interstate commerce is concerned?

Mr. BLACK. The bill specifically provides that the State law does remain effective so far as hours and wages are concerned, if the State provides for a wage higher than the minimum fixed in this bill, or if it has provision for less hours than the maximum provided in the bill. So I am sure the Senator will be glad to know that the question he asks is fully taken care of in the measure.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad to know that. I gathered from the remarks of the Senator from New York that the bars are being thrown down.

Mr. WAGNER. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon is adopted they will be thrown down. If I am mistaken I wish to be corrected.

Mr. WHEELER. Either the Senator from New York is wrong or other Senators are wrong in respect to that.

Mr. WAGNER. If the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is agreed to, is it or is it not true that the owners of canneries throughout this country will be permitted, during the seasonal period of 6 months, to work their employees any number of hours they choose, without limitation? Am I right or wrong about that?

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is entirely wrong. In the State law of Oregon there is a factory act, for instance, which limits the hours for women, and children—not under 16 but over 16—to 9 hours a day. Lately the State of New York failed to ratify a constitutional amendment which would place an inhibition on child labor, but in Oregon it was ratified.

Mr. WAGNER. If that is so, what is the purpose of taking the canneries of the country out of the hour limitation imposed by this bill?

Mr. McNARY. The purpose is so that it shall not be left to the discretion of the Board. I have tried to take that discretion away from the Board and make it statutory in this bill, so that we shall know that the employers must pay at least 40 cents an hour if their goods go in interstate commerce.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that. But I think the Senator from Oregon misunderstood my question.

Mr. McNARY. But when they have perishable fruits and berries and other things to can which must be canned immediately, they can work their employees in excess of the limitation of this bill, which it is necessary to do in order to preserve the products and to protect the producers as well as the canners. I do not know about the canneries in New York State.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not talking about New York now. I am talking about the effect of this amendment.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is talking about New York canneries. In my State we do not have canneries that can be operated the year around. I do not know of any cases in which it is possible to operate canneries the year around on seasonal work and with seasonal labor.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure I have not made myself clear to the Senator. This measure, of course, can affect only industries engaged in interstate commerce. But insofar as such industries are concerned, the entry of the Federal Government into the field would preclude further State action. Therefore, the exemption from this bill of a specific interstate industry would be congressional action as to that industry, and State legislation would be rendered inapplicable. Would not employers in canneries then have a free hand to exploit?

Mr. McNARY. If they do not come in conflict with State laws and if it is agreeable to the workers.

Mr. WAGNER. If it is agreeable to the workers? The workers must eat, and they must work for whatever number of hours are prescribed. They are not even organized in these industries.

Mr. McNARY. That is wholly a misstatement of the situation that prevails everywhere outside of New York State. I know that in my own State the canneries employ women and men, and children above 16, and some of the workers have become dissatisfied and have quit on account of the wage. It is a free country with free labor. This amendment gives them an opportunity to get an additional sum of money over the proscription made in this bill, if they so chose.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I want them to get as high wages as possible, and there are many operators of canneries who will not exploit their labor. But we have always to protect the workers against the menacing exploiter. I still would like a definite answer to my question. Is it true that the canneries, if engaged in interstate commerce, may, during the seasonal period, employ workers any number of hours they choose under the terms of this amendment?

Mr. McNARY. If it is agreeable to the worker.

Mr. WAGNER. If it is agreeable to the worker, that is so, is it not?

Mr. NcNARY. The amendment does not change the philosophy of the act. It is within the power of the board to do precisely the thing that I am trying to do by placing the language in this measure which the Senator from Alabama suggested a moment ago.

I want to take it away from the discretion of the board and leave it in the law as an act of Congress. That is all I am doing. I do not change the general philosophy or purpose and the working conditions at all.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to get clear what the Senator has——

Mr. BARKLEY. May I assist the Senator, if I can?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not disposed to support this amendment, but I think it ought to be clearly understood just what it does. If I understand the amendment, it leaves out of the bill these seasonal factories engaged in the canning of perishable fruits, so far as hours of work are concerned.

Mr. McNARY. That is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Therefore, any State law applicable to those canneries would still be in force, just as they would be if this bill were not passed at all. Is that not a fact?

Mr. McNARY. That is what I stated a few moments ago; yes.

Mr. WAGNER. One further question. After the proposed Federal statute is passed, can a State law regulate the hours of labor in an industry engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. BARKLEY. It cannot unless it occupies that field.

Mr. WAGNER. We are occupying that field, are we not, by passing this law?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; if we exempt them we do not occupy that field.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to make clear what my understanding of the situation is. As I see it, a specific Federal exemption of an interstate industry would represent Federal legislation on the subject just as surely as a specific Federal inclusion. In either case State action would be precluded because of Federal occupation of the field. Therefore interstate canneries exempted from this bill would be free from all law and free to do as they please.

May I ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is the desire to vote on the amendment tonight?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; we would like to get a vote on it tonight.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I want the Senator from New York to regard this matter for just a moment. I am in favor of the amendment which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has offered. All of us recognize that we have numerous instances where there should be a reasonable regard for seasonal operations. I am referring to bona-fide emergencies which may accrue from seasonal operations. I am not referring to an industry which may take advantage of a seasonal pretext or excuse to exploit labor.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Oregon has adequate safeguards against exploitation in this way. His amendment affects only the second power to regulate which the board may exercise, namely, the power to reduce hours down to a floor of 40 hours per week. The board could exercise that power with respect even to a seasonal operation were it not for the amendment of the Senator from Oregon if it should be adopted. If, however, the employer is going outside the scope of legitimate emergency in respect to a seasonal operation and is doing what the Senator from New York indicated, exploiting his labor, the board still has a way to protect the employee. That way is the power of the board to regulate wages, which is not impaired by the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Where the board would ordinarily permit an existing wage of 20 cents an hour for example in a canning plant, and hours appropriate to seasonal operations legitimately operated, they may, in the case of the exploitation of employees, increase the wage to 40 cents an hour, not for the excess hours, but for every hour the employee works. In other words, they may impose a wage of 40 cents an hour for every hour the employee works, even in a seasonal operation, if the operator is exploiting his labor instead of conducting a legitimate seasonal operation.

If the board does that, what incentive could an employer have to work a person, who has already worked 8 hours, an additional 8 hours instead of getting a fresh employee to do the same work? What incentive to exploitation could there be on the part of the employer to use the same employee to work 18 hours when it would not cost him a penny more to have fresh employees working in shifts of 8 hours each? So I say I think, under the amendment proposed, the board still has supervisory power to protect employees against exploitation, and at the same time that the law itself will take care of seasonal emergencies instead of resort having to be made to the board in every case.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Using the illustration of the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], if an employer should work his men 24 hours a day, he would have to pay 40 cents an hour and they would make $9.60 a day if they worked all day.

Mr. PEPPER. That is exactly true. There would be no incentive for him to work his employees overtime.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida if the wages in canneries are below 40 cents an hour?

Mr. PEPPER. That is the only sphere in which the board has the power to operate.

Mr. WAGNER. Some of them pay more than 40 cents an hour.

Mr. PEPPER. If so, they are outside of the scope of the bill.

There is one very fundamental thing involved in this bill. Many people want us to regulate hours and wages throughout all industries in the United States. I am not in favor of doing that. That is too great a responsibility for any lawmaking body to undertake, and too much power for any board to exercise. I am willing in a reasonable manner to go down to the very bottom of the ladder among those who cannot help themselves, and help them up to a substantial position, a subsistence wage, provided it is done reasonably.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Am I correct in the assumption that in every industrial plant in the United States where they pay 40 cents per hour or more, the board would have no jurisdiction to take any action of any sort?

Mr. PEPPER. None whatsoever.

Mr. BARKLEY. And where they are working their employees 40 hours per week or less, then neither the law nor the board would intervene in the situation?

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly. It cannot be made too clear, then, that this bill is not designed to regulate hours and wages in industry. Some organized labor groups came before the committee and wanted us to put the ceiling of wage up to 60 or 70 cents an hour. So far as I am individually concerned, if the ceiling ever passes 40 cents an hour I shall vote against the bill because I am not going to be enticed into the field of regulating wages and hours in all business in the United States. If that is to be done, why have collective bargaining? Why have the labor unions and the other groups that want to be self-protecting? What we want to do is to help the disorganized or unorganized group down at the bottom of the ladder that cannot speak for itself and cannot help itself. If we exercise a reasonable restraint upon our own idealism we are going to stop where the limits are fixed in this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the bill is idealistic, why place no limitation upon the number of hours one may be employed? Why not fix longer hours?

Mr. PEPPER. I am very glad the Senator asked that question, and I shall be glad to answer it if he wishes.

Mr. WAGNER. Why not say not more than 14 hours or not more than 12 hours, if that is the desire? I do not believe any exception should be made; but, if an exception is to be made, let us make it a reasonable one—not an invitation to exploitation.

Mr. President, I have expressed my convictions, and the matter is now in the hands of the Senate for decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious we cannot conclude the consideration of the bill today. Therefore, it is my purpose to move a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. It is the desire of those concerned with the proposed legislation to try to complete the consideration of the bill at the earliest possible moment consistent with fair discussion. I am making no complaint at all about the discussion today, because it has been of high order and has been very constructive; but I feel that tomorrow we ought to try to make some speed. Therefore, I am serving notice now that I shall presently move to take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

In that connection, in view of the fact that a committee of the Senate is to confer tomorrow with one of the departments upon an important matter, I will say that I have agreed that we shall not have a roll-call vote on any amendment until after 12 o'clock tomorrow; but we may go ahead meantime with the discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Joint Committee on Tax Evasion has worked every morning in an effort to report some legislation, so that if the Senate and the House are to adjourn at an early date we may be ready with it and be able to get through. It is utterly impossible for the members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate to meet with the members of the joint committee on the part of the House if the Senate is to meet at 11 o'clock. The joint committee started its session this morning at 9 o'clock, and worked until 11 o'clock. It is absolutely necessary for Senators to give a little time to their offices.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that, but I do not think there will be any disadvantage or any inconvenience from the course I propose. The Senator from Mississippi, I know, is interested in an amendment to the pending bill, and the bill probably will be considered most of the day tomorrow; and I shall, of course, see that all Senators who are engaged in committee work are protected between the hours of 11 and 12, so that no advantage will be taken of their absence from the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not only interested in the amendment I have offered but I am interested in the bill itself, because I think it is a very dangerous bill; and I had hoped we might not have to leave the committee to come here at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator from Mississippi will suffer no disadvantage in that regard. There will be no roll-call vote between 11 and 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kentucky makes a motion to take a recess, I desire to say that a great many statements have been made today about the position of the various units of the American Federation of Labor. It has even been reported and rumored that the American Federation of Labor is against the pending bill. I do not believe any such statement to be true.

For example, I hold in my hand a telegram—and I have hundreds of them from all over the country—from Birmingham, Ala., from an organization which represents the 52 local unions of the American Federation of Labor. I have telegrams from all over the State of Alabama, and in fact I have them from all over the country, and whatever may happen I have no doubt as to where the members of the American Federation of Labor stand on the pending bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that some members of the American Federation of Labor have telephoned me and telephoned other Members of the Senate and said they wanted to have the bill recommitted. I do not know for whom they were speaking, but they said they were speaking for the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to reply to the Senator by saying that I heard that report, and I called up the president of the American Federation of Labor to ask if he had told anyone that he desired to have the bill recommitted, and he said he had not.

Mr. WHEELER. I think it is due to the Members of the Senate that the president of the American Federation of Labor states publicly where he stands on the bill, because these statements have been made to Members of the Senate by officers of the American Federation of Labor, and were made this afternoon to different Senators whom they called up.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have just one further word to say about this matter. If the bill is recommitted, it may come back in more drastic form than its present form, because some forces are at work seeking to have incorporated in the bill the terms of the House bill; namely, a minimum-wage limit of 70 cents per hour, and a maximum workweek of 35 hours.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, so that there shall be no misunderstanding on the part of the Senate so far as I am concerned, I desire to say that I am not in favor of recommitting the bill. I am in favor of the passage of the bill. I may support an amendment with reference to the child-labor provision, but I am in favor of the passage of the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the following nominations under the Social Security Board:

Benjamin S. Beecher, of Wisconsin, to be principal technical analyst; and Bernice Lotwin, of Wisconsin, to be principal attorney.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Robert W. Macy to be postmaster at Moorcroft, Wyo., in place of A. J. Macy, resigned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

JOHN A. BLASDEL

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, under the head of reports of committees I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday confirmed the nomination of John A. Blasdel as postmaster at Richmond, Tex., and that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of experts and attorneys of the Social Security Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a number of Senators have spoken to me about various nominations under this head. I therefore ask unanimous consent that they may go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations will be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there are some nominations in this category which it seems to me ought to be confirmed. The nominations have been here a long time. In the case of those to which there is no objection, I see no reason why they should not be confirmed. Action on them was put off yesterday. Now a request is made that it be put off again.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is only 2 days, and no harm will be done by letting the nominations go over until tomorrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wonder if Senators realize that these employees and servants of the Government have not been able to draw any salary since the 15th of July because of the provision of law applicable to them. It is all well enough to ask that the nominations may go over until tomorrow; but in the case of some of these nominees it is very important that their nominations be acted upon if there is no objection to them. I am not urging the confirmation of the nominations of any to whom there is any objection or about whom there is any reasonable question; but, so far as there is not any objection to the confirmation of the nominations, it seems to me, in all fairness, that the Senate should act upon them.

Mr. McKELLAR. All these nominees are receiving salaries of over $5,000 a year, and no harm will be done to them. They will get their money.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to know how many Senators would like to go without their salaries for 2 or 3 weeks beyond pay day.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are not asking that that be done in these cases. We are asking only that these appointments which have been on the calendar for 2 days shall go over until tomorrow. I think that ought to be done, and I think it would be safer for everyone concerned to have them go over.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me say that these matters have been delayed because of the dereliction of Senators in answering the letters I sent to every one of them asking whether or not there was objection to the nominees, and not until yesterday did the Wisconsin Senators agree upon the nominees from Wisconsin.

Mr. McKELLAR. And their names do not happen to be on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not referring merely to the nominees from Wisconsin. As a matter of fact, their nominations are not even on the Executive Calendar. They were reported only today. So far as I am concerned, I interposed no objection to the confirmation of the nominations of those men.

Mr. GLASS. I know; but the Senator's colleague [Mr. DUFFY] asked that the Wisconsin nominations be held over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not discussing this matter just from the point of view of Wisconsin. There are two or three pages of nominations here.

I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. In every instance of nominations of this character reported from the committee have not the two Senators from the States concerned indicated their approval?

Mr. GLASS. I have. The members of the committee largely have.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But may not Senators assume, from the fact that these nominations have been reported from the committee, that no objection has been interposed, so far as the Senators from the States from which the nominees come are concerned?

Mr. GLASS. I assume that that is not the case, because one of the Senators came and asked that the nominations of men from his State be held over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I was misinformed. I thought I was informed yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that in every instance the Senators from the respective States had indicated that they did not desire to interpose objection to those whose nominations had been reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true; but, on the other hand, a number of Senators say that these persons do not actually come from the particular States in which they are interested, and they have asked that the nominations go over. That is true of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and other Senators.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, has the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] any objection to the nominees from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether the nominees attributed to New York actually come from New York or whether they come from some other State. I know that one of the men nominated from my State, for instance—and, by the way, I have approved the nomination—has not lived there for many years.

Mr. WAGNER. Where has he lived—in New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. He has not lived in Tennessee for many years.

I ask unanimous consent that when we meet in executive session tomorrow afternoon we may take up these nominations severally, so that no mistake may be made about the matter. I do not think they ought to be taken up this afternoon.

Mr. GLASS. Incidentally, I want it distinctly understood that the Appropriations Committee, to which these nominations were referred, has not been derelict in any sense.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely not.

Mr. GLASS. The very day the nominations were referred to the Appropriations Committee I sent out a letter to the Senators from each State involved; and the report going around that I have opposed the consideration of these nominations is utterly without foundation in fact.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that to be true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, these nominations went over from yesterday until today, and a delay of 1 more day will not do any particular harm. Therefore, I think we may agree that when we take up the Executive Calendar tomorrow the names shall be called individually, and if there is any objection to the confirmation of these nominations it may be made known; otherwise, they shall be confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my request.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I have no disposition to oppose the confirmation of any nomination on this list, because it may be that it is entirely necessary in setting up this Board to make the appointments almost exclusively from New York and Massachusetts and Wisconsin, but I should like to inquire of some Senator, whoever may be able to answer, how the Committee on Appropriations got jurisdiction of these nominations. The original bill creating the Social Security Board was reported from the Committee on Finance, and how the Committee on Appropriations got jurisdiction of it is something which I think should be cleared up in passing.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations got jurisdiction because it was the Committee on Appropriations which was sufficiently interested in the qualifications of these appointees to provide that their appointments should be subject to the advice and consent of the Senate. Of course, they are not subject to the advice of the Senate, but the Senate must consent.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will agree with me, will he not, that the original bill was reported from the Committee on Finance, where it was carefully considered for a period of many weeks?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true, but the Committee on Finance did not require that the nominations be approved by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. When the Committee on Appropriations was considering the appropriations this year it provided that the nominations be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and that brought the matter to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the Senator and with the Senator from Virginia that the Committee on Finance was derelict in its duty, and that by performing a duty which the Committee on Finance should have performed the Committee on Appropriations became entitled to jurisdiction.

Mr. GLASS. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the Committee on Finance discussed the matter, and the nominations were referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Finance Committee is welcome to them.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, when this matter was brought up the distinguished Senator from Nevada, who now presides (the President pro tempore in the chair) expressed the viewpoint that these nominations should go to the Committee on Finance, and stated the reasons why, but the Senator from Tennessee made the motion to send them to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Senate sent them to that committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the parliamentary situation.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that these nominations be taken up tomorrow in executive session?

Mr. McKELLAR. Seriatim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They would be taken up seriatim, anyway, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, does that carry with it the idea of the time the Senate is to meet in executive session? The request means if we have an executive session, does it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. At the next executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GEORGE A. GORDON—NOTIFICATION OF PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Yesterday the Senate confirmed the appointment of Hon. George A. Gordon to be Minister to the Netherlands. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

The clerk will call the next nomination on the calendar.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clement L. West to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 46.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Fred C. Pabst to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Leon S. Saler to be assistant surgeon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Richard H. Smith to be assistant surgeon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the remaining nominations in the Public Health Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the remaining nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, July 30, 1937, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of Thy name's sake; deliver us and purge away our sins. Let Thy light break forth as the morning and let Thy righteousness go before Thee. Oh, let us hear the word of the Lord. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord and who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity nor sworn deceitfully. Heavenly Father, do Thou help us to live so earnestly and so nobly that we shall prove our title now to all our hopes and dreams. We entreat Thee, blessed Lord, to be graciously near our afflicted Members; may they lean on Thee for returning health and strength. Bless their firesides with good cheer. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purposes does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the majority leader what the program is going to be for today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from New York, the program for today is a rule making in order the flood-control authorization bill.

Another matter that may come up today is an extension of an oil compact between certain States which has been reported out by the appropriate House committee.

Mr. SNELL. Is that a different bill from the oil bill we passed in the House a short while ago?

Mr. RAYBURN. The bill to which the gentleman from New York refers is known as the Connally-Dies hot-oil bill. State compacts extend for only 2 years. The matter to which I refer is simply the renewal of a compact. The Senate bill providing for the renewal is on the Speaker's table and I think probably the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] will ask unanimous consent to consider that bill this afternoon.

Tomorrow in all probability—and I see the chairman of the Rules Committee is here and also the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]—there will be a rule providing for the consideration of the Panama Canal tolls bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There will be a meeting of the Rules Committee at 2:30 this afternoon to pass on the Panama Canal tolls bill. So it may come up tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman thinks that is the entire program?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the complete program for this week.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman anything further to tell us about the general program? The report in the newspapers this morning is not very encouraging.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the report in the newspapers is encouraging.

Mr. SNELL. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. RAYBURN. With the Senate passing the wage and hour bill today, which in all probability they will do, and with the House Committee on Labor saying that they can probably report it out the latter part of this week, certainly the first part of next week; with the housing bill in the Senate in all probability this week, the Senate reaching the court bill next week, and considering the legislative program announced in the papers this morning, unless there is a tie-up on the court bill in the Senate caused by something arising that would cause more debate than ordinary, we can finish all of this program within 3 weeks and feel certain that we can adjourn at that time and not be forced into a session between now and the 3rd of next January.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman for that information.

COMMEMORATIVE COIN RACKET

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, recently I notified the Members of the House that in the very near future I proposed to address the House upon the subject of commemorative coins and the racket that has grown up as a result of their issuance. I also stated that I would present to you an argument which should prevent the passage of such measures for all time.

I have devoted a great deal of time and study to this subject and in an effort to cut off the further coinage and issuance of commemorative coins, I have drafted and have today introduced a bill (H. R. 8036) to suspend the execution of commemorative coin acts. This bill will prohibit the further coinage and issuance of such coins under any act of Congress with three exceptions. In order to accomplish this, the bill specifically ratifies any refusal by the Director of the Mint to coin or issue any coins subsequent to the date of its introduction. It is drafted to cover all such acts and will give room to no possible complaint on the ground of discrimination. I have been advised that coins have been ordered and issued under every such authorizing act. The bill is worded so as not to affect those bills which recently were passed by the present Congress. In all fairness to the sponsors of those measures, it is my feeling, shared by other members of the Coinage Committee, that they should be afforded an opportunity to place their orders and receive their coins. In any event, those acts themselves contain express limitations as to time, that is, they expire 1 year from the date of their enactment, with the exception of the Texas Act.

Within recent months, I have thoroughly schooled myself in the undesirable practices which have grown up and the regretful use to which our coinage system has been put by so-called coin dealers. Indeed, the President of the United States, in several communications to the Congress has deplored the abuses and other ill effects resulting from the coinage of commemorative coins and strongly recommended the consideration of legislation which would authorize the coinage of medals in lieu of coins, thus preserving inviolate the coinage system of the United States. I have talked to the President on several occasions concerning commemorative coins and I know he will welcome this legislation.

Congress, many years ago, being cognizant of the dangers and confusion which flow from a multiplicity of designs in our coins, wisely enacted section 3510 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows:

* * * no change in the design or die of any coin shall be made oftener than once in 25 years from and including the first adoption of the design, model, die or hub for the same coin * * *.

With the flood of commemorative coin authorizations, this statute, while still on the books, has in recent years been more honored in the breach than in the observance. I believe that in the enactment of section 3510, Congress enunciated a wise general public policy. Adherence to such a policy would have prevented the present abuses which result from numerous authorizations for the coinage of commemorative coins. The effect of such authorizations has been to encourage trafficking in such issues for private profit, to increase possibilities of counterfeiting, and in general, to detract from the fundamental purpose for which money is issued, namely, to provide a medium of exchange.

From 1892, when the first issue of commemorative new design half dollars was approved, through 1928, a period of 36 years, 18 new design half dollars were authorized. From 1934 to 1936, inclusive, a period of 3 years, 26 new half dollar coins were authorized. In other words, and I want to stress this fact, in the last 3 years we passed more commemorative coin bills than during the entire 36-year period from 1392 through 1928. Surely, this must end sometime and I think you will agree that that time has arrived.

Besides orders for new coins recently approved, continuing orders are received at the mints for coins authorized as far back as 10 years ago—mind you, coins are still being ordered under acts passed over 10 years ago. Under the terms of an act passed in 1926 (act of May 17, 1926, sec. 3, 44 Stat. 559), which authorized the issue of 6 million pieces, the mint is required to fill orders from the interested organization or, as a matter of fact, from a coin dealer, in any amount, large or small, and they may be called for at any time, until this vast quantity is absorbed or until the act is repealed or suspended. Annual orders of coins in situations like this naturally are small, since the fewer coins minted in a given year, the higher the price may go. The change of date each year or, in fact, the slightest change gives the coins a new status to collectors and dealers. This also applies to the minting of the same coin at each mint.

In 1933 one act (act of June 15, 1933, 48 Stat. 149) authorized the coinage of 1,500,000 pieces; in 1934 another (act of May 26, 1934, 48 Stat. 807) authorized the issue of 600,000 pieces; another act passed in 1934 (May 14, 1934, 48 Stat. 776) authorized the issue of 500,000 pieces; and a second act in 1936 for the same organization and commemorative purpose (June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1981) authorized an additional coinage of not less than 25,000 nor more than 50,000 pieces with the change of design on one side. One act passed in 1936 (act of May 15, 1936, 49 Stat. 1277) provides that the interested organization shall not take less than 25,000 pieces, leaving the case open for any number above that amount. Consequently, the organization can demand delivery of any number that it can pay for, provided that not less than 25,000 be ordered. It can issue coins forever unless this law is repealed.

By the act of May 3, 1935 (49 Stat. 174), a new coin was authorized for an exposition. The act authorized 250,000 pieces and the organization requested the entire number. At the close of the exposition 180,000 pieces, bearing date of 1935, were returned to the mint to be melted and additional legislation was enacted (act of May 6, 1936, 49 Stat. 1262) permitting the recoinage of the 180,000 pieces, bearing date of 1936.

By the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1972), the issue of 200,000 coins, in commemoration of the opening of a bridge was authorized. Only 100,000 coins were called for and of this amount 30,000 are now to be returned to the mint to be melted. The House passed a bill a few weeks ago to permit the additional 100,000 to be minted to commemorate another bridge in that vicinity.

The most casual review of these conditions will indicate the amount of special work imposed upon the already overburdened mints. Such special work diverts the use of machinery, manpower, and consumable supplies from regular channels of operation, when every facility of the mints is needed to meet the demands of the business of this country. Special commemorative orders affect every department of the mints from the engraving department, including intricate and exacting engraving and die cutting, down to the delivery department. Last year the mint had to displace regular coinage while the necessary facilities were being diverted to the manufacture of 734,464 pieces of this special interest coinage. The total coinage in 1926 amounted to about 315,000,000 pieces; coinage in 1936 amounted to about 723,000,000 pieces. The country's demands for coinage are being attempted to be met with the same number of mints now that were in use 27 years ago. It is frequently necessary, therefore, to operate the mints on a 24-hour basis for long periods.

Furthermore, it is believed by the Treasury Department that the ever-increasing issues of special coins is an unwarranted expense and burden to the Government and that some limitation should be put on the time and place for the consummation of such acts as are now on the statute books. It is true that the cost of preparing the models for these coins is borne by the interested organization and that the master dies are paid for by such organization, but the Government must be put to the expense of making working dies and manufacturing the coins. Here is a waste of capital invested in metals required thus diverted from regular coinage. There is, it is true, the seigniorage on the minting of such coins which accrues to the Government. However, the seigniorage, or its equivalent in amount, is gradually lost to the Government over a series of years when subsidiary coins are continuously returned to be melted. Thousands of commemorative coins are continuously returned to be melted. Thousands of commemorative coins which have remained unsold by special organizations, come back to be melted. The metallurgical loss which necessarily occurs in melting silver coins, and the abrasion, must be made up by the use of new silver when such coins are again remade into regular issues, and this is an expense to the Government. The manufacture of such coins requires that part of the rolling mills, counting machines, coinage presses and all other manufacturing equipment must be withdrawn from regular coinage and used on coinage for special interests. The cost of coinage is a charge against regular appropriations, and absorbs the funds granted for regular coinage.

FIVE 50-CENT PIECES BRING $93

Another disturbing feature of this whole policy, which had developed in the last 2 years, is the appalling extent to which the coins have been exploited for private gain, when coins are intended to be made on Government account. One set of commemorative coins which the wording of the act permitted to be made at each mint, consisted of five types, all made in 1935; one from each mint, two bearing double dates and separate mint marks. This set of five pieces is advertised by a dealer for $93 (five 50-cent pieces worth the face value of $2.50). Another dealer offers two of these coins for $100. Still another issue limited by the act to 15,000 pieces with provision for having them made at "the mints" is advertised at $45 for three 50-cent pieces.

In all cases the coins are delivered by the mint to the agent named in the act. Practice on the part of the interested organizations appears to have grown up of delivering a large number of such coins to dealers for disposal to the public. There is no control over the charge which dealers may make. It is conceded that individuals may pay what they please for a coin, but attention is called to the fact that it is the intention of Congress when the coins are auhorized that the proceeds of the sale of such coins at a reasonable profit, shall be applied to the cost of the celebration which they are intended to memorialize. When coins are gathered up by dealers and offered at such absurd premiums, the profits do not go to the organization but to individual merchants.

No country in the world permits such abuse of its coinage as has been permitted in this country. The practice of issuing commemorative coins is so entrenched that determined resistance seems called for. Every time the importunities of an organization for special coins are yielded to, the defense against the whole pernicious policy is weakened.

Upon a vigorous appeal having been made in 1927 before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, when the bill was pending for the issue of the Bennington coin, the committee agreed to cooperate with the Treasury in discouraging the issue of special coins. The committee went on record, in its report on the Bennington coin, in the following terms:

> The committee desires at this time to go on record as not favoring legislation of this class because of the great number of bills introduced to commemorate events of local and not national interest and because such quantities of the coins so authorized have had to be taken back by the Government, melted, and reminted.

In addition, the hearings of a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, of April 15, 1937, on the subject of commemorative coins generally, are enlightening. Senator Adams, as chairman of the subcommittee, stated as follows with respect to the issuance of such coins, page 8:

> • • • For instance, in the case of the Oregon Trail • • • there was authorized the very large issue of 6,000,000 pieces of 50-cent coins. There were some issued in 1926, and some in 1928, and some in 1933, and some in 1934, and some in 1936, and some in 1937. And they had them issued in some of those years from two mints at a time.
> Now, there isn't a market in the country for any very large number of any particular issue of commemorative coins. But whenever they have a new mint mark, or a new date, they reopen the market for the coin collector. It becomes, not as some members of the committee, or some Senators, may think, only a matter of commemoration. If we issued a coin to commemorate an event, that was one thing. But when we open the way to the coin dealer to perpetrate a racket we have felt the United States Government was lending itself to a petty thing, and not in furtherance really of commemoration. And we believe there are many instances showing the possibility of this thing. For instance, while I do not want to draw any invidious comparisons, yet I will refer to S. 1268, now before this committee, which is to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the changing of the name of Sawpit to the village of Port Chester, N. Y.

I intend to enumerate some specific instances which I am sure will convince every member of Congress this bill should be passed and sent to the President for his signature without delay.

I gathered this information from the Treasury Department and from coin collectors. There is a distinction between coin collectors and coin distributors. The collector must pay what the distributor asks.

THE OREGON TRAIL COMMEMORATIVE COIN

In 1926 the Oregon Trail memorial half dollar was authorized for a coinage not to exceed 6,000,000 pieces. In the same year there were coined first 48,000 pieces from the Philadelphia Mint and then 100,000 pieces from the San Francisco Mint. Being coined at different mints they are classed as separate coins by coin collectors.

Out of the 48,000 Philadelphia pieces, 17,000 were remelted. In 1928, the Oregon Trail Commission asked that there be coined at the San Francisco Mint 50,000 more pieces. The Commission, however, failed to call for them, and they were left in the mint until April of 1933. Undoubtedly it was because of this, that Mr. Hoover, then President of the United States, vetoed all coin bills presented. The President could veto bills but he could not repeal this law and more were issued.

At that time in 1933, 44,000 of the 50,000 were remelted, leaving a limited issue of only 6,000. These were offered for sale by a coin and stamp distributor of New York, who at the same time advertised "Sole distributors of the Oregon Trail commemorative half dollars." At the same time, this company announced that there would be available 5,250, 1933 Denver Mint half dollars. One year later, in September of 1934, this company announced 7,000 Denver Mint 1934 coins.

In April of 1936, this same company announced 5,000 San Francisco Mint half dollars, saying then there would be no more from that mint in that year. Later 10,000 were issued at the Philadelphia Mint, and these were not advertised publicly, but to their customers by mail.

In February this year, there were coined 12,000 at the Denver Mint, and it seems that the commission finally woke up to the fact that they themselves could make some money off the poor coin collector. They are distributing them themselves.

Thus we have 8 issues in 11 years, all commemorating the Oregon Trail, the only difference being the date and mint mark, but coin collectors must buy all. Here are the issues:

Year	Number coined	Mint	Remelted	Left	Original price	Price now
1926	48,000	Philadelphia	17,000	31,000	$1.00	$1.35
1926	100,000	San Francisco		100,000	1.00	1.35
1928	50,000	do	44,000	6,000	2.00	5.25
1933	5,250	Denver		5,250	1.50	9.75
1934	7,000	do		7,000	2.00	5.00
1936	5,000	San Francisco		5,000	1.65	9.00
1936	10,000	Philadelphia		10,000	1.65	4.50
1937	12,000	Denver		12,000	1.60	1.60
	237,250		61,000	176,250	12.40	37.80

The 1937 half dollar is still being distributed by the Commission.

At the rate these coins are being minted, we will have Oregon Trail coins for the next 300 years, unless Congress repeals this law.

THE TEXAS CENTENNIAL

The Texas Centennial was held in 1936 but has been continued this year. In 1934 their bill was passed authorizing the issuance of 1,500,000 pieces. In that year, they had coined at Philadelphia, 205,000 pieces. No doubt they are still obtainable from the Commission. In 1935 they had coined at each of the three mints, 10,000. The small number raised the price from $1 to $1.50. Again in 1936, 10,000 from each mint. A notice has just appeared in a local paper that they expect to have their 1937 coins available shortly.

The coins can be issued until the full 1,500,000 pieces are exhausted unless the law is repealed. Here are the issues so far for the Texas Centennial:

Year	Number coined	Mint	Original price	Price now
1934	205,000	Philadelphia	$1.00	$1.10
1935	10,000	do	1.50	1.85
1935	10,000	San Francisco	1.50	1.85
1935	10,000	Denver	1.50	1.85
1936	10,000	Philadelphia	1.50	1.75
1936	10,000	San Francisco	1.50	1.75
1936	10,000	Denver	1.50	1.75
1937	8,000	Philadelphia
1937	8,000	San Francisco
1937	8,000	Denver
	289,000		10.00	11.90

The total coined to date is 289,000 out of an authorized 1,500,000. The price on the 1937 coins is not available as they have not been distributed but will be in a few weeks.

It is but proper to state that the money raised from the sale of commemorative coins under the Texas act is being used entirely for the purpose of constructing a memorial building on the grounds of the Texas University. This building is partly completed, $300,000 of the amount appropriated by Congress to celebrate the centennial being used to start the structure. The board of regents of the university supervise the distribution of the coins.

THE DANIEL BOONE BICENTENNIAL

This law has developed into a racket, the extent of which no one dreamed of. The Daniel Boone Bicentennial Act authorized 600,000 pieces in 1934. That year they coined 10,000 at the Philadelphia Mint. In 1935, 10,000 from the Philadelphia Mint and 5,000 from each of the other mints. Keep in mind each half dollar has a special value—the smaller the issue the greater the graft.

It was about this time that the groaning and muttering of the coin collectors, who were footing the bill, began to be heard. They protested that the coins were being issued from year to year with no change except date and mint. In other words, they did not even go to the expense in changing the design, which would have been the honorable thing to do at least, but they simply changed the date, pocketing the cost of the new design. Was it any reason the coin collectors complained?

Mr. Dunn, the distributor of this Daniel Boone half dollar, took it upon himself to issue what he termed a "bonus issue" of 2,000 from each of the western mints. He claimed these were only for those who had stuck with him, by ordering all of the previous issues. But the worst is yet to come. The coins were issued but not all distributed. Coin collectors have always defied this distributor to produce a list of 2,000 names of the people who got these sets. I have heard the cost of this issue is now about $100.

In December of 1934 Mr. Dunn claims to have assigned all the entire issue, yet there is a case of distribution late in April of the next year by him. In July of 1936, this same distributor offered a set of these rare coins to anyone who would purchase 500 of the 1936 Philadelphia coins for $510, express collect. In the same advertisement he says, "From some sets—as far as they go—made available to the Daniel Boone Bi-Centennial Commission approved by Congress." Evidently he was trying to deceive the collectors into believing that more had been coined.

In 1936 there were coined at Philadelphia 10,000, and then 5,000 from each of the branch mints. Now Mrs. Dunn, his wife, advertises 15,000, 1937 coins from the Philadelphia Mint.

Late in 1935, we have Mr. Dunn's word that he wanted to sell only 300,000 more coins, and now it is stated they expect to continue for 5 years! My bill will end his racket.

The issues under this act follows:

Year	Number coined	Mint	Original price	Present approximate price
1934	10,000	Philadelphia	$1.60+	$3.50
1935	10,000	do	1.10	3.00
1935	5,000	San Francisco	1.60+	5.00
1935	5,000	Denver	1.60+	5.00
1935-34	10,000	Philadelphia	1.10	2.75
1935-34	2,000	San Francisco	3.70	65.00
1935-34	2,000	Denver	3.70	65.00
1936-34	12,000	Philadelphia	1.10	1.35
1936-34	5,000	Denver	1.60	5.00
1936-34	5,000	San Francisco	1.60	5.00
1937-34	7,500	Philadelphia	1.60	2.50
1937-34	3,750	Denver	1.60	7.50
1937-34	7,500	San Francisco	1.60	5.50
	84,750		19.80	176.65

A total of 13 coins, the only difference being the date and mint. Remember coin collectors are like stamp collectors, they must buy each issue. Take the issue of 3,750 coins just ordered from the Denver Mint. It was bad enough to place an order for 7,500 at San Francisco and Philadelphia, but the Denver coin will net Mr. Dunn thousands of dollars in profit. Who are the suckers? The poor coin collectors who must buy to complete their collections. While the price quoted is announced in advertisement, coin collectors tell me the 3,500 issue will surely bring around $50. They say try and buy them for $7.50. Are we to permit this? My bill will stop it if enacted at once.

THE ARKANSAS COINS

Arkansas secured a late start, but they are evidently making up for lost time. The act authorized 500,000 in 1935. The first were coined at the Philadelphia Mint, 10,000. Then they began to get more orders than they had coins. I understand they consulted a coin dealer and acting on his advice, coined an additional 3,000 at the Philadelphia mint and 5,500 at each of the branch mints. This dealer later admits having practically complete control of the branch minted coins. These coins were originally sold by the Commission at $1, but very few collectors got the branch mint coins. The dealer immediately raised the price to $2.75 each.

In 1936 they coined 10,000 from each of the mints. Then it seems they had some difficulty in selling them all, according to the wording of their advertisements, and so they reduced their price to $1.50 from $2. After these were coined, a bill to authorize three new reverses was introduced which would have meant nine more coins. Fortunately it was amended to only one new reverse.

Twenty-five thousand of these were coined, and distributed only by a New York dealer who set the price at $1.85 plus postage, whereas the commission only charged $1.50. And now, notices are being sent out by this same dealer that they will have shortly a 5,000 set issue from the three mints of 1937. And they have set the price at $8.75. At the same time this coin dealer advertises "Exclusive distributors of the Arkansas half dollars."

The coins so far issued for Arkansas follows:

Year	Number coined	Mint	Original price	Present approximate price
1935	13,000	Philadelphia	$1.00	$2.75
1935	5,500	San Francisco	1.00	5.00
1935	5,500	Denver	1.00	5.00
1936	10,000	Philadelphia	1.50	1.95
1936	10,000	Denver	1.50	1.95
1936	10,000	San Francisco	1.50	1.95
1936 (Joe Robi)	25,000	Philadelphia	1.85	3.50
1937	5,000	do	4.40	4.40
1937	5,000	Denver	4.40	4.40
1937	5,000	San Francisco	9.35	21.00
	94,000

The authorization is for 500,000 coins and they can go on until that number is minted unless we repeal the law.

Thus in the above-mentioned cases, instead of only 4 coins, 39 were issued or have been ordered and only 667,250 out of an authorized 8,650,000. There is nothing to prevent them from issuing the balance of nearly 8,000,000 unless we repeal the laws. Is Congress going to sit quiet and let this racket continue? The commissions are probably out of existence, the celebrations have been held, but there was nothing in the law to prevent the turning over of the additional number to coin dealers who are working the racket and reaping a harvest.

SMALL ISSUES AND THEIR DISTRIBUTION

In 1935 a Hudson, New York, issue was authorized for 10,000 pieces. Coined in June 1935, delivered to the commission on June 28, and all sold out July 2 with their advertisement appearing about July 6. They were sold to dealers in large blocks, and it is whispered that one New York dealer, secured the most of them. The price was immediately raised by these dealers. The original price was $1; the present price, $7.50.

Providence, R. I., authorized the coinage of 50,000. Surely this appears plenty for all who wanted them. Yet they were never advertised for sale by the original commission. There was a description of the coin published in February of 1936. At the time there was an advertisement by a shop in Providence offering to secure the coins for the collectors at $1.50, although the collectors who had already written to the commission were informed that they would be available at $1 each.

The commission began accepting money from collectors as early as November of 1935. They coined 20,000 from the Philadephia Mint and 15,000 from each of the branch mints.

Then in April it was announced they had sold out in 6 hours. The astonishing part of it is in the entire State of Rhode Island there were only five members of the American Numismatic Association, which is the largest organization of coin collectors in the United States.

Where did all the coins go? This Providence dealer immediately raised his price to $7.50 a set, and the next month raised it to $9. He admitted securing 11,500 for orders that he had, then later offered 50 sets to trade and 25 to sell, and I have seen a letter over his signature wherein he admits selling another 500 sets to dealers. A set is two coins, one to show the face, the other the back.

Here is what happened to the collectors. The Commission accepted their money. Then, after all were sold, sent most collectors back their money, saying that they had sold them all to natives, but the money sent back was not the original money orders and checks sent in, but checks from the Commission drawn on a Providence national bank. Was the coin collectors' money used to send to the mint to get the coins?

I have seen a letter where this Commission admits selling a dealer a greater number than was allotted to others, due to the fear that they would be unable to sell the entire 50,000.

In December, the Providence dealer criticizes the Columbia, S. C., commission for not properly distributing a small issue.

This Columbia, S. C., issue was coined in November to celebrate a 1-day exposition held in the previous January. The Columbia, S. C., sets, original price $6.45, now $15.

Last year the Cincinnati committee had 5,000 coins minted from each mint, or 15,000 in all. What was the result? You have three issues and a half dollar of any one of the issues now brings $11.95.

The San Diego issue was authorized for 250,000 in 1935. The commission minted 250,000 at San Francisco in 1935 and returned 180,000 to be melted, and in 1936 minted 180,000 at Denver Mint, returning 150,000 to be melted. The price was changed three times. Originally it was $1.50 for each half dollar and now the coins are selling for $3 each.

EIGHTY-ONE NEW BILLS PENDING

What is the situation that confronts the Congress today? Since this session convened in January there has been introduced in the House and Senate 81 bills which provide for the issuing of commemorative coins. If we are justified in passing one we are justified in passing the others so you can realize for yourself what is going to happen in the future if the Congress continues the policy it has adopted in the past, and enacts such legislation into law.

Feeling I have supplied sufficient information to justify the repeal of the old laws I will not burden you further, but there are many more cases that can be cited showing beyond question where the coins were issued and distributed, not for the purpose of really commemorating an event, but for the purpose, not only to defray the cost of the various celebrations, but to enable coin distributors to practically fleece the public.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, in 1934 Jim Farley, Democratic National Chairman, said in Utah that the present administration was the most economic administration this country ever had. Laugh that off as the biggest joke of the past 6 years.

Speaking of the present administration, may I say that in the year 1934 we went in the red over $4,000,000,000? Yesterday, July 28, at Salem, Ill., James Farley, the Postmaster General, said the depression had been wiped out by the present administration. He forgot to mention the fact that the country has been burdened with an exorbitant debt of $18,000,000,000 for this joy ride, which your children, your grandchildren, and some other grandchildren will have to pay sometime. Last year we went in the red $3,000,000,000. Our national debt is over $36,657,685,000 on July 27 as per the Treasury statement. O Mr. Speaker, Jim Farley did not mention that the bill is yet to be paid.

Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong with James Farley. He does not know what he is talking about. There is something wrong with this Congress, because it does not know what it is doing; or there is something wrong with the President of the United States, because he does not know what it is all about or where he is leading you.

If you will look at the statement of July 22 and compare the receipts with the expenditures you will see we have gone in the red for the first 22 days of this year over $5,694,000, a day more than we went in the red last year. Remember, more each day, more each day, than you went in the red last year. It is appalling in the light of the statement by the President that he would have a balanced budget this year. If we went in the red last year $3,000,000,000, where in the world are you Democrats taking this country? You certainly are giving us a joy ride. The wreck will come later from this insane method of doing things.

When James Farley makes the statement he has made, he is only thinking of one thing, and that is the political aspect. He is not thinking of where this Nation is being led up to the precipice for a great fall. If you do not watch out you are going to wreck this Nation and do that very soon. I advise you to be more vigilant in your spending, get down to a sane, judicial, sensible administration of Government expenditures. Jim Farley does not know what the word "economy" means. The Jeffersonian Democrats should advise him, if there are any of them left in Congress. The New Deal, I am sure, does not know what economy in government means.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a House resolution for the investigation of the W. P. A. Of course, every one knows I am friendly to the W. P. A. and Harry Hopkins.

But every year when the appropriation for the W. P. A. is taken up in this House, Mr. Harry Hopkins is denounced for about 2 months beforehand. We have a long controversy and waste a lot of time; then we go ahead and pass the bill and turn over one and a half or two billion dollars to be spent as he sees fit.

Besides the House resolution, I have introduced a bill providing for the appointment of an unemployment commission, to be composed of 12 members, appointed by the President of the United States. The commission is to consist of three Senators, three Representatives, and six citizens. This bill is now before the Labor Committee. They have promised hearings; I hope the bill is reported out, that we get a rule, and it is adopted.

This commission is directed to make a report at the beginning of next year. We would then know what we were doing and could, moreover, fix the permanent policies and create a standing committee on Public Works and Welfare, on which I have also introduced a House resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Has not the Senate authorized the appointment of a committee to investigate that subject?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; the gentleman is correct. In fact, the Senate has authorized two committees, one just a Senate committee, the other an unemployment commission, but the House has not done anything. The unemployment commission is my bill, and on which I have also introduced a similar bill, already mentioned.

That Senate bill is now pending before the Labor Committee in the House, along with my bill, one by Mr. VOORHIS, but none has so far been acted on. I believe if we would create this unemployment commission now, next year we could establish some permanent policy in connection with the question of relief, unemployment, social security, and old-age pensions. That is a very important thing, in which I hope the Republicans will join.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has had the same experience with the Rules Committee I have had. I introduced a resolution 2 weeks ago to investigate the sale of the President's Democratic Handbook. I would like to join with the gentleman from Texas and see if we cannot get both of our resolutions reported.

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not think an investigation of the Democratic Handbook is quite as important; but seriously, the questions I present are of the greatest importance to the people of this country. This is simply congressional policy—common sense—and whether we agree on other subjects, it seems we could agree on this.

Whatever our ideas or opinions, we certainly ought to know what we are doing on relief—how and why we are spending the money. Such matters have no congressional committees of any kind now, and I believe any member of any political party can vote for this conscientiously and be doing an intelligent and patriotic thing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Members were kind enough to listen to me on an exposure of subversive and un-American activities in the United States. During my discussion I pleaded with you to support the Dies resolution, which provides for a proper and thorough cleaning of house in the United States as far as all these groups are concerned.

At that time I listed about 46 agitators, spies, dopes, aliens, smugglers, and everything else. I promised the country a second list; and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may insert in the RECORD a list of about 17 more of these smugglers, alien agitators, Hitlerites, and propagandists who are seeking to undermine this Government in one way or another, to substitute their form of propaganda in order to disturb our American people, to breed intolerance, and to array one American against another.

I think it will be very interesting to see the names of those who are connected with this movement, and I may say it is becoming worse and worse every day. The German Reich in yesterday's newspapers did not deny the charges I have made, but it suddenly found out that I was Jewish, and it wants the American people not to believe my charges. It does not deny a single fact or statement made by me on the floor of the House or in other public places.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate the names to which I referred in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The following is an additional list of people who are seeking to destroy our democratic form of government. Their propaganda is being spread not only throughout the United States but throughout the world.

Severin Winterscheidt, representing the German Ministry of Propaganda sworn in at Erlangen, Germany, September 18, 1936, by Julius Streicher. Lives at 267 St. Nicholas Avenue, Brooklyn; is an alien. He is the only one with a complete list of German representatives in the United States. Works directly with the Weckruf & Beobachter and speaks on meeting.

Carl Lange, also at 267 St. Nicholas Avenue, Brooklyn. He is the representative of the Alfred Rosenberg Pagan Movement in the United States, who actually receives a salary of the Edda Bund, the local of the Rosenberg movement in the United States. A good speaker, he collects dues to be transferred on German ships to Germany; $1 per month, membership about 4,000 in the States. Particularly interested in smashing Free Masonry in the United States.

Carl Kienzle, West New York, N. J.; employed at the North German Lloyd but actually carrier of propaganda material from and to ships; has passes on every railroad in the States, Canada, and Mexico, and the only one to be the actual go-between in matters of Bund and Captain Mensing.

C. K. Froehlich, also with the North German Lloyd; representing all German societies in the United States who actually have become directly connected with the Nazi Party in Germany; averages 8 or 10 trips to Germany annually but never pays fare or uses a passport; an American citizen. Finances are always very good with him.

Dietrich Worthmann, New York Turnverein president and also a member of the A. A. U., working directly under the Propaganda Ministry of Germany; responsible for the participation of the United States of America at the past Olympics; carries out instructions of Captain Mensing; an American citizen.

Capt. H. Rehm, of the North German Lloyd, representing Mr. Schulze; only member of the S. A. in the United States of America. Mr. Schulze is military attaché of the German embassy in Washington; particular work is to get military secrets out of the United States.

Guenther Orgell, Staten Island, representing the West Deutscher Beobachter in the United States of America; sort of liaison officer between the party and Government officials in the United States of America.

C. Hinnrichsmeyer (alias Ullrich) now in the United States of America in charge of publicity of the propaganda ministry—cartoons, and so forth—supposed to get forged documents from Captain Mensing; staying at either the Barizon Plaza or with Vice Consul Dr. Draeger.

Dr. Zimmerer, of Hanover, Germany; here on a lecture tour making anti-Semitic speeches in particular; was the one who reorganized the Friends of the New Germany in January last year.

August Klapproth, Jersey City, N. J., at 1158 Bergenline Avenue. District leader for the State of New Jersey and director of the Camp Nordland in Andover. Citizen. Morally irresponsible; has, as a matter of fact, been arrested on a moral charge. New Jersey.

Ernst Mueller, 16–28 Himrodt Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Local leader of Brooklyn and camp director of Camp Siegfried. Importer of German clocks and watches. Very active in the boycott of Jews. Citizen of the United States of America.

George Nebbe, Staten Island leader, friend of Mr. Orgell and Colonel Emerson. Liaison officer for the consulate. Living in a common-law marriage.

Emil Ebner, 1627 Second Avenue, New York City. Representing the Nord Deutsch Hefe Industrie of Germany, importing yeast. Mr. Ebner was arrested as an Aryan on a moral charge with a Negro woman of Newark, N. J., and fined $100, which the bund paid in February 1935. Mr. Ebner carried the proceeds of a no. 3200 on a celebration of Hitler's advent to power to Germany and was personally rewarded by Hitler. A personal friend of Julius Streicher.

The following radio announcers conduct German programs in the United States where German consuls and visitors of the German Government are allowed to speak freely: Elsie Maria Troja, WBNX; Herbert Oedgen, WBNX; John Veistel, WFAB; Otto Veller, WHOM; Hans Muennz, WBBC; Helmuth Wessels, WWRL.

H. von Boeckmann, representing the German broadcasting units in the United States, furnishes the above announcers with the material to be used weekly. Lobbying for sale of helium gas to Germany.

Dr. Curt Sell, Washington, D. C., also representing the radio units, and lobbyist for German industries. Very popular with United States Government representatives. In Embassy service.

German News Service, under the direction of Mr. von Doemming, 204 Park Avenue, distributor of propaganda material, receiving short-wave direction directly from Germany.

John Brueckner, president of the Amerop Travel Service, a close friend of Hitler, also at Park Avenue, is in charge of printing of propaganda in the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I have a further list of over a hundred or more names, but I do not intend to put it into the RECORD at this time. It will be available for the public when Congress will authorize an investigation, as it has been my experience in the past that in many instances where names and locations are exposed the worst culprits flee from the country or change their addresses so often that it is humanly impossible to keep up with their whereabouts.

As I have previously stated, drilling in foreign uniforms, saluting the swastika, goose stepping, and preaching of Hitlerism in this country must stop.

Congress has no right to adjourn until such a resolution is adopted by it which would authorize a committee to make proper investigation of all un-American activities at the earliest possible moment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I trust there will be no more requests for time to make speeches, as we are anxious to dispose of a rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman going to make a speech on adjournment?

Mr. KNUTSON. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to have 2 minutes myself on that.

Mr. KNUTSON. There are no politics in this.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Under the unusual circumstances just stated by the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. In the time allotted me I would like to have read for the information of the House a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reading of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING ACCEPTANCE ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES OF A COPYRIGHT AND ALL INTEREST THEREIN

Resolved, etc., That the Library of Congress is hereby authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States a title of copyright and all interest therein now registered in the name of SOL BLOOM, and the publication prepared and published by the direction of the United States Commission for the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formulation of the Constitution of the United States, entitled "The Story of the Constitution."

"That the Library of Congress is hereby authorized and directed to receive, hold, and administer all increment resulting from the possession of such copyright for the benefit of the people of the United States and that any sums of money accruing to the Library of Congress in excess of the cost of publication and administration of the matter covered by the aforesaid title of copyright shall revert to the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, in the debate in this body yesterday afternoon considerable doubt was expressed concerning the legality of an alleged conveyance made by a certain copyright holder. In order to set all doubts at rest with reference both to his good faith and the legality of his action, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this resolution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather important matter. I do not know what is in the resolution and, therefore, I cannot agree to its immediate consideration.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PLAN FOR FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 270.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 270

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 175, a joint resolution to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Flood Control, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of a flood-control measure, a joint resolution providing for a survey of all the rivers of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], the author of the bill.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, after adoption of this rule, I ask only that this resolution be considered on its merits. If it is good legislation, give it your support. If it is bad, it should be defeated. When I came to Congress 2½ years ago I asked to be assigned to the Committee on Flood Control because of a major flood-control problem that exists in my district and involves the lower Mississippi Valley. After the great flood of 1927, Congress in 1928 passed a law adopting a plan for the solution of the floods in the lower Mississippi Valley. The plan was never executed. Some work was done on it, but in the course of construction it developed that the plan should be substantially changed and modified. My district was suffering irreparable injury from the effects of that delay and from the continuing menace of recurring floods. Therefore, I was prompted, first through my own interest in flood control, to try to take care of my own people and procure legislation for their relief and benefit. After being assigned to the Committee on Flood Control and after it had held hearings for several months on a bill which had been proposed, based upon the report of the Chief of Engineers, dealing with the problem of flood control in the lower Mississippi, I began to get a general view of the whole national situation with regard to the menace of floods and the necessity for the Federal Government's exercising greater authority and adopting, if possible, a national plan to try to relieve the fertile valleys and densely populated areas from the menace of disastrous floods.

We made an appeal to the Congress, and it responded by enacting what is now known as the Overton bill, which we hope will prove adequate to deal with the lower Mississippi Valley. I appreciate that action of the Congress. In that legislation we declared that the responsibility was on the shoulders of the National Government and did not rest primarily with the States and local interests, as had therefore been the policy of this Government in flood-control legislation.

After this bill was passed other problems developed in my district. Since then we have had the floods of 1936 and the great floods of 1937. Enough destruction has been wrought by floods within the past 18 months to arouse this Nation and to arouse this Congress to immediate action.

I do not subscribe to the belief that local interests can plan flood control. I believe it is necessary for the Federal Government to make such a plan with the aid of local communities. We may build a sea wall around a city and protect that city, but the sea wall does not protect the agricultural valley which extends for miles in between the great populated centers. It is necessary, if we are to preserve our soil, if we are to preserve our national resources, if we are to preserve the wealth of this Nation from which we must draw our revenues in the future, to take immediate steps not only to conserve our natural resources but we should develop and use them for man's advancement, convenience, comfort, and service.

After the Committee on Flood Control had held many hearings, a bill was passed to solve my greatest flood problem. However, I have others that are pressing. My State has more miles of navigable streams than any other, but I can not hope to have all my projects authorized and constructed while others of possibly equal value are being neglected.

Once I made an appeal for passage of the Overton bill, because it was the major problem of the Nation. It was a project which had already been approved and remained unexecuted because modification and changes were found to be necessary. I made an appeal then for national responsibility for a project in the Mississippi Valley. Today I am not making an appeal for my district or section alone, I am making it for every valley of this Nation, for anyone whose home or property is or hereafter may be threatened by the menace of future floods. I am urging a comprehensive, coordinated, and integrated plan that will include all major streams and their principal tributaries in order that we may conserve our national wealth and utilize it for our enjoyment and future security. Before we proceed to any great extent in the expenditure of Federal moneys, it is wise to devise a national plan with reference to what shall be the ultimate objectives of this Government. It is the responsibility of Congress to formulate a policy with reference to the contributions of local interests and distribution of cost. That is your duty and mine, but it is necessary to have expert counsel and advice in the formulation of engineering plans. That is primarily what this measure proposes to obtain.

During the past 9 or 10 years the War Department has expended $12,000,000 in making surveys and in assembling data, according to the testimony of the Chief of Engineers in the hearing which was recently held by the Committee on Flood Control on the bill with reference to the Ohio Valley that was passed a few days ago by the House. I asked the Chief of Engineers if, being familiar with this resolution, he was now prepared, from the data in his office and surveys already made, to submit to the Congress of the United States a report which would give us a plan for the control of floods on all the major streams of the Nation. He answered in the affirmative, that he is now prepared to make such a report and that practically all surveys needed had already been completed.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. In what way does this bill affect the bill recently introduced in the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, for regional planning throughout the country which would deal with navigation, flood control, power, reforestation, and kindred subjects?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is that bill the same as the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator NORRIS?

Mr. COLDEN. Yes; practically so, although not the same in all details.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is along the same line and has the same objective?

Mr. COLDEN. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. May I answer the gentleman by saying that whether you favor that bill or whether you are opposed to it, would make no difference. This measure cannot do it any harm, and if you were opposed to the bill, this would be another way, probably, of reaching the same objective insofar as undertaking to plan a flood-control program for the Nation. This bill should do no injury to the Norris or Mansfield measures. If you are going to have it done by seven different authorities, they are not going to act without planning.

This bill calls for a report and plan from the War Department by its Corps of Engineers upon which we must rely for engineering advice and counsel. It will obtain for our information a report and a plan based upon surveys already made and data the War Department has or may assemble. We do not have to adopt the plan after it is submitted. This is only to present us with a picture, it is only to get their recommendation and the Congress reserves the right as to what action it shall take on it. We may adopt all or any part of it, retaining the good and discarding that which we may regard as objectionable.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Arkansas on his fine presentation of the subject of flood control, but I call his attention to the suggested amendment on page 2 and ask whether or not the resolution and the surveys thereunder which the Government will undertake, being primarily for flood control, is it advisable to bring in the further question of hydroelectric development when our objective is flood control.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may answer the gentleman by stating that my thought in introducing this bill was to get a flood-control plan.

Mr. TREADWAY. I judged that.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I certainly had nothing else in mind, but in studying the question we find that if the Government is going to build a dam in a river, for instance, for flood control, if we are going to act wisely and plan wisely, we ought also to take into account whether the dam should be constructed with a view of utilizing its power values. I indorse the views expressed by the President in his message to Congress on this subject on June 3, 1937, when he said, "The water-power resources of the Nation must be protected from private monopoly and used for the benefit of the people.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is just one further thought, if the gentleman will permit. Your original program places this objective in the hands of the Army engineers, while the amendment brings in the Department of Agriculture. Does not this complicate your flood-control situation?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; it does not. I think the Congress and the people of the Nation and the experts who are giving this matter thought and study today will agree that if we are to have a wise and effective flood-control program, we must take into account the influence, force, and the effect of a drop of rainfall from the time it leaves the heavens throughout its complete course until it reaches the sea again. You must deal with it in all of its aspects.

If I may answer the gentleman further in this respect, this bill, as originally introduced by me, has already been passed by the Senate. It was introduced in the Senate after I had introduced it here, and was passed by the Senate unanimously on June 14. I am not proceeding without having taken into consideration and sought the counsel of all who should be consulted, insofar as I know. I took this matter up to ascertain whether it would meet with any objection with respect to the national plan that is now proposed by the bill that the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN] referred to, and I am assured that in all probability this will be an aid rather than a hindrance to that measure. In other words, we have practically all the data down here in the War Department. The agents of the Government have already expended your money, made surveys, assembled the data, and all we want to do is to bring it in here in the form of a report, with the War Department's endorsement, that will give us a plan and a true picture—a blueprint, so to speak—of a comprehensive coordinated plan.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I compliment the gentleman upon his very earnest presentation of his subject. Does the gentleman think this bill would in any way conflict with the bill recently assigned to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, which came to the committee based upon a message received from the President of the United States, in which the entire subject of flood control was included?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am sure it does not.

Mr. DONDERO. The question of flood control having been assigned to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, does not the gentleman think the report of the Army engineers or the Secretary of War should be made to that committee for study by the committee rather than being made first to the Congress, and then let the Rivers and Harbors Committee report back to the Congress?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not see anything to prevent them from getting the full benefit of this report when made to the Congress. No bill is pending with that committee with respect to such a report. We know now, that in order to find out anything about a flood-control plan, we must have a report made to the Congress instead of having to go first to one place and then to another. Let us bring it here, where it is available to all Members of Congress. What we want to do is to have brought in here a complete picture of all projects heretofore authorized or now under construction, together with all others which the Corps of Army Engineers recommend as essential and necessary to control floods and prevent disaster from their occurrence. It can be done, and it is our duty to enact legislation that will direct that it shall be done. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arkansas in order that he may answer a question of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the Army, in every instance, is building dams for flood control so that later on they may be enlarged and used for the development of power? I know this is true in the case of the Merrimack River in my own district.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am sure that is true; and I do not think this Government, under any system, ought to ever take away from the Army engineers the making of recommendations with reference to the navigable streams of this country.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very pleased that the gentleman feels that way about it.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that the development of power will help defray the cost of these flood-control projects?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

It will be observed that under the provisions of this resolution we not only propose to secure a plan for levees on the main channels and construction of dams for reservoirs, but we undertake to obtain a report from the Secretary of Agriculture, from studies made by the various agencies in that Department, dealing with the retardation of waterflow so as to hold back rainfall from the watersheds and thus prevent to a great degree soil erosion as well as relieve the stream channels from the burden of an accelerated flow of rainfall from the watersheds into the streams. We also seek to have embodied in the report facts and recommendations pertaining to the utilization of waters that may be stored by the construction of retention dams for flood-control purposes. In other words, it should be our purpose as we expend huge sums of money to get the full benefit by way of flood protection, soil conservation, reclamation, irrigation, and power development. All of these are in the interest of our national welfare. They deal directly with our future security and prosperity. Continuous waste and dissipation of the great wealth of natural benefits with which our country was endowed will be disastrous. Further procrastination, neglect, or failure to approach intelligently and courageously this problem of major importance will be inexcusable. If human lives are to be protected and immeasurable property loss averted, we will not only obtain this plan but will follow it up by enacting legislation that will put it into execution and authorize and direct construction of projects the Congress finds necessary to accomplish these desired results.

In the past we have not had adequate or wise planning and have attempted to enact legislation which contained projects that had not been thoroughly investigated and which, if properly considered in connection with the whole drainage basin in which they were proposed, would not be economically justified nor practical.

It is only natural that each Member of Congress would like to have the projects in his district authorized and moneys appropriated for their construction, but I have no more right to seek Federal moneys for flood-control projects in my district than does any other Member for his own district; and often when measures are proposed for flood-control purposes the charge is made that it is "pork barrel" legislation. We are "panned" because we attempt to secure Federal moneys for local improvements, and yet when the floods come we are again "panned" because we had not done something to protect against them.

This resolution may offer only a humble beginning, but it is a sincere effort to find a solution on an impartial basis for flood-control relief for all of those valleys of the Nation on terms and conditions that are fair and equitable and which do not give an advantage to one section of the country over another. Projects recommended and adopted under the terms of this resolution will, we believe, stand strictly upon merit. No valley should have preferment over another, except as it can or may be determined where the greater flood dangers exist.

After the plan has been adopted it will take several years to have all projects constructed. If we had had such a plan in 1930, when the depression came with all its force and distress, instead of giving a dole and having weed-cutting and leaf-raking jobs for the unemployed we might have more profitably utilized their skill and labor in the building of flood-control works. We should and we must look ahead.

Before I conclude, I again wish to quote approvingly from the message to Congress on this subject from the President of the United States on July 3, 1937, in which he said:

> Taking care of our natural estate, together with the stopping of existing waste and building it back to a higher productivity is a national problem.
>
> At least we have undertaken a national policy.
> Having put our hand to the plow, let us not look back.

After discussing the work that would be involved with the Chief of Army Engineers, I am persuaded that the report and plan called for by this resolution can be ready by the time we convene in January. There will be no more flood-control legislation at this session.

I ask the membership of this House on both sides of the aisle to join with me in support of this measure. Let us lay aside all politics and partisanship. This is too great and important, and of such necessity, to permit of opposition from any Member, regardless of party affiliations. It is sufficiently meritorious, in my opinion, to command the aggressive support of everyone interested in the subject with which it deals. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is no controversy whatever, so far as I know, about this measure, I shall consume very little time in discussing it.

I believe this measure is one of the most important, one of the most imperative, and one of the most meritorious pieces of legislation that has been presented to this Congress.

The terrible havoc wrought by the floods of last January have awakened the American people to the importance of steps necessary to curb this terrible menace to both life and property. This bill merely provides for a general survey of all of the major rivers of the United States by the War Department. It will apply to every nook and corner of the United States. Particularly since the construction of the Norris Dam in my district in Tennessee, the menace of high water has been very greatly reduced. However, I am personally tremendously interested in the solution of this problem not only on account of local interest but for the country as a whole. It is up to the Congress to provide every possible means to prevent the recurrence of the devastations that have been wrought by the floods of the past.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I repeat my compliment to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], who has made such a fine presentation of the question of surveys for flood control. For some time we have been studying this problem of flood control and need to secure results. Floods come along periodically and do enormous damage. A year ago the section of the State of Massachusetts which I represent suffered very severely, and other sections of New England as well. We had numerous conferences at that time with representatives of the Army engineers and were very much encouraged as to the prospects of something being promptly done. I realize, as, of course, we all do, that in order to make a complete survey and study it requires quite a considerable period of time. Nevertheless, I think the gentleman from Arkansas is correct in urging haste—not undue haste at the expense of information but that we keep interested in these studies our officials who are under obligation to the Congress to carry out its wishes, and show a disposition by the adoption of such a resolution as the one before us to carry on as rapidly as possible, so that the possibility of further damage and serious loss of life and property may be overcome at the earliest practical moment. It was in that spirit, to a certain extent, that I wondered whether the amendment including hydroelectric study should be brought forward in connection with flood control, but since making that comment I have been informed that the amendment, which will be proposed by the committee, is already law.

That being the case, of course, there is no harm in including it in the resolution; but in behalf of my constituents in western Massachusetts who have suffered severely from the floods of the Connecticut, Hoosic, and Westfield Rivers, and in behalf of other citizens who have also suffered from floods in our State, I hope that this resolution will bring about as prompt action as possible on the part of the Army engineers. In this way the chances of further damage being done in our area, as well as in other sections of the country, may be as promptly as possible overcome. Therefore, I am glad indeed to join with those other sections of the country where suffering has resulted from floods in what I hope will be the unanimous passage of this resolution, and prompt action by the Board of Engineers under it.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Under the Boulder Dam project, the people of southern California are defraying the expenses, not only of flood control but also conserving water for irrigation.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not care to go into any detail in respect to the matter. I think we can safely leave the details to the Army engineers.

For quite some time the flood conditions in western Massachusetts have been a source of inquiry by the Army engineers. Without taking the time to describe the survey in detail, it can be said that in the judgment of the engineers a group of reservoirs should be constructed. This survey had progressed sufficiently far so that recommendation probably would soon have been made to Congress for the adoption of the plan had it not been for the severe and disastrous flood in the early spring of 1936. That flood brought so much higher water than shown in previous departmental records that the data theretofore assembled required revision and marked enlargement of the contemplated plans. To what extent this revision has progressed I am not informed at this time, but I assume that the division engineer of the Army has been actively engaged in the work. Recently a four-State compact has been entered into which evidently was not satisfactory to the Federal Power Commission. The great need, however, in our area is not the development of electrical energy but definite and positive flood control. It is, therefore, to be hoped that the attitude of the Federal Power Commission will not delay prompt action on the part of the Army engineers in carrying out what appears to be the unanimous wish of the States involved and the Federal Government.

In addition to the serious floods in the Connecticut River, great damage has been done in northern Berkshire by flood conditions in the Hoosic River and also in portions of adjoining counties by the overflow of the Westfield River. During the past year some aid has been obtained through the allotment of W. P. A. funds, which have been used in protecting valuable land in the city of Holyoke, in the district I represent, and in the city of Springfield, which is in the district represented by Congressman CLASON, who has actively participated in all efforts to secure adequate flood relief.

Having had occasion to inspect the flood areas of this year in the Middle West, I, as a New Englander, readily realize that the problem of flood control on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers is very much greater in extent than in the area to which I am referring, nevertheless in proportion to size our problems are as important and as pressing to us as those in other sections. It is therefore to be hoped that the day is not far distant when the region I represent in western Massachusetts may have material aid and benefit from the Federal Government in removing the ever-present menace of great damage by floods.

The resolution under consideration is directed to this end. It, therefore, has not only my hearty endorsement, but my sincere expectation that it will hasten the day of greater safety from flood damage in Massachusetts.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know from my observation of the temper of the House today that it will pass this resolution and the bill that it makes in order without any opposition. I think the reason for this state of mind is that everybody recognizes that this is a very important resolution. I would not say that it is a matter that just must be passed, I would not say that we could not get along without it, but at the same time there is no use of having the Government spend millions of dollars getting up reports and making studies on flood conditions and then failing to keep them current. I hold in my hand a very valuable House document, House Document 306, Seventy-fourth Congress, which deals primarily with the Ohio River and its effects in the Mississippi territory. It contains a wealth of information. It has been produced as the result of many days of work by many competent engineers and statisticians, and at a tremendous expense. One could hardly imagine the great amount of classified and accurate information contained therein. These studies and surveys have been made by the Army engineers. Included in this are maps showing locations of proposed improvements and tables of figures as to costs and dimensions that have taken great care by competent experts. What would be the use of our maintaining the finest corps of engineers in the world if we did not provide them with facilities to keep abreast of the times, and authority to carry on the work. For instance, let me point out something that happened in connection with the flood of 1937, the last January flood, in the Ohio Valley, and compare it with the flood of 1936 to show that there is much to consider in flood-control matters besides surveying. The courses and frequency of storms as well as the amount of precipitation must be studied. The flood of 1936 was very disastrous in Pittsburgh. The flood of 1937 did not damage Pittsburgh very much. The flood of 1936 did not damage my home town very much, but the flood of 1937 covered 90 percent of it. Both of these cities are on the Ohio River, within about 280 miles of each other. Why was that? That is because of different atmospheric conditions, different rain conditions. In the flood of 1936 there were certain flood conditions that were not present at all in the flood of 1937. For instance, one town in my district at the upper end of the district did not suffer very much from the flood of 1937, but from that town on down the river the rainfall in the Ohio Valley for about 50 miles on each side of the Ohio River was about 10 inches in 11 days. That is what caused the disastrous flood of 1937—the excessive rainfall in the immediate vicinity of the Ohio River itself.

If the time ever comes when we have the conditions which we had in 1913, conspiring together with the conditions which we had in 1937, then we will have a bigger flood than we have ever thought about. The Army engineers made reports with reference to the floods up to 1937, and they made some predictions, but they have changed their predictions since the 1937 flood very materially. They, like all of us, appreciate the fact that the power and resources of Mother Nature have not yet been measured. They know the uncertainties of the wind and weather, yet they know that experience is the best teacher. The causes of the 1937 flood mean that new studies must be made. We ought to furnish them with the money to make the necessary studies. It would not take anything like the amount that has already been spent. The cost will not be in any measure as great as it has been—not one dollar to twenty, I would say. This bill only provides that we bring these studies up to date. If any of the Members of the House are very much interested in flood control and the flood surveys already made, I would advise you to get this House Document 306 of the Seventy-fourth Congress and 308 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, and you will have the story pretty well told. You will find that they go extensively into conservation. One gentleman here this afternoon raised the question as to whether or not we should go into conservation. It is absolutely necessary that we consider the conservation of water in order to know what to do with it when the flood comes. What do I mean by conservation? I do not mean the conservation of soil or the conservation of water at the headwaters of every little creek in the country, although I think that is necessary, and it fits in admirably with this program. I mean that we should impound this floodwater not only to keep it from doing damage but we should impound it as against the disaster of the dry seasons as well. We have in Ohio now two great examples of what I mean in the Dayton conservancy district and in the Muskingum River project. I mean all kinds of water-conservation studies should be made. For instance, I went to the site of the dam at Grafton, W. Va., about 2 weeks ago. That is one of the dams covered in this report. They are about to finish it now. It is a tremendous undertaking. It is a larger dam than the Norris Dam. One of the chief engineers told me that when they came to lay the foundations of this dam they found this situation—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. They found certain strata of rock that indicated that they were not impervious to water; that subterranean water came from various sources and promised to be a serious hindrance to the construction of that dam. They made certain tests that indicated that the water which was troubling them came by subterranean channels from far back up the river from the place where they were going to construct the dam. They made arrangements to divert that water and it removed all threatening menace to the construction of that dam.

The movement of water underground is a very curious thing. For instance, over in Bellevue, Ohio, in the district represented by my colleague Mr. WHITE, about 3 or 4 weeks ago they had a flood; that is a level country. That city is not on any river at all. That flood inundated that city in some places 4 or 5 feet deep. That city has no river connection at all. The surface water passes off through subterranean channels. The subterranean drainage that carries the water off stopped up. That was an unusual instance, but through the prompt action of Mr. WHITE, the United States Army engineers were right there on the job in a day or two. They soon solved that situation, and in the solution of that situation they showed that the water from that place found itself in a far-away section of Ohio in a very few days. From all indications, it went underneath a topographical divide and found itself emptying into another water system by subterranean passages 100 miles from there. Of course, I do not mean to imply that a special study of subterranean waters is contemplated in this bill, but I only mention this to show that nobody knows everything about the flowage of water. This bill contemplates as its primal objective the control of surface water. It seeks to make such studies as will best enable us to do that for the best interests of all the people. Nobody can do that as adequately and altogether as efficiently as can the Army engineers.

My understanding is that this bill does not contemplate any investigations by any other organizations than this fine, upstanding organization that is superior to any engineering organization in all the world. Am I right about that?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. With that assurance and the assurance that the resolution is going to pass, I yield the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask one or two questions at this time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN]. The gentleman is to be congratulated, in my opinion, for bringing this bill before the House. It is one of the most worthy bills that has been presented during this session of Congress.

I note in the gentleman's statement he said one of the Army engineers made the statement that sufficient data had already been collected upon which to make a report to Congress. My thought about that is this, that before this report is made, additional information should be received. For instance, in my own State we have the Yellowstone River, rising in the Yellowstone National Park and flowing nearly across the State of Montana. It is one of the principal tributaries of the Missouri River and assists materially in causing the destruction in the South about which the gentleman is complaining. The Yellowstone River has been in a measure surveyed, in a cursory way, by the War Department, but additional information is necessary. I am wondering if this bill is broad enough to include a resurvey of the Yellowstone River?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will answer the gentleman by stating that the provisions of the bill are not only broad enough but they direct the thing to be done, if, in the opinion of the Army engineers, it is necessary to comply with this bill in making a complete report.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Then, as I understand the gentleman, that would be a direction to the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of War to make this additional survey and get this additional information?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If they find it necessary in order to submit a plan for the control of floods on the major streams, it is their duty to do it under this resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The gentleman would consider that the Yellowstone River, being one of the two principal tributaries of the Missouri River, ought to be resurveyed, would he not?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I certainly would.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I think the House joint resolution on flood control made in order by the pending rule is a very sensible and sane piece of legislation. You are putting into the hands of the Corps of Army Engineers, under the leadership of General Markham, the privilege and the power of furnishing this Nation with a comprehensive flood-control plan. How much different this is than the plan we had yesterday for the reorganization of the Government departments, when they brought in a bill to give the President six additional Secretaries without letting us know what else is to follow in this reorganization. It would seem to me that before you started to build the foundation of a house you should have a plan for the house, so that you would know exactly what kind of a foundation to construct; you should have a comprehensive plan before you started the project. That is the sensible approach to the proposition, and that is the plan contained in the bill made in order by this rule. I heartily recommend and endorse this proposal—a sane course to pursue.

I call attention, however, to one particular item in the bill having to do with the development of hydroelectric power. If General Markham undertakes to tackle that phase of the matter, he will have his hands full. These power dams, 300 to 500 feet high, are not going to be of any value in flood control. Heretofore we have been greatly concerned with coastal defense, but now you will have to make preparation for dam defense, and by this I mean that not only will General Markham have charge of building these dams but he will have to take care of them by the United States Army if we are not to have some of the greatest floods ever known. Last week I called your attention to an earthquake in Alaska. Day before yesterday there was an earthquake near Vera Cruz, Mexico, which cost the lives of 30 people. You do not know how soon you may have another great earthquake in Charleston, S. C.; you do not know how soon you may have another earthquake in Montana; you do not know how soon you may have another earthquake in California. Should one occur and open up one of these great power dams 6 or 8 inches, or a foot, and let this water rush out of dams, such as the Grand Coulee or Bonneville, on the Columbia River, it would be a catastrophe that would make us all sorry and regretful that they were ever built. Should these dams burst asunder the water would rush down those valleys and annihilate the people living in them. I hope and pray this horror will never happen.

There is a great difference between flood control and the development of hydroelectric power. One is opposite to the other. Let me call your attention to another feature in connection with the necessity of protecting these dams: One of those Russian planes could come across the North Pole and drop a big 5-ton bomb onto the Grand Coulee Dam, break it asunder, and the rushing waters would drown all the people living in that valley in Washington and Oregon; or a military airplane may come over from some other Asiatic or European country. So I warn you now of this other very serious matter of military defense that is inextricably woven into this seven-regional-conservation program. Do not start seven till you finish the two already started, and each one to cost over a billion dollars each.

In trying to develop the President's illusion of putting this country into the power business you will drive everybody else out of the power business but the Government. A Russian program, socialistic. If you adopt this resolution in such form that General Markham will be confined to flood control and not concerned with the building of great power dams to put the Government in the power business all over this country, you will probably get somewhere; but if you are going to develop power out of these dams that you hope to build for flood control, if you insist that General Markham do that, then this resolution might just as well not be passed, it should then be scrapped. A full dam of water is no good for flood control.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the pending resolution makes no departure from but merely brings forward the report that the engineers are required to make under the existing law with respect to power and irrigation.

Mr. RICH. I say to the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control that if you hold this legislation to that one phase, flood control, and can stop Members of Congress from loading this bill up with a lot of unrelated matters, it will be a meritorious bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I want to add my thanks and the thanks of the people of the Fifth Massachusetts District to the chairman of the Flood Control Committee, Mr. WHITTINGTON, the gentleman from Mississippi; and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. McCLELLAN, who introduced this bill, for reporting this measure to the Congress for consideration.

During the flood of 1936 over 3,000 families lost their homes at Lowell, Mass., alone. At that time, had it not been for a gate that was built by Mr. Charles B. Francis, a very able and forward engineer, 86 years ago, when he was director of the locks and canals, the entire city of Lowell would have been under water and a great deal of valuable property destroyed and many lives would have been lost. At the time that engineer built the gate it was known as the Francis Folly. It was considered a visionary, unnecessary thing. It only proves the importance of very expert advice in these matters. Mr. Francis' genius saved Lowell twice. The gate was used once before, years ago, and won for its builder an inscribed silver token of esteem. During the flood of 1936 that gate was watched by everybody in Lowell, because the people knew if it did not hold it would be the end of Lowell for a good many years—but it held, Mr. Speaker. It was a very dramatic thing. Crowds of people gathered about the gate, watching by lantern light as the water crept up to alarming heights on the regular gate until it appeared certain to break. Then, just as that seemed imminent, an employee of the canal company climbed to the roof of the structure and released the guard lock and Francis' Folly performed the service its designer had expected of it when he built it 86 years before. A great shout of thanksgiving went up when the floodwaters began to recede.

You see, Mr. Speaker, how intensely we, the people of Lowell, feel about preventative flood measures. We know that by doing more for us, so far as flood prevention is concerned, you are insuring the safety of Lowell.

Colliers 2 weeks ago spoke of Lowell as being one of the most interesting cities in the entire country. The people there deserve help and I am so grateful you are going to give it to them. The story in Colliers told how Lowell was the first planned industrial town in America and that it might be termed the Detroit of the days before the Civil War. It traced its ups and downs in industrial life and paid tribute to the spirit of New England and to the workers from afar who came to labor in its mills.

These were the people who faced the flood disaster of March 1936 with a bravery and lack of panic that won the admiration of the more fortunate parts of the country. I was tremendously proud of the way the city where I live responded to the crisis. It was the same wartime spirit that dominated America when we faced a world crisis in 1917, but it was mobilized as a peacetime cooperation to help neighbors and friends. There is not praise enough that I can offer the Red Cross for its work in the emergency. Red tape was cut, people were fed, housed, and clothed to relieve actual suffering. Homes were thrown open; churches were placed at the disposal of refugees; doctors and nurses cooperated in long and arduous hours of duty. Women sewers of the W. P. A. arose to the occasion and along with volunteers made the sandbags that saved the city from even worse damage. Some of these women worked from 12 noon until 4:30 the following morning. Telephone operators, the police, and firemen worked without rest or relief. City workers and W. P. A. men remained on the firing line hour after hour without relief and for long periods with no food or a chance to get dry clothing. The Legion and other veteran organizations, of course, were on the job from the first moment of danger. They always are.

I want to give my praise to General Markham, head of the Army engineers, as well as to General Pillsbury, his assistant, who I may say comes from Lowell and graduated at the head of his class from West Point; also Captain Clay, with whom I have had most of my dealings concerning flood control at the War Department; Colonel Lyman at Boston and Captain Casey, of the Boston engineers at Boston.

I also want to pay tribute to the work that the W. P. A. did in Lowell during that flood. Colonel Delaney, of the W. P. A., came to Lowell and worked untiringly. I have criticized the W. P. A. But during that flood the W. P. A. workers came from Lowell, and the other towns in that district as well as from Boston and other Massachusetts cities and they helped save our city, and they helped to alleviate the suffering of the flood victims. I have, therefore, intense gratitude for all of those who helped save Lowell.

Mr. Speaker, I know this resolution will pass and I am delighted to note there is no partisan nor sectional feeling here. Everybody is working for the good of the entire country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 175) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 175, with Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control for bringing out a bill of this kind. It is the one kind of a bill that may in the future prevent us from having to accept some penurious flood bill, such as the last one we passed, which was a bill that could only benefit people who in some way had made a profit out of disaster. It provided that those who had already lost most of their worldly goods could, if they had enough left, pledge it in an endeavor to prevent another catastrophe.

These floods have been like an epidemic of the measles. You stop them in one place and they break out in another. When we appropriate money for flood control or money to regulate or prevent floods, we give a little here and a little there. Maybe it helps and maybe it does not. Then you come to the place where you really want some improvements made that will stop the epidemic of floods and you are met, as we were during the first of this session, with the statement: "Well, you have no comprehensive plan. We must take in the whole country."

I would like to see this bill pass and a comprehensive plan of flood control inaugurated and then see what the excuse will be for not protecting people.

There is one town out in Indiana on the Wabash River that suffered for years from floods and the loss of life and property. It tried to get money, and although there was a survey made over 8 years ago by the War Department of that particular basin and plans approved, the people of that town tried to get the money time after time, but they could not. Finally the local citizens went in, and because the War Department held it was a navigable river, accepted the War Department plan, built their own flood-control works, which protected that town; but during the flood of a year ago the water that they kept away from their own town merely went on down to another town of about 20,000 people, and that town received the full benefit of the flood with consequent loss of life and property.

Maybe if we get a system of comprehensive flood-control plans throughout the whole United States it will prevent these things from happening. My primary interest in this bill is simply to have a plan inaugurated, so that the next time we cannot be met with the excuse that "We cannot give you money because you have not a plan that comprises all of the country." This bill should be passed. It is a method of plugging up the loopholes in our present governmental system of flood-control excuses. It will eliminate one of the excuses for failure to do something about our greatest national disasters. There will be other excuses advanced when this is eliminated, and at future sessions we can perhaps eliminate them one by one; and if the Nation endures long enough we may be able to reach a day when recurrent floods will be taken seriously enough for the Nation to do something more toward flood control than merely make plans, while thousands suffer and hundreds die from the effect of the waters.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the resolution under consideration involves no new policy. It merely utilizes existing agencies and the reports that have been made by the Corps of Engineers, or that may be made hereafter, in the formulation of a national plan for flood control.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would like to complete my statement, then I will be glad to yield.

It is generally conceded that flood control should be national. It has been only in recent years that the Congress of the United States has made provision for flood control.

In 1927 the Congress authorized the Corps of Engineers, as provided by House Document 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, to investigate the navigable rivers and their tributaries in the United States, and to report to the Congress respecting—mark my language—flood control, power, irrigation, and navigation. So that in the 308 reports the Chief of Engineers has submitted a report on the navigable rivers in the United States, and there are more than 200 of them. I read from said House Document 308, and thus quote the language of the law under which reports are made, as to plans:

> General plans for the most effective improvement of such streams for the purposes of navigation and the prosecution of such improvement in combination with the most efficient development of the potential waterpower, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation.

In other words, there has been complete cooperation between the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the Committee on Reclamation, and the Committee on Flood Control, because all reports on navigation have been submitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and all reports which may have been made respecting reclamation have been submitted to the Bureau of Reclamation, while flood-control reports are referred to the Committee on Flood Control.

Therefore, let us disabuse our minds of the belief that there is anything new with respect to power, reclamation, or irrigation in this bill. This bill merely brings forward the existing law.

The gentleman from Massachusetts asked about the reports to be made by the Secretary of Agriculture. These reports are provided for by the existing law. They are not reports on flood control, but are reports on reforestation and soil-erosion prevention, and they supplement and reinforce the reports which are made by the Chief of Engineers on flood-control works.

Mr. Chairman, this resolution was introduced on the 29th day of January 1937, while the great Ohio-Mississippi flood was in progress. It was referred to the War Department and there is a favorable report from the War Department. There is also a favorable report by the Budget. No additional agencies of the Government are to be set up. No additional bodies are to be organized. The Corps of Engineers and the existing agencies in the Department of Agriculture are to be utilized. No additional appropriations are contemplated. The appropriations are authorized under the act of 1936. This resolution, in a word, provides for a report or reports which may be the nucleus or basis of flood-control legislation on a national scale to expand and to enlarge the laws now in force.

Mr. McLEAN and Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois rose.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall yield first to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. There is now pending in the House the bill (H. R. 7863) to create seven authorities of three commissioners each at $10,000 a year. As I read the resolution now before us, its passage would make unnecessary the creation of such authorities at this time, and therefore, anticipating the early adjournment of Congress, further consideration at this session of the bill (H. R. 7863) would be unnecessary on the adoption of the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I reply to the gentleman's question by stating that what we need, in my judgment, is not other agencies and not additional plans, but the coordination and assembly of the plans and reports which have been made by the Chief of Engineers, followed by the adoption of projects for the execution of such plans. We have the plans. It is time to assemble and adopt the plans made by the Chief of Engineers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield further to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. McLEAN. As I understand the gentleman, if we adopt this resolution and coordinate all of the plans and surveys after the report of the engineers is received pursuant to the pending joint resolution (H. J. Res. 175), there will be ample time to consider the bill, which is becoming known as the "Seven sisters of the T. V. A.", with reference to the creation of these various regional projects.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think the gentleman really answers his question by asking it, because under the terms of this resolution, may I emphasize, and I want it thoroughly understood, no new agencies are contemplated and no new appropriations are asked. This resolution contemplates the assembling of the data. The Congress of the United States has appropriated $12,000,000 in order to make plans, studies, and investigations for flood control and for the incidental power and navigation benefits where there is flood control, if there should be any power or navigation, and for the incidental irrigation benefits, if there should be any. This resolution merely provides for the assembling of such plans, primarily for flood control, reporting on navigation as required by said House Document 308, reporting on power as required by House Document 308, and reporting on irrigation as required by said House Document 308, so that the Congress of the United States may have before it the projects and the basis for legislation regarding flood control.

Mr. McLEAN. As I understand the gentleman, the adoption of this resolution will make unnecessary the enactment at this session of the so-called Norris-Rankin seven T. V. A. bills?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The adoption of this resolution will make unnecessary the passage of any other legislation for adequate plans for national flood control, in my judgment.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Would the gentleman be willing to go a little further and say that in his opinion it is unnecessary that we have any new agencies to deal with the subject now under consideration?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think the gentleman understands my view about the matter. I have stated in response to a similar question that if our committee had thought any new agencies were necessary we would have recommended that such new agencies be provided. However, may I emphasize for the third time that we are recommending no new agencies, we are asking only that the existing agencies be utilized in the formulation of plans as recommended by this resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I have absolute faith in the gentleman's knowledge of this subject, or I would not ask this question, but referring back to the survey that has been made by the War Department heretofore with reference to various rivers and streams throughout the country, did that survey have anything to do with reclamation and irrigation?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Let me repeat what I stated a few moments ago. I may best answer the gentleman's question by again reading the existing law. Under Document 308 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, which is familiar to all Members of the House, the Chief of Engineers was required in reporting on navigable streams and their tributaries, in the language of the act, to submit—> general plans for the most effective improvement of such streams for the purposes of navigation and the prosecution of such improvement in combination with the most efficient development of the potential water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation: Provided, That no consideration of the Colorado River and its problems shall be included in the consideration or estimate provided herein.

Under that law the Congress of the United States has appropriated, and the Chief of Engineers has expended, approximately $12,000,000 for plans, studies, and reports. The engineers have submitted to Congress, for whatever disposition Congress may see fit to make of them, reports on practically all the streams in the country. We have assembled in a report which has been submitted to the Committee on Flood Control a comprehensive plan for flood control along the Ohio and the Mississippi Rivers.

The passage of this resolution would enable us, when we come to consider that plan, to have a report for a comprehensive flood-control plan along other rivers besides the Ohio and Mississippi, so that they may be considered in connection with an adequate national flood-control plan.

To answer the gentleman's question further, the Chief of Engineers reports that there is either an irrigation question involved or not. If there is an irrigation question involved, that is left to the Bureau of Reclamation to take up, and the Corps of Engineers has never undertaken to assert any authority along that line.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, in his opinion how long a time will be required to complete the surveys contemplated under this measure.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have already tried to answer that question. I think substantially all the surveys have been made. This bill would provide, as I have stated, for assembling into one report or, if necessary, into several reports which might be made, all the studies that have been made so that the report may be used as the basis of legislation. The studies have been made, the investigations have been made, and there are over 200 reports. This would provide for assembling them and putting them into one report, or in as few as possible, to provide for projects.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Then it would require a comparatively short time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We hope to have it by the next session of Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman states that this is primarily for rivers that have already been surveyed. Would it be possible for a small river that has not been surveyed, but one which frequently has floods with great destruction of property, to come under the program if it is demonstrated there is merit in the case?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think so. I referred to reports on the principal rivers and their tributaries, but in addition to the surveys that have been made, we authorized more than 100 surveys at the last session of the Congress, and the reports are being made. We have authorized in the bill that the House passed a week or 10 days ago some 60 additional surveys. I would say that those rivers would be taken into consideration.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I trust the gentleman does not intend to insist on the committee amendment in section 2 of the bill. The committee amendment changes an authorization to an appropriation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am pleased to have the gentleman ask that question. That is an amendment which was recommended by the Director of the Budget, and he insisted that the amendment be inserted before the Budget approved the bill, and with all due deference to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I believe the Director of the Budget is in order in this case, and I remind the gentleman that under the act of 1936, the Omnibus Flood Control Act, Congress authorized $5,000,000 to be appropriated for surveys by the War Department and $5,000,000 for surveys by the Secretary of Agriculture. This language is intended, and should be so construed, to provide that any surveys or reports made under this resolution shall be made out of money appropriated under those authorizations, and we are not asking for any additional authorization or appropriation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman understands I am very heartily in favor of this legislation?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And I have great regard for the opinion and wishes and recommendations of the Director of the Budget, but I am certain he would not want, and I am certain the distinguished chairman of the committee would not want, to violate the rules of the House. The only purpose, apparently, of the amendment is to make it an appropriation. The section as originally written and as originally introduced in the bill, authorized all the appropriations necessary to carry out the purposes of the act, but with the amendment it is not an authorization but an appropriation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may answer the gentleman by saying that the Director of the Budget recommended the amendment and his intention was to provide that the cost of any surveys that may be made or any plans that may be prepared shall be paid out of appropriations for flood control already made or out of previous authorizations, and we are not asking for any additional money.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is an appropriation——

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is an allocation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And, being an appropriation, is, therefore, subject to a point of order. I would hate to make such a point of order, and I therefore hope the gentleman will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With all due deference to the gentleman, I believe he would be warranted in not making the point of order, because, if he did, it would require an additional appropriation, and, being the watch dog of the Treasury that he is, I am sure he will agree with me. If we can use money already appropriated, we will eliminate any necessity for an additional authorization; but if the gentleman should make a point of order against it, an additional authorization and appropriation would be required.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If we should follow that procedure, we would have dozens of bills in here making appropriations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute to say further that if we follow this procedure we will follow good procedure, because we are not asking that the appropriations already made or authorized be used for an unrelated purpose. They were made for the very thing that this bill contemplates, and we merely ask that they be used for the purposes provided in this bill. This is not like taking funds authorized for one purpose and devoting such funds to a different purpose.

Let me say in conclusion—and I wish I had more time—it is for the gentleman to decide whether he makes the point of order or not; but let me say, as I sum up, this bill is the response of the Congress of the United States to the national demand for a policy of flood control. This will provide for assembling plans that are to be the basis and foundation of legislation for national flood control. It involves no change and merely expands the existing policy, and I trust it will be adopted by the House. [Applause.]

Under leave to revise and extend my remarks, I have on numerous occasions during the present session of the Congress discussed the policy and program for national flood control. My views are well known. I have delivered a number of addresses with respect to the proper policy of flood control. Among the addresses that I have delivered are speeches that are found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 12, 1937, April 26, 1937, May 19,1937, June 1, 1937, and July 19, 1937.

On June 22, 1936, the Congress adopted the omnibus or Copeland Flood Control Act. It authorized the expenditure of some $300,000,000 for flood control. A criticism of that act is that partial projects on many streams are authorized; complete flood control on all of the streams is not provided for. That bill was intended to provide for works that would be a part of a larger plan. None of the works authorized will be lost.

On April 6, 1937, the Chief of Engineers submitted a comprehensive report for flood control along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. Reservoirs were recommended along a number of the tributaries of both of these rivers. Flood control will not be complete, however, until these reservoirs have been followed by other adequate flood-control works. In many cases along the tributaries levees are necessary. Moreover, flood-control works are necessary on other streams and navigable rivers. The House has passed partial legislation for flood control in the Ohio River Basin and the bill is now pending in the Senate. At the time the bill was passed on July 19, 1937, it was stated that the major program was being continued until the next session of the Congress.

The resolution under consideration would provide for the assembling of reports and data heretofore or hereafter made under authorizations of Congress, so that the Committee on Flood Control would have before it definite projects as the basis for legislation for flood control not only on the Ohio River and its tributaries, the Mississippi River and its tributaries, but on the other navigable rivers and their tributaries of the United States where the flood-control problem is acute.

Congress has not been negligent in the matter of flood control. Provisions have been made for studies on all of the principal streams in the United States. The Corps of Engineers are more familiar with flood-control works and are the best-informed and best-equipped engineers in this or any other country. They have submitted recommendations; they have submitted reports; they have advised Congress respecting navigation, the needs of irrigation, and the development of power in all reports covering plans for flood control.

I advocate the conservation of our national resources. I advocate that all power that may be developed at any dams constructed for flood control, where the development of power is practicable, should be utilized for the benefit of the consumers of the country. I am anxious for the Federal Government to retain the supervision and control of power for the benefit of the people; but we are dealing primarily with flood control. There is much misunderstanding with respect to power in flood-control dams. Reservoirs for flood control and reservoirs for power are generally incompatible. There are notable exceptions. These exceptions obtain along the Tennessee River and along the Columbia River, the Red River, and the White River. I emphasize that there is but one Tennessee River east of the Mississippi River. The resolution deals primarily with flood control. The power resources of the Nation are protected in the pending resolution. Under the act of 1936 provision is made, where practicable, for the construction of penstocks in all dams built for flood control.

We hear much about planning and planning agencies. Much of the planning and many of the agencies would be duplications. I can understand that the Chief Executive would like to be fully advised respecting the conflicting recommendations submitted by the various executive departments of the Government but in national flood control we have adequate plans. The Corps of Engineers are the best equipped flood-control engineers in the world. They are efficient; they are dependable; they have utilized the services of the best available civilian engineers in the preparation of reports. The establishment of additional agencies for flood control would result in delay.

It would be difficult to improve upon the set-up in the Corps of Engineers. There is a district engineer in practically every State. He reports to the division engineer. The plans are originated in the field. The division engineer reports to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. The Chief of Engineers has the final say. There must be an executive head in both planning and execution. We have adequate plans, we have adequate agencies for national flood control. The need is not for other agencies, but for the review and for the assembling of plans that have been made and of studies that have been conducted so that reports may be submitted to Congress, giving projects for flood control on all of the streams in the United States where the flood-control problem is acute so that adequate flood-control legislation may be adopted.

The resolution is short and easily understood. It authorizes the Secretary of War to submit a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive plan and program for the control of floods on all of the rivers in the United States and their principal tributaries. The Chief of Engineers is to do the work. All possible solutions of the problem have been and will be explored. The plans and the reports will set forth the projects and the costs thereof. Consideration will be given to projects now under consideration and heretofore authorized.

No additional authorization is contemplated. The resolution provides for no additional appropriation. The Secretary of War pointed out in his report, which is contained in the report of the House Committee on Flood Control, that the expenses in preparing the plans are to be made from general appropriations for flood control.

I have already pointed out that the Chief of Engineers in reporting for flood control on all rivers in the United States embraces reports on navigation, power, and irrigation. The word "reclamation" in the pending resolution is synonymous with the word "irrigation" in House Document 308.

On June 22, 1936, Congress, in adopting a policy of national flood control, provided that the Chief of Engineers should formulate the projects for flood control. These projects are to be constructed along the streams. Soil conservation and reforestation have a place in the picture. The act provided for the first time that soil-conservation and soil-erosion studies and reports should be made by the Department of Agriculture. The pending resolution utilizes the services of both the War Department and the Department of Agriculture in the formulation of plans that are to be the basis of legislation.

We have adequate plans; we have adequate agencies. We have adopted a sound policy. The program is to enlarge and expand the policy adopted and to provide for the execution of plans that have been made. It is believed that reports can be submitted so that Congress, at the next session, may pass adequate legislation for flood control on all of the principal rivers and their tributaries in the United States.

I may say that the Senate has already passed Senate Joint Resolution 57 in the exact language of the original resolution, without the amendments of the Flood Control Committee of the House. In the event the bill is adopted by the House, it is my purpose to ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield himself an additional minute in order that I may ask him a question?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am sorry, but I have other Members that I have promised to yield to.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes. This bill has been drawn to meet the demands of the Nation with reference to a comprehensive plan of flood control. It places the coordination, the working out of proper flood-control measures on all of the major streams of the United States in the hands of the Board of Engineers of the United States Army. This is where the problem should rest. The Board of Engineers of the United States Army, in my opinion, is undoubtedly one of the most skillful, one of the ablest, one of the most conscientious organizations that exists in the entire world. The data they collect and the work that they carry out have set a standard amongst the nations of the earth with reference to large engineering projects, flood-control measures, the development of navigation of streams, and in all other subjects which they undertake to handle. No new agency under this bill is created. The bill places in the hands of the Board of Engineers the opportunity to compile and work out the data that have been connected over many years, and to provide a flood-control program that will give this Nation a scientific and economic basis on which to proceed. The bill under consideration should receive the support of every Member of this House.

I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure to support this House joint resolution. I compliment the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] who has consistently worked to secure consideration of this bill, and the chairman of the Flood Control Committee for his efforts in bringing it on the floor of the House. We have tried to bring in a bill that would not have opposition, and that would call for a comprehensive report on all of the major streams of the United States. It is a matter of common knowledge that the Army engineers have control of the major streams of the United States, for flood control, that the Department of Agriculture has control of the watersheds of this Nation. We want to coordinate these two agencies in getting reports on these streams and, as was stated when we had the last bill before the House, we expect to begin hearings in January upon comprehensive flood-control legislation. We need this information, Congress needs it, the country needs it, and I hope we can have it assembled between now and next January. We need legislation that will deal with problems that affect every section of the United States.

This does not deal merely with the lower Mississippi Valley, but it will deal with all of the major streams of the country. Testimony was presented to our committe that we have been wasting our land resources, that we have been wasting our water resources. Dr. Hugh Bennett told us that 100,000,000 acres of our farm lands are already destroyed and past redemption, that 125,000,000 acres additional are seriously impaired, and that 100,000,000 acres more are being seriously threatened by water-erosion damage. We need this information. With this information we should begin a program of water and soil conservation. Everyone has read of the dust storms that we have had in the Middle West. In one dust storm, May 11, 1934, it is estimated 300,000,000 tons of soil of fertile top soil actually blew out of one section of several States of the United States. Every year we have 400,000,000 tons of soil floating into the Gulf of Mexico through the Mississippi Valley. I think it is important that we get legislation that will have in mind the control of the water flow at its source. It seems to me it is high time and I assure you gentlemen that it is a pleasure to endorse this legislation today. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] will not feel that it is necessary to make the point of order against the amendment authorizing the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Yes. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is a matter of regret that it is necessary to make the point of order, but I am certain the gentleman from Kansas favors observance of the rules of the House, which do not permit an appropriation on a bill of this type.

Mr. CARLSON. I appreciate the gentleman's position in the matter. I merely want to state that the committee had in mind when this was brought in, and we had it from the Director of the Budget, to use funds already allocated. No member of the committee thought we would have to ask for additional funds, but that we could use funds already appropriated and allocated for this work.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Furthermore, we have often passed legislation that is subject to a point of order, because it is for the good of the country.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We can secure the same result by following the recognized rules of procedure, because a deficiency appropriation bill will be reported to the House very shortly, and we could very properly include in it an appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. McCLELLAN. What would be the advantage of asking for a deficiency appropriation if the money is already appropriated? Would it not be better policy to use that already authorized?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is not already appropriated for this purpose. If it were already appropriated for this purpose there would be no necessity for offering this amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does not the gentleman concede the money already appropriated is for the purpose of making surveys and assembling data?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. None of the money to which the gentleman refers could be spent for the purposes set out in this bill as drawn unless and until appropriated by further legislation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This bill only directs the War Department to carry on what it is already doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kansas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CARLSON. I appreciate very much that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is an authority on parliamentary law, and I have no doubt his position is absolutely correct, but as a matter of policy it seems to me that on this occasion and in this situation these funds are already appropriated or authorized or allocated to various departments of the Government—the Army engineers and the United States Department of Agriculture—and therefore this legislation was brought in merely with the view of having those agencies give the report which they are authorized already to do. I sincerely hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like, at this time, to take a few minutes to review the activities of the Flood Control Committee in bringing to the attention of the House the fact that this committee has not been derelict in its duty in trying to bring about complete flood control in this Nation.

The 1936 act was the first that brought the subject of flood control within the realm of Federal duty. Before that we had attempted flood control on the lower Mississippi River. Under the 1936 act the Federal Government was put in the business of flood control in the following language, and this is the declaration of policy on which all flood-control legislation is based:

> It is hereby recognized that destructive floods upon the rivers of the United States, upsetting orderly processes and causing loss of life and property, including the erosion of lands, and impairing and obstructing navigation, highways, railroads, and other channels of commerce between the States, constitute a menace to national welfare; that it is the sense of Congress that flood control of navigable waters or their tributaries is a proper activity of the Federal Government in cooperation with States and their political subdivisions and localities thereof; that investigations and improvements of rivers and other waterways including watersheds thereof for flood-control purposes are in the interest of the general welfare; that the Federal Government should improve or participate in the improvement of navigable waters or their tributaries including watersheds thereof for flood-control purposes—

And this is the important language in this bill that we adopted in 1936—

> if the benefits to whomsoever they may accrue are in excess of the estimated costs, and if the lives and social security of people are otherwise adversely affected.

In other words, in 1936 this Congress said that whenever a project can be proved economical, that the benefits to whomsoever they may accrue, whether it is the people immediately below a dam or 500 miles below, then the Federal Government shall pay the cost of constructing this project when the State or other local agencies furnish the right-of-way. It was not only a question of flood control that was taken up in this bill. In section 2 this bill says:

> Federal investigations of watersheds and measures for run-off and waterflow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on watersheds shall be under the jurisdiction of and shall be prosecuted by the Department of Agriculture under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Under this mandate, under this declaration of policy, the Army engineers and the Department of Agriculture have started on this immense problem of how to protect the lands of the United States and the people of the United States from an estimated annual damage in property of almost a billion dollars, as well as many lives. We realize that $310,000,000 worth of projects authorized in the original bill do not solve the entire problem. We recognized that fact when recently the House passed an act permitting the Ohio Valley to build flood walls to protect those cities that have recently been ravaged by floods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. When we held hearings on the flood problem in the Ohio Valley, the Flood Control Committee called in representatives from all the affected departments of Government. We questioned the representatives of the Department of Agriculture and asked them how the Department of Agriculture was getting along in carrying out these surveys in conjunction with the War Department and the Army engineers. The Soil Conservation Bureau, the Weather Bureau, and the Department of Agriculture all testified they were working in perfect harmony. They are, then, interested not in just the building of a dam, but under the present bill the Department of Agriculture is making a survey looking toward the permanent correction of the erosion that would fill up the dam if such a policy were not followed.

What does the Flood Control Committee ask today? It asks that the Army engineers, in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture, these two agencies that we recognized under the act of 1936, should assemble and coordinate the facts they already have in their possession, most of them facts that have cost the Government $12,000,000 to accumulate, for a national program of flood control, and report those facts in a comprehensive program to the Congress. That is all your authorization asks.

I understand that some of the friends of reclamation have objected to the word "reclamation" in the bill. No investigations for reclamation have ever been made by the War Department. All those investigations have been made by the Bureau of Reclamation. If there is any question in the mind of those friends of reclamation that this is an infringement upon that Bureau, I feel the committee will accept an amendment which provides that those investigations shall be made by the Bureau of Reclamation. The only reason that reclamation was included in this flood-control bill was due to the fact that in some cases, where flood-control dams are constructed at the additional cost of raising the dam to provide greater capacity, it would be possible to develop also an irrigation project; and I thought it would be advisable in my western plains country to have information in the report showing whether, in addition to flood control, it would be possible in some instances to raise the height of the dam and bring some of that land back under irrigation.

I had the privilege and pleasure of talking with the President of the United States today on the subject of regrassing, on the subject of bringing that Great Plains area back to grass. The Department of Agriculture is cooperating and has recommended grass experiments to breed grasses so that when the purchase of marginal lands is undertaken under the farm tenancy bill which authorizes the expenditure of $50,000,000 the Government will realize and know the basic facts, so that they can proceed intelligently with regrassing.

The information gained from grass-breeding experiments will be of immeasurable benefit in properly controlling erosion in the drainage basins back of flood-control dams and together with tree planting should solve the problem of these dams silting full due to improper land usage in drainage areas back of dams impounding water.

In this brief time I have attempted to show the committee that the Flood Control Committee under the able leadership of our chairman, Mr. WHITTINGTON, have laid the foundation for a national flood-control policy embracing every angle including the intelligent use of the water and proper conservation of the soil through reforestation and regrassing.

To quote from the bill introduced by my able colleague from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN]:

> The report shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel reflections, reservoirs, and utilization of water resources through the building of power dams or a combination of power, reclamation, conservation, and flood-control dams, and all works necessary for an effective soil and water conservation for all such rivers and their watersheds.

So you see, the purposes of the bill today is to get a report embracing all the angles of flood control before the Congress so at the next session this body may be presented with adequate legislation authorizing a great national program of flood control and a proper utilization of our natural resources.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN].

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that very little opposition to this resolution has manifested itself here this afternoon. I believe we all recognize that the time has come when we must approach this serious problem in a serious way. We all want flood control, but we want flood control in the right way; and I believe that this resolution, when its provisions are carried out and we get the information it provides for, will result in our having a comprehensive, correlated plan which will really give the country adequate flood control.

I take this occasion, Mr. Chairman, to compliment the chairman of the Flood Control Committee for his vision in bringing to the floor of the House this resolution providing for a Nation-wide flood-control plan. I think we ought also to give due credit to the efforts of the author of this bill, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], who has worked incessantly ever since he has been a member of this committee to bring this kind of legislation to the floor of the House in order that we might deal with this subject in a national way. The trouble with our flood-control efforts in the past has been that they have been more or less patchwork in character. We have sponsored and provided money for projects without any relationship to any other project or to different sections of the country—a haphazard piece of work, of course, which is unsatisfactory. But this resolution provides for a study of this question by the Army engineers and the Secretary of Agriculture and directs them to take into consideration every phase of the flood-control problem, so that they can bring to Congress a coordinated, connected plan which will deal with this problem throughout the country on a national basis, taking into consideration not only streams upon which surveys have been made, but providing for additional surveys. Consequently, when our Army engineers consider the whole subject of flood control throughout the country, instead of one particular locality, Congress can deal with it in an intelligent, effective manner. I believe we have all come to realize that flood control is a national problem and one of the most serious problems facing this Government at this time.

I shall not take much of your time reviewing the results of recurring floods and the disasters that have followed in their wake in recent years. Suffice it to say that they have been most disastrous. I attended a flood-control meeting at Pittsburgh the other evening and saw at first hand the havoc wrought in that city. We took a drive over the Golden Triangle and were shown the flood heights on the buildings in that great commercial city. Heretofore we have thought of Pittsburgh and a flooded Pittsburgh as something independent from other communities. Here the Allegheny and Monongahela come together to form the Ohio River. One of these streams finds its source in the State of New York. New York has something to do with the floods at Pittsburgh, and New York, my friends, has something to do with the floods at Cairo down on the lower Mississippi River where I live. So we must treat this problem as one which not only affects Cincinnati or Louisville, or Cairo, or Pittsburgh, but we must treat it as a national problem, because the waters from New York help to flood my section in southeast Missouri. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, first may I say that I, like every other Member in this Chamber, am greatly in favor of this legislation. The basic reason I favor it is because it seems to me to be a constructive forward step along the path which we must take toward effective coordinated action on flood control, soil erosion, reforestation, the development of power where it is practical, and all the rest of the problems that go together in one national problem of conservation and development of our natural resources. This is the reason I am for this bill.

I may say further, however, that my support of this bill certainly does not lead me for one moment to relax my effort to do everything possible to promote the passage of the bills to create the seven regional authorities in this Nation. It seems to me that both these things go together. I do not concede that when that bill (for the regional authorities) is passed it will mean that we no longer need the kind of information to be developed under the pending bill, for Congress will need this kind of information more then than it needs it now, if that is possible.

Our experience with the T. V. A. does not lead us to the conclusion that Congress is going to wash its hands of the splendid constructive work to be done by similar agencies. Congress must continue to legislate and to give guidance to these authorities after they are set up.

I believe we can take this for our principle that the job of Congress is to see to it that every dollar for flood control or any other purpose shall be spent to the best possible advantage for the people of America, so that the greatest possible benefit from any possible source may be derived out of the expenditure of that dollar. If we take that attitude, then those of us who believe in a great national system of power development would be foolish to say that every dam that is built shall be a power dam. And let me say with greatest emphasis that it is equally foolish for the enemies of public power to say that no dam shall be built except irrigation or flood-control dams or dams built by private power interest. There are many suitable locations for multiple-purpose dams in the Nation. At these locations multiple-purpose dams should be built, otherwise we are wasting money. Every remaining power site in this Nation should be saved for all the people by public power development. And I should like to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that his hypothetical Russian bomb would hurt no more people if it dropped on a dam owned by a public power development than it would if the bomb were dropped on a dam owned by a private power company. And he knows that if the Government does not build high dams at truly suitable power sites, the Power Trust will do so.

If this development is not done in a coordinated, sane fashion, on the basis of such reports as I am confident we will get under this bill from the Army engineers and the Department of Agriculture, and if we do not make every effort to make this a well-rounded development and get as much benefit from all of our national resources of wealth as we can, we will not have done our job. For these reasons I am supporting this bill.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Does not the gentleman believe it would be better to investigate not only flood control and power, but navigation, erosion, and reforestation as contained in the plan region bill than to take them up piecemeal, as this bill provides.

Mr. VOORHIS. I will answer that by saying that, as I believe the gentleman knows, I am very strongly in favor of the bill now before his committee to create the seven regional planning and conservation authorities. But I do not believe this bill is in conflict with that principle. I believe this bill will give certainly a large part of the information which we need. Much of the information which will be received in connection with this resolution is information which is already very largely available and only needs assembling and putting together into a coordinated report. Whatever we do in the future, certainly we want to have all the information that is available to us from the Corps of Engineers. Furthermore, these gentlemen who have argued that by the passage of the bill now before us we will make unnecessary the passage of the seven-authorities bill are, I believe, gentlemen who would be against the seven-authorities bill anyway. So I am not much influenced by their argument.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. In support of the gentleman's statement that much of the information is available, in the report it states:

> The surveys undertaken by the War Department under the provisions of House Document 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, have made much of the basic data necessary for the formulation of this plan available.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN] that this is piecemeal legislation. In all the 20 years I have been a Member of this body I am frank to say this is the first intelligent, constructive piece of flood-control legislation we have had before us. [Applause.] I want to take this occasion to commend the author, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], on this bill. In the comparatively short time that the gentleman from Arkansas has been a Member of this body he has gained prominence as an effective worker that is out of all proportion to his length of service. Mr. MCCLELLAN has taken a most active part on all matters pertaining to his great State. May I say further that he has already written his name high on the scroll of those who work in season and out of season for his district, State, and country. Heretofore we have had piecemeal, patchwork flood-control legislation. It has fallen to the gentleman's lot to write a most constructive measure that will help all areas visited by floods in the past.

If I read the language of this resolution correctly, it proposes to coordinate the flood control of this country into one comprehensive program. If I am wrong, I wish that some Member of the House would set me right.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I cannot yield now. I do not think the gentleman from California should attempt to mislead the membership of the House by endeavoring to create the impression that this is piecemeal legislation. In fact, just the opposite is true and it would be a tragedy if the House failed to act upon this legislation at the present time.

Mr. VOORHIS. To which gentleman from California did the gentleman refer?

Mr. KNUTSON. I referred to Mr. COLDEN.

Too long have wide areas of our country been visited by devastating floods that have inflicted property damages that total billions of dollars, not to mention the tragic loss of life. To the gentleman from Arkansas and his colleagues of the committee must go the credit for finding a solution for this great problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, were it not for the river hereinafter specified, I would not take up the time speaking to the members of the committee about this bill, because I think everybody is for it. Nothing can be said too complimentary to the author of the bill and the Flood Control Committee for bringing this bill before the House. It is the most needed legislation we can enact during this session or any other session of Congress. My only purpose in speaking to the Members of the House at this time is to say that I am intensely interested in seeing the Yellowstone River resurveyed with the idea of establishing dams that will not only serve for flood-control purposes but will likewise serve for irrigation and reclamation purposes.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the major streams of the United States. I think it is one of the largest, if not the largest, tributaries to the Missouri River and contributes very considerably to the destruction of lands in the lower part of the United States in floodwater times. I want to ask the distinguished chairman of the Flood Control Committee about the same question I asked my distinguished colleague from Arkansas, because I think the distinguished chairman of the Flood Control Committee is familiar with the Yellowstone River. I think he is familiar with the fact that it rises on top of the mountains in the Yellowstone National Park, flows for a distance of approximately 650 miles in a northeasterly direction, where it empties into the Missouri River at Buford, N. Dak. It has a heavy grade or fall and because of swiftness of the stream carries perhaps the greatest volume of water carried by any stream of its physical size in the United States.

Winter and spring wheat are generally grown along the Yellowstone River bottom and bench lands, as well as forage crops, all dependent upon irrigation. Hundreds of thousands of acres of land could be irrigated by the use of the waters of the Yellowstone River that now serve no purpose other than destruction in floodtimes. In excess of 25 projects, involving over 400,000 acres of undeveloped land, have already been tentatively selected as representing economic and reimbursable possibilities for development. It is certainly my hope and ambition to see that the Federal Government located the proper site or sites on this great stream of water for the construction of storage dams, with the end in view of reclaiming the vast territory that is now without value to mankind.

A survey was made of this river by the War Department with the principal end in view of determining whether or not it would justify expenditures for improvements for navigation purposes. A negative finding was made. It was likewise determined that, so far as power purposes were concerned, at that time there was no need for the further development of power. Of course, the writer of the report did not take into consideration the fact that a great outlet for the marketing of power could or would later be found in the rural sections of that great territory. People living upon farms should have the use of electricity as well as those living in the urban centers. A mighty lot of the drudgery of the farm wife would be obviated by the use of electrical energy.

My thought is that the river would justify the expenditure of money upon the theory of flood control by the Federal Government. As has been well stated on the floor of the House, in order to adequately and effectively control the floodwaters of these United States, regard must be had to control the waters from the source on.

To sum up, the Federal Government would be amply justified in making such improvements by way of dams and other means to control the waters of the Yellowstone River for irrigation and reclamation, flood control, and power purposes.

May I ask the distinguished gentleman if, in his opinion, it should not be resurveyed, not only with the idea of flood control but likewise with the idea in view of reclamation, irrigation, and power purposes?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may answer the gentleman by saying I do not recall the previous survey of that river. There are many hundreds of rivers in the United States. Under existing law, if an additional survey or study is necessary, there is ample provision for that survey or study being made.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] the balance of the time.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to subscribe to this resolution and endorse its passage. In making this statement I am satisfied that I give expression to the thought, the desire, and the will of the Members of the minority.

We favor the passage of this joint resolution for three reasons. The first is that it is a logical step in any program for the conservation of our natural resources, flood control, and hydroelectric development. Secondly, it is in accord with the President's program, which contemplates a coordination and consolidation and the reduction in number of Government agencies. The third reason is that it will hasten the adjournment of Congress, because it will make unnecessary the enactment of the bill, H. R. 7863, which contemplates the creation of seven regional bodies, similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority, to do the same thing, and provides that each of these seven authorities shall consist of three commissioners in each district at a salary of $10,000 a year each, with incidental expenses, all of which will be saved by the passage of this resolution.

This resolution is in accord with what has been contended for ever since the program of the T. V. A. was projected, that is, keeping the development of our natural resources within the control and direction of Congress, where it belongs, and insisting that the creatures of Congress should respect its authority.

This resolution contemplates a comprehensive study by the Corps of Engineers. That is wise. There is no need to create new agencies. The Army engineers have proven their ability to guide and direct the conservation of our natural resources. The Corps of Engineers has the confidence of the American people. It has been studying the conservation of our natural resources since the beginning of the Government. It has always been called upon when any great public work has been contemplated by the Government. When Theodore Roosevelt proposed the construction of the Panama Canal, he called upon the Corps of Engineers because of the confidence of the American people and himself in its competency and the Panama Canal stands as one of the many monuments to the efficiency of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. Many other examples could be cited.

This resolution shows the foresight and the statesmanship of the gentlemen who constitute the Committee on Flood Control. By it there is provided a program which will keep the conservation and development of our natural resources and the control of our floods within the direction and guidance of the Congress. The amount to be spent will be under its control, and in line with a program of which the people of the country will be informed and will understand. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEMUTH] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Chairman, I add my support to this joint resolution introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], because I believe it is the only way of getting a coordinated and integrated program and plan for solving the flood menace which threatens the entire United States. We members of the Flood Control Committee believe it is the only way of intelligently attacking and solving the problem. After getting this information and coordinating it, we can then reach a proper perspective on the problem as it applies to the United States.

We all know, or at least I will admit, that as individuals the flood-control projects in our own districts are outstanding in our minds. By the passage of this resolution, instead of focusing attention on any particular point, we can obtain a proper perspective of the entire United States and its problems in regard to flood control.

It is believed that to undertake the construction of a coordinated system of flood-control works to develop, conserve, and make the best use of our natural resources, a coordinated system adequately and wisely planned should be adopted, taking into consideration projects now in process of construction and heretofore authorized. It is the object and purpose of this resolution to authorize and direct the War Department, through its Corps of Engineers and the Department of Agriculture, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, to assemble such data, make such surveys, and studies as may be required to permit these Departments to prepare and submit to Congress a complete, comprehensive, coordinated plan for the control and prevention of floods on all major streams and at the same time provide for the maximum of benefits in the utilization of the dams constructed in such system in the generating of electric power, for reclamation and irrigation purposes, and in the retardation of water flow so as to prevent soil erosion.

If we are to have a system of flood-control projects that will give satisfactory results in the removal of this great menace to human lives and property, it will be necessary to incur expenditures which will be more than justified if we plan and execute the projects with regard to their economic uses and benefits for flood control and other purposes.

The enactment of this resolution will result in the highest and most competent authorities submitting to Congress a plan of projects recommended for construction to effect the results desired, thereby permitting Congress to legislate wisely on this important subject so as to obtain the greatest results and benefits from the expense that will be incurred.

Most of the information necessary for formulating such a plan and making the reports called for by this resolution has already been assembled. Therefore, I urge the passage of this resolution.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to see a resolution before the House on which there is unanimity of opinion. There is one of the very few bills that have come before this body on which we all seem to be agreed, and this is because Congress has become flood-control-minded. The Congress has realized that flood control is a matter for the Nation as a whole and not for the individual States and communities.

Ordinarily, when a flood control bill comes before the House we are accused of logrolling. Each section of the country is desirous of getting some advantage over another section of the country. Each section wants to have its projects put first. I am happy to see today that we are all agreed on this measure, which merely provides for a comprehensive plan for national flood control.

We have not said much about the advantage of soil conservation, but, as was stated by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] every year millions of tons of topsoil are washed into the sea and into the Gulf of Mexico, and constitute a total loss. I believe that the plan we now have before us shows we are beginning to realize that flood control should not be started at the bottom, that it should not be commenced on the lower reaches of major streams, but that flood control should be started on the tributaries. In my own State and in my own district the tributaries of the Arkansas River overflow, almost every year and sometimes four or five times a year, and sweep away the work of the farmers and destroy their crops. This occurs not only in Arkansas but is a common experience to all of us. I am glad to see we are now conscious of the fact that flood control should be considered from the standpoint of the tributaries and run-off, water-flow retardation, and soil erosion.

A national program is essential because we do not know from year to year from whence the blow will come. The great flood of 1927, that superflood which swept down the Mississippi River, came out of the Arkansas River, so the engineers tell us. It happened that the Ohio River was quiet that year. This year the great flood which menaced the Middle West came out of the Ohio, but it happened that the Arkansas and its tributaries were fairly quiet. If we had had a flood in the Arkansas and at the same time floods in the Ohio and Missouri Rivers, a combined flood of all these great rivers, the great valley of the lower Mississippi would have been devastated as it has never been devastated before.

The Army engineers stated the flood of 1927 was a superflood, which would not occur again in a hundred years, yet, in less than 10 years, the great flood of 1937 came along, and they said again that it was a superflood and might not come again.

We must approach this matter from a national viewpoint, we must lay out a Nation-wide plan, and we should coordinate flood-control projects over the country in an endeavor to do the most good in the various watersheds with the least expenditure of funds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I represent the district of Pennsylvania in which is located the city of Johnstown, you can all readily understand my desire that this bill be passed. The only way to do a big job is to do it in a big way and in the right way. May I compliment the Committee on Flood Control and its distinguished chairman on the manner in which they have gone about the consideration of this program.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wanted time only for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control two questions.

First, is a short river which is being navigated for only 10 or 15 miles considered a major stream?

Second, where the Army engineers have already recommended against a survey with respect to flood control on that stream, will such a stream be covered by this bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would answer the gentleman's question by saying that whether a river is navigable, legally or in fact, would be a question of fact.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Six-hundred-ton boats operate on this river at the present time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would imagine, then, it would be navigable in fact.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to submit to Congress with reasonable expedition a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States and their principal tributaries. The Chief of Army Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, is authorized and directed to conduct necessary surveys, assemble information, and prepare such a comprehensive plan, which shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and all works necessary for an effective and adequate system of flood control for all such rivers. Such plan and the report or reports to Congress shall list specific projects and set forth estimates of cost (including the expense of acquiring land and easements and payment of property damage) of carrying out the projects. Such plan and report or reports shall take into consideration flood-control projects now under construction or heretofore authorized by acts of Congress.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "States", insert "and its Territories."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "projects", insert a comma and the following: "and shall set forth the values of such projects for hydroelectric development and other conservation purposes. And the appropriate bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination, survey, and report or reports, to be made for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds of said waterways, with a view to controlling said floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "Congress", insert a comma and the following: "and shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and utilization of water resources through the building of power dams or a combination of power, reclamation, conservation, and flood-control dams, and all works necessary for an effective soil and water conservation for all such rivers and their watersheds."

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FERGUSON: On page 3, after line 3, insert:

"Any plans or reports which include or recommend projects for reclamation shall be prepared in conjunction with the Department of the Interior."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I come from a city which has the Mississippi River running in front of it for its entire length of over 25 miles, the mouth of the Missouri is a few miles above, but the river would probably have to rise 50 feet more than it has ever risen in order to do any serious damage to my city. Of course, we have some high water in certain places but it is minor in comparison to the damage others have suffered.

However, I have been deeply interested in flood control and I have voted for practically every flood-control measure that has been before the House since I came here in the Sixty-ninth Congress.

One of the first votes I was asked to cast in this House was on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Sears. It was offered to a flood-control bill and Mr. Sears sought to have included in that bill a provision that the Army engineers should investigate and could recommend to the Congress the construction of reservoirs to impound water during periods of high water. I do not think I am in error when I say that this amendment would have been adopted if Members from the other side of the Capitol had not come over here and influenced Members of the House. An effort was made to have me vote against that amendment but I refused to do so. I thought then and I have always advocated since, the construction of dams to hold back floodwaters.

I came across the country on the first Pennsylvania train that was opened after the terrible floods of 1913, which did so much damage in Ohio, at Dayton, Columbus, and other places. I really had no idea that water could be so destructive. The damage was tremendous. Industries out of commission for weeks. We came through on a temporary track. Transportation was paralyzed. Some years later I was driving across the country and I passed over two dams. I made inquiry and found that five dams had been constructed in the State of Ohio for the purpose of storing water during high-water periods. Not power dams—flood-control dams. Since the five dams have been constructed they have not had any damage in any of those large cities, and there has been plenty of high water almost yearly. They simply close the gates, hold the water back and let out the water during low-water periods.

I am not talking now about hydroelectric projects, I am simply talking about the construction of dams to hold the water back during flood periods.

Down in southeastern Missouri water rushes on our people when rivers get out of their banks. The crops in that section justify the statement there is no better farm land. Wheat, corn, melons, and so forth. Some of you gentlemen from the South should see the cotton grown in that section. There are many large communities; and how they have suffered from floodwaters.

Time and again I have received telegrams around Christmas saying that people have been forced out of their homes and off their farms. If the Government will construct dams on some of the rivers in Missouri to hold back the water during the high-water period, I think we can save our people in southeast Missouri. I say Government because the Government says the rivers belong to the Government. Therefore, if the Government assumes control as it does it is the duty of the Government to prevent that which it controls getting out of control. We have declared this is a national problem, and it is a national problem.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I was just about to refer to the gentleman and his activities. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Overton bill carries provision for a reservoir on the St. Francis River, and that the recent appropriations made by the House make available the necessary funds to begin immediate construction of that reservoir which we think will impound the waters coming off the Ozark watershed and save the St. Francis Valley from the floods the gentleman refers to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I voted for the bill the gentleman refers to, and I thank the gentleman for bringing that out.

I want to say further, and I think every member of the Flood Control Committee will bear me out, that my colleague from my own State [Mr. ZIMMERMAN] has done as much toward creating sentiment for the construction of reservoirs as any other Member of the House. I recall when the gentleman came here there was an opportunity to get him an assignment on one of the big committees, but he insisted that he wanted one assignment first, and that was on the Committee on Flood Control because his people were so deeply interested in the matter. He was placed on that committee, and we all know how hard he has labored since that time; the results he has obtained justified his efforts, and, while he has already made great headway, we know he is still working to get additional recognition for our State that will save his constituents from being washed out. He deserves the everlasting gratitude of his people, and I know they appreciate his efforts. I hope he will never stop until reservoirs are constructed on all our mountain streams because it is water from above that causes all the damage in his section. How his people did suffer this year! At their expense Cairo was saved. They opened the levees across from Cairo on our side of the river so that Cairo would not be washed out. What we want to do and what the gentleman is fighting to do is impound the water so that there will not be a recurrence of what happened this year.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Would the gentleman feel at liberty to state the basis of the objection to the Sears amendment he referred to a moment ago?

Mr. COCHRAN. It was just simply a desire on the part of those in control to defeat the amendment. They claimed it might defeat the bill. Some claimed that Mr. Sears wanted to open up an irrigation project. I think in the Platte Valley. Every argument was used to defeat the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think the amendment was defeated by 10 votes, but if that amendment had passed at that time we would not have had to wait until a short time ago when you laid down your flood-control policy that for the first time included reservoirs.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Were there any private influences involved in the opposition to it?

Mr. COCHRAN. It was not private influence that tried to influence me. It was a member of the other body, to whom I refused to listen.

I like to fish and I have floated practically every one of the mountain streams in Missouri. I know the situation because I have been out camping when the rivers came up. I felt confident, although I know nothing about the matter from an engineering standpoint, but common sense tells me if you hold the water back you alleviate the situation below.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In line with the liberalization with the policy which the gentleman advocates, and which policy is advocated by the Committee on Flood Control, I remind him that in the recent report and recommendation of the Chief of Engineers there are embraced seven reservoirs of the kind he advocates for tributaries of the Missouri River, largely in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is exactly what I have been advocating for years, and I am glad to hear it is in the report. They should have been constructed years ago, and they would have saved the people hundreds of millions of dollars if they had been constructed. We have natural basins there where all they have to do is to put up the wall and lower the gates when there is too much water. By impounding that water and not letting it rush down the St. Francis Valley you meet the situation that we have been complaining of for years.

We have mountain streams in Missouri that will jump 25 feet in an hour, and all that water will drain down to southeast Missouri until you construct the reservoirs. I want to see more attention paid to the storing of water, because we have spent hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars, if not billions of dollars, in building levees and still we are having the floods just as we had them before the levees were constructed, so why not try reservoirs?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman will admit that this bill provides for the storing of water as well as other features of flood control.

Mr. COCHRAN. I so admit, but I dislike to see the question of hydroelectric plants taken up with this matter of flood control. I simply want to see a dam constructed so one can lower the gates when the time comes to hold the waters back. We have enough power projects in our State now. If we are going to get mixed up with the water-power projects, we are liable not to get quite so far with the flood-control projects. We generate power from coal in our State right now cheaper than it can be brought from water-power projects. There is no necessity for additional power projects at this time in Missouri. Therefore, I want to see the Army engineers pay special attention to the flood-control projects and the reservoirs that do not provide for the generation of power.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I remind the gentleman that as previously pointed out during general debate the resolution under consideration requires an investigation respecting power only so far as that is now required by existing law.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. My purpose in securing this time is to try to get an answer to the questions I tried to make clear a moment ago. Perhaps the chairman of the committee did not understand me. In my district I have a stream which is about 16 miles long. It is a river. It has a lot of tributaries that feed into it, forming this big river very quickly. On that short river are operated boats that carry as high as 600 tons of coal and stone and ore and steel products, and so forth. I want to know that if under the terms of this bill that would be considered a major river.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I can answer that by saying that I would have to have some additional information. I do not know the name of the river, among other things.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is the Saginaw River. It enters into Saginaw Bay.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not recall the flood-control problems along that river. I would say, however, that would be one of the navigable rivers in the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is certainly a navigable river. The Government has within the last 2 days authorized a turning basin there for these big ships. There is no doubt that it is a navigable river.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think without question that would be included.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Army engineers have recommended against a flood survey on that river and its tributaries. I am anxious to know whether or not this bill authorizes the Army engineers to proceed to survey that river and its tributaries and whether it is considered a major stream?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I wonder if there has been a survey of the Saginaw River? Has there been a survey in 308 reports?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I believe there has, of the river proper.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman desires to have it reexamined under the act of June 22, 1936, the Committee on Flood Control is authorized, without securing any additional legislation, to pass a resolution that would provide for its reexamination. As chairman of that committee, I can promise the gentleman that such a resolution would have prompt consideration if the gentleman desires a resurvey.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman very much.

MANGANESE ON THE MISSOURI RIVER

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to call attention to the possibilities of the upper Missouri River, not only from the standpoints of flood control and the storage of water for reclamation, but also because of the possibilities for the development of hydroelectric power.

In South Dakota, in the upper Missouri River, we have a bend of the river known as the Big Bend. The Big Bend is created by the river coming to a hard formation and being diverted, causing a bend of some 21 miles; yet the neck of land across that bend is only a mile and a half, with the result that there are two high bluffs on either side of the river, constituting a very natural site for a dam. This is a little below the center of the State north and south. It has been estimated that a dam at that point would impound 22 times the amount of water impounded at Fort Peck.

The long lake thus created would automatically solve the problem of navigation from that point back above the North Dakota line and, through control of the flow, would solve the problem of navigation below and would store water or send it into diversion canals for irrigation and contribute something to flood control. But possibly the most important feature at the present time is the possibility for the development of vast hydroelectric power at Big Bend in connection with the manganese deposits immediately adjacent.

Manganese is one of the essential minerals of the country. The manufacture of steel demands manganese. It is used increasingly as a fertilizer for certain soils. It is rated as the no. 1 war material. The House Committee on Military Affairs has been considering legislation to provide for the expenditure of $100,000,000 for the storage of essential minerals here as a matter of national defense. Possibly a third of that amount would go for manganese alone.

Within 10 miles of this Big Bend site, on the Missouri River, is located a low-grade deposit of manganese ore which, by the United States Geological Survey report, contains over one-half of the known manganese reserves of the entire United States. At Boulder Dam, the Government has been investigating the use of electrolysis in the benefication of manganese ore. If that can be successfully applied here, we have the possibility of developing a field of manganese, which constitutes over half of the known reserves of the country, at a fraction of the cost that is proposed to store foreign-produced manganese.

Furthermore, an examination of the United States Geological Survey report reveals that the survey on which this supply is estimated covered only nine townships. This report says:

> These deposits continue up and down the river as far as can be seen and also west in the banks of the White River.

No one can estimate accurately what it would mean to establish an industry of this size in the very heart of the country. Cheap electric power on a vast scale would change the whole outlook for the northern part of the Great Plains area.

I am very much interested in this legislation, because if the War Department adopts a national program for the development of our rivers for the purposes of flood control, navigation, irrigation, and hydroelectric power, I am sure they will see the benefit of a development at the Big Bend in South Dakota, which will permit the development of these manganese ores.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

With the following committee amendment:

> Strike out all of section 2 and insert: "The cost of surveys and preparing plans as herein authorized shall be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I regret to have to make a point of order against the committee amendment. The amendment changes the authorization to a direct appropriation, and, of course, an appropriation is not in order on a legislative bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I call the gentleman's attention to the report of the War Department that is found in the report of the committee on this bill, the report being in a letter from the Secretary of War dated April 13, 1937, and I read from that report, as follows:

With the amendment thus indicated the War Department does not object to the enactment of this joint resolution.

I have referred to this report of the War Department, to show the language to which the gentleman has made a point of order is language recommended by the War Department and insisted upon by the Bureau of the Budget before the Bureau of the Budget approved this legislation, as stated in the final paragraph of the report of the Secretary of War.

I would like to state, with the gentleman's permission, what I stated in a previous colloquy between the gentleman and myself, in asking his opinion.

This resolution provides for coordinating and assembling plans that were authorized under previous acts passed by Congress, and in particular authorized by the National Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, in which $5,000,000 is authorized for plans, surveys, and investigations by the War Department and $5,000,000 is authorized for plans and investigations by the Department of Agriculture. These are among the plans contemplated in this act, and it is not a case where money authorized for one purpose is being diverted to an entirely different purpose. It is merely a case for the benefit of the Nation of utilizing funds already authorized and appropriated or that may be appropriated under the authorization for carrying out the purposes described in the resolution which are similar and related.

While I am familiar with the rule the gentleman invokes, I hope and urge in this particular case, inasmuch as the Director of the Budget insisted upon this amendment before this legislation was approved, and to preserve the integrity of the legislation, the integrity of this act that has met with the unanimous approval of the Congress of the United States, that the will of the Congress, the representatives of the people, be given consideration by yielding in this case as we have yielded in other cases to a parliamentary situation in order that an adequate national flood-control policy may be perfected out of funds heretofore appropriated by the Congress of the United States. The Director of the Budget, the spokesman for the President, suggested the amendment. While I am in sympathy with the gentleman's attitude and in sympathy with his desire to protect the Treasury and his committee, I do believe that public good and the public interest would be promoted by the approval of the recommendation adopted by this committee submitted to it by the Director of the Budget; and I do urge and ask him in this case to yield so that this bill may not be subject to the criticism that additional appropriations will be required and a possible veto because of that provision in the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order very reluctantly. I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of the bill and trust the legislation will be enacted, it ought to be enacted. I rose merely to ask that we proceed in conformity with the rules of the House which preclude the consideration of an appropriation in a bill of this character. I make the point of order merely to maintain the integrity of the proceedings. I am certain that the gentleman wishes to observe the rules of the House and follow established procedure, and especially so, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we can secure the same results in a legitimate way.

The third deficiency bill is now under consideration. Hearings are now in progress in the committee, and if this bill becomes a law and carries an authorization there will be ample time in which to secure an appropriation in the regular way. The gentleman will recall an ancient admonition to beware of the man that "climbeth over the wall and goeth not in by the gate." I am merely suggesting that he can get the same result by following orderly procedure and going in at the gate instead of subjecting us to all the disadvantages incident to climbing over the wall.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. With pleasure.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am trying to travel the only strait and narrow road—to follow the gentleman's analogy—over which I can get this legislation by; to wit, following the leadership of this administration and the spokesman of the President, the Director of the Budget.

I appreciate that if the point of order is sustained the original section will carry an authorization. When we come before the Appropriations Committee asking for money will we be met—assuming that the gentleman's objection does not result in a veto—will we be met by the criticism that we have not got the recommendation of the Budget and therefore you cannot include an appropriation in the deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Any committee of the House, of course, follows routine in the consideration of any matter referred to it, and when this matter comes before us in the regular course I am certain that the committee will give it every consideraton, and I believe sympathetic consideration.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If that is as far as the gentleman cares to go I imagine there is no use pursuing my inquiry further.

I ask the gentleman one further question: Would the gentleman's objection be eliminated if the amendment of the committee were modified by striking out the word "heretofore" and limiting the cost to appropriations hereafter to be made?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That would be subject to the same point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That would not satisfy the gentleman's objection?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It would be in violation of the same rule. If the gentleman's committee were permitted to bring in such a bill it could be taken as a precedent and there would be dozens of bills every session proposing to exhaust unexpended balance in every department. I am certain that the gentleman would not favor that procedure, such a chaotic condition.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am asking the gentleman if he can suggest language that might be adopted by the committee in charge of the bill and the Committee of the Whole that would provide that the appropriations, whether in the deficiency bill or some other bill, for the project might come out of funds heretofore or hereafter made?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the gentleman will eliminate the language of the committee amendment down to the word "paid" and insert the word "to", he would authorize the very thing which he proposes here. However, that would merely limit the scope of the proposition when it came to the Committee on Appropriations. Allocation could be made from funds already provided, but appropriation could not be made from funds not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Mississippi seems to concede that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With great deference—I do not mean to interrupt the Chair—but I have not made any statement at all directly on the point of order. I followed the Director of the Budget. I have not argued the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The language against which the point of order is raised reads as follows:

The cost of surveys and preparing plans as herein authorized shall be paid from the appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

Rule XXI, section 4, reads as follows:

No bill or joint resolution carrying an appropriation shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

It seems clear to the Chair that the language of the amendment is prohibited by rule XXI, section 4, and, therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 3, line 6, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I have adopted the exact words as given to me by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in an effort to comply, as far as the committee is able to comply, with the recommendation of the Director of the Budget. It was understood that these plans and reports were to be paid for out of the appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for flood control and surveys and examinations.

I may say in this connection, Mr. Chairman, if the Committee will indulge me for a moment, that under existing law the Flood Committee of the House passes many resolutions which provide for reviews of previous reports and the submission of new and additional plans, and they are paid for out of existing appropriations. No additional appropriation is required. The Commerce Committee of the Senate, under existing law, does exactly the same thing. It was our view, if a committee of the other body and a committee of this House are authorized to pass resolutions that bring forth substantially the same information required by this resolution, and we are authorized to do that, and those investigations are paid out of existing appropriations, surely the House itself should not be prevented from doing the same thing. In all events, in order to protect this legislation and in order to comply with the recommendation of the War Department and of the Director of the Budget, this amendment in the language of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is offered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. I would like to read to the Committee the wording of the nonmilitary appropriation bill just passed by the Congress:

Not to exceed $500,000 for preliminary examinations and surveys of flood-control projects authorized by law.

That is in this year's appropriation bill, carrying out the $5,000,000 authorization in the 1936 act. This is therefore not an appropriation but a direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 175) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 270, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the joint resolution and amendments to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "Joint resolution to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, development of hydroelectric power resources, water, and soil conservation, and for other purposes."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that the Senate has passed a similar resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 57.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, Senate Joint Resolution 57, to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to submit to Congress with reasonable expedition a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States and their principal tributaries. The Chief of Army Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, is authorized and directed to conduct necessary surveys, assemble information, and prepare such a comprehensive plan, which shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and all works necessary for an effective and adequate system of flood control for all such rivers. Such plan and the report or reports to Congress shall list specific projects and set forth estimates of cost (including the expense of acquiring land and easements and payment of property damage) of carrying out the projects. Such plan and report or reports shall take into consideration flood-control projects now under construction or heretofore authorized by acts of Congress.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause of the Senate joint resolution and substituting in lieu thereof the language of the joint resolution just passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to submit to Congress with reasonable expedition a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States and its Territories and their principal tributaries. The Chief of Army Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, is authorized and directed to conduct necessary surveys, assemble information, and prepare such a comprehensive plan, which shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and all works necessary for an effective and adequate system of flood control for all such rivers. Such plan and the report or reports to Congress shall list specific projects and set forth estimates of cost (including the expense of acquiring land and easements and payment of property damage) of carrying out the projects, and shall set forth the values of such projects for hydroelectric development and other conservation purposes. And the appropriate bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination, survey, and report or reports, to be made for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds of said waterways, with a view to controlling said floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936. Such plan and report or reports shall take into consideration flood-control projects now under construction or heretofore authorized by acts of Congress, and shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and utilization of water resources through the building of power dams or a combination of power, reclamation, conservation, and flood-control dams, and all works necessary for an effective soil and water conservation for all such rivers and their watersheds. Any plans or reports which include or recommend projects for reclamation shall be prepared in conjunction with the Department of the Interior.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "Joint resolution to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, development of hydroelectric power resources, water and soil conservation, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent the proceedings whereby House Joint Resolution 175 was considered, amended, and passed were vacated and said joint resolution laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken in the Committee of the Whole on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 175) which has just been passed may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, would that request apply to Members who spoke on the rule?

The SPEAKER. The request did not cover such Members.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE OIL COMPACT

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 456) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

A similar Senate joint resolution is upon the Speaker's desk. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this joint resolution is a ratification of the compacts of six or seven States, dealing with the production of oil, and is somewhat of a companion measure to the so-called Connally Hot Oil Act.

I shall not object to the present consideration of this joint resolution, but I want to take this opportunity to call to the attention of the House an undesirable situation which has grown up under these compacts and under the Connally Hot Oil Act, a situation under which the large companies have taken profits from their production, from their refining, and from their pipe lining of oil in order to pay losses in the marketing field.

I have introduced a bill (H. R. 7800) which provides that the marketing of oil shall be separated from the other activities in the petroleum field. The measure which I have proposed has some precedents which I think we all will agree are good.

About 30 years ago some of the railroads of this country were engaged in the mining of coal, and it was discovered that the advantage these companies had both in mining and transporting the coal made their competition with other coal companies unfair. The Hepburn Act, passed about 30 years ago, divorced the mining of coal from the transportation of coal. About 1918, I believe, the Federal Trade Commission started an investigation of the packing business, and in 1920 corrected an ill which was growing up in that business. As a result of that investigation the large packing companies of the country agreed to a consent decree under which they were prohibited from engaging in the retailing of meat products.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. It happens that in my State there are a good many of the independent dealers in gasoline and oils, and I have received numerous communications regarding the gentleman's bill. Almost without exception these men, who are engaged in that branch of the oil business which the gentleman's bill is intended to reach, are for the compact. I do not believe the compact will have one thing in the world to do with the situation about which the gentleman is concerned. I may say to the gentleman that I have had statements in line with my position from men who are in the position to which the gentleman has referred. However, as I view this bill, it is not going to interfere with what the gentleman is trying to do, and I agree with him on that proposition. I think that after the passage of this bill we shall be in better position because we shall have the full strength of the independent dealers as well as others in working to correct the situation.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am pleased to hear the gentleman's statement. I shall not object to the pending resolution, but I think this is a fitting time to call attention to my bill.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BIERMANN. My bill is aimed at correcting an ill which the Connally Act did not intend, and which this joint resolution does not intend.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. BOREN. This measure to validate the interstate compact is purely a conservation measure and has no relation to the subject of marketing prices.

Mr. BIERMANN. No; neither has the Connally Hot Oil Act, but they have resulted in practice in giving the large, established companies an advantage over the independent marketers which results sometimes in an utter destruction of the independent marketers, and I know in a great many cases of other serious damage. I hope the Members of the House whose constituents benefit from the Connally Hot Oil Act and from this joint resolution, which the gentleman from Maryland has offered, will unite with some of the rest of us in the enactment of my bill, which will divorce the marketing business from the other oil activities and allow the marketing branch to stand on its own feet, which it does not do now.

Mr. BOREN. I want to make it clear that House Joint Resolution 456, introduced by me, and Senate Joint Resolution 183, introduced by Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, a similar resolution having been introduced by the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. COLE, are truly conservation measures. Some of the arguments made against the Connally Hot Oil Act at an earlier date would not apply here. I say this in full recognition of the fact that the measure the gentleman has introduced is a disintegrating measure, to protect the marketer, and there is merit in that.

But, Mr. Speaker, this measure is of great national importance in that its adoption means the conservation of a great national resource.

The purpose of this legislation is to permit the major oil-producing States to agree on and administer a system of proration for the prevention of dissipation and wanton waste of the Nation's great natural oil reserves.

The Constitution of the United States guarantees the right of two or more States to enter into a compact and defines the procedure to validate such agreements by the approval of Congress. A few years ago five States made such a compact for the conservation of oil, and that compact has been approved by the Congress and will have been in operation 2 years this September. Recently in New Orleans representatives of the same States and one or two additional States met and voted to extend this compact 2 years. No change has been made in the compact and experience has recognized the wisdom of its original draft.

The Governors and the legislatures of the States involved have passed approval on the compact. The President of the United States has sent the compact to the Congress with a message requesting approval.

I feel that the Congress should unanimously approve this agreement for the national welfare, in that it conserves our great oil resources. And I urge the passage of House Joint Resolution 456 or Senate Joint Resolution 185 in approval of the work of these States in the Nation's interest. The Congress has here a splendid example of what can be accomplished through cooperation between the States, and our approval of this measure should serve as a stimulus for such effective and beneficial work in other instances of a similar character. Quoting Mr. COLE's report:

Article 1, section 10, of the Constitution of the United States provides in part as follows:

"No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty on tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power * * *."

The aforegoing constitutional provision contemplated just such concerted action on the part of the States as we find embodied in the compact set forth in this resolution.

Nothing we can think of is more important at the present time than the conservation of our oil resources. All States possessing these great resources should be and, I believe, are anxious to do so and the great consuming portion of the country is equally concerned. Oil is not unlimited, as many do not realize, and the time when substitutes or greater improvements of recovery or refining process will be of major importance is not so very far distant.

A single State, however, is not willing to impose upon its people legal restrictions in the recovery of this resource from their land—which recovery can be restricted, as the courts have well defined, provided such statutes are for the purpose of preventing waste thereof—unless neighboring and other oil-producing States are willing to do likewise. The Federal Government has too great an interest not only in its own activities but in those of the consuming States and the problems of industry and individuals, not to lend encouragement to the efforts on the part of the great producing States of the country to solve their problems through concerted action of this character.

Mr. BIERMANN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. I trust the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] will not object to consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 183, the Interstate Oil Compact. This original compact and contract was first executed February 16, 1935, by representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Illinois, Colorado, and Kansas, and will expire by its own terms on September 1, 1937, unless it receives the approval of Congress. This original compact was formally ratified and approved by the respective States and later approved by Congress, and the original contract is on deposit in the office of Secretary of State, Mr. Hull. The purpose of the compact is to conserve oil and gas by the prevention of physical waste from any cause. The compacting States bind themselves to accomplish, within reasonable limits, the prevention of—

(1) The operation of any oil well with an inefficient gas-oil ratio.

(2) The drowning with water of any stratum capable of producing oil or gas, or both oil and gas in paying quantities.

(3) The avoidable escape into the open air or the wasteful burning of gas from a natural-gas well.

(4) The creation of unnecessary fire hazards.

(5) The drilling, equipping, locating, spacing, or operating of a well or wells so as to bring about physical waste of oil or gas or loss in the ultimate recovery thereof.

(6) The inefficient, excessive, or improper use of the reservoir energy in producing any well.

I want to call attention to the gentleman from Iowa that this compact has not been treated as a price-fixing commission and as far as the State of Kansas is concerned, it does not consider that it can in any way fix, determine, or control prices of crude oil or gasoline. The State of Kansas and other States have ratified the extension agreement, as stated before, and I trust that the House will this afternoon give its approval as it has previously passed the Senate. The chairman of the Kansas Corporation Commission, Mr. Ernest E. Blincoe, has been designated as the Kansas representative of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, and he assures me that the Kansas Corporation Commission is very much in favor of the adoption of this extension, and previously the State legislature and the Governor have approved its continuance. Kansas is one of the leading oil-producing States in the Union, and I believe this legislation meets with the full approval of the people of that State. I trust the gentleman from Iowa will allow immediate consideration of this bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. I shall not object to the consideration of this measure, but my point is that right here is a good place to direct attention to some of the ills which are coming out of the combination of these compacts and the Connally Hot Oil Act. The Connally Hot Oil Act had for one of its principal purposes the elimination of cutthroat competition in the production field.

My bill has for its sole purpose the elimination of cutthroat competition in the marketing field. I am pretty sure the gentleman from Kansas will support it when it comes up.

Mr. CARLSON. The gentleman has made a very careful study of the matter, and I trust we will get an opportunity to consider his bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. How will this cutthroat competition affect the consumers who buy this gas?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not know that it ought to affect the consumer adversely, but if the consumer is paying less than he ought to pay in order to provide a decent living wage for those in the marketing part of the oil business, it would be all right to raise the price. There are a million persons, I may say, to the gentleman, involved in the marketing end of the oil business in the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. And there are about 130,000,000 people who buy gas.

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; but there are only about 25,000,000 engaged in the businesses benefited by the joint resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland and the Connally hot-oil bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Does not the gentleman believe that if there is cut-throat competition between these oil producers and distributors, the consumers will get the benefit of such competition?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not know about that. Neither, I do not know that it is a kind of benefit they ought to have. I do not believe there is any justice in allowing these big oil companies, like the Standard and the Shell, a whole raft of whom have been indicted just recently in Madison, Wis., to gouge the little, independent fellow, even though a slight benefit may be passed on to the consumer, which I do not admit actually happens.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 183

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to an extension and renewal for a period of 2 years from September 1, 1937, of the interstate compact to conserve oil and gas, executed in the city of Dallas, Tex., the 16th day of February 1935 by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, California, and New Mexico, and thereafter recommended for ratification by the representatives of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, and Michigan, and subsequently ratified by the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado, and Texas, which said compact was deposited in the Department of State of the United States, and thereafter such compact was, by the President, presented to the Congress and the Congress gave consent to such compact by House Joint Resolution 407, approved August 27, 1935 (Public Res. No. 64, 74th Cong.). The extended and renewed compact, executed in New Orleans, La., the 10th day of May 1937 by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, and New Mexico, and then recommended for ratification by representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, New Mexico, Illinois, and Colorado, and since ratified by the said States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, New Mexico, Illinois, and Colorado, which extended and renewed compact has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States, and reads as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"This agreement may become effective within any compacting State at any time as prescribed by that State, and shall become effective within those States ratifying it whenever any three of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, and New Mexico have ratified and Congress has given its consent. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto as hereinafter provided.

"ARTICLE II

"The purpose of this compact is to conserve oil and gas by the prevention of physical waste thereof from any cause.

"ARTICLE III

"Each State bound hereby agrees that within a reasonable time it will enact laws, or if laws have been enacted, then it agrees to continue the same in force, to accomplish within reasonable limits the prevention of—

"(a) The operation of any oil well with an inefficient gas-oil ratio.

"(b) The drowning with water of any stratum capable of producing oil or gas, or both oil and gas in paying quantities.

"(c) The avoidable escape into the open air or the wasteful burning of gas from a natural gas well.

"(d) The creation of unnecessary fire hazards.

"(e) The drilling, equipping, locating, spacing, or operating of a well or wells so as to bring about physical waste of oil or gas or loss in the ultimate recovery thereof.

"(f) The inefficient, excessive or improper use of the reservoir energy in producing any well.

"The enumeration of the foregoing subjects shall not limit the scope of the authority of any State.

"ARTICLE IV

"Each State bound hereby agrees that it will, within a reasonable time, enact statutes, or if such statutes have been enacted then that it will continue the same in force, providing in effect that oil produced in violation of its valid oil and/or gas conservation statutes or any valid rule, order, or regulation promulgated thereunder, shall be denied access to commerce; and providing for stringent penalties for the waste of either oil or gas.

"ARTICLE V

"It is not the purpose of this compact to authorize the States joining herein to limit the production of oil or gas for the purpose of stabilizing or fixing the price thereof, or create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but is limited to the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the avoidable waste thereof within reasonable limitations.

"ARTICLE VI

"Each State joining herein shall appoint one representative to a commisison hereby constituted and designated as The Interstate Oil Compact Commission, the duty of which said commission shall be to make inquiry and ascertain from time to time such methods, practices, circumstances, and conditions as may be disclosed for bringing about conservation and the prevention of physical waste of oil and gas, and at such intervals as said commission deems beneficial it shall report its findings and recommendations to the several States for adoption or rejection.

"The Commission shall have power to recommend the coordination of the exercise of the police powers of the several States within their several jurisdictions to promote the maximum ultimate recovery from the petroleum reserves of said States, and to recommend measures for the maximum ultimate recovery of oil and gas. Said Commission shall organize and adopt suitable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business.

"No action shall be taken by the Commission except: (1) By the affirmative votes of the majority of the whole number of the compacting States, representing at any meeting, and (2) by a concurring vote of a majority in interest of the compacting States at said meeting, such interest to be determined as follows: Such vote of each State shall be in the decimal proportion fixed by the ratio of its daily average production during the preceding calendar half year to the daily average production of the compacting States during said period.

"ARTICLE VII

"No State by joining herein shall become financially obligated to any other State, nor shall the breach of the terms hereof by any State subject such State to financial responsibility to the other States joining herein.

"ARTICLE VIII

"This compact shall expire September 1, 1937. But any State joining herein may, upon 60 days' notice, withdraw herefrom.

"The representatives of the signatory States have signed this agreement in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States, and a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

"This compact shall become effective when ratified and approved as provided in article I. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto by affixing its signature to a counterpart to be similarly deposited, certified, and ratified.

"Done in the city of Dallas, Tex., this 16th day of February 1935.

"And whereas it is desired to extend and renew said compact for the period of 2 years from September 1, 1937, its expiration date;

"Now, therefore, this writing witnesseth:

"It is hereby agreed that the said compact entitled 'An interstate compact to conserve oil and gas' executed in the city of Dallas, Tex., on the 16th day of February 1935, and now on deposit with the Department of State of the United States, a correct copy of which appears above, be, and the same is hereby, extended for a period of 2 years from September 1, 1937, its date of expiration, this agreement to become effective within those States joining herein when executed by any three of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, and New Mexico, and consent thereto is given by Congress.

"The signatory States execute this agreement in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States and a duly certified copy thereof shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

"Executed as of this the 10th day of May 1937 by the several undersigned States, at their several capitols, through their proper officials thereunto duly authorized by resolutions or statutes of the several States."

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of section 1 is hereby expressly reserved.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point by including the report which I submitted on the joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[House of Representatives, Rept. No. 1360, 75th Cong., 1st sess.]

GRANTING CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO AN INTERSTATE OIL COMPACT TO CONSERVE OIL AND GAS

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 456) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

House Joint Resolution 456, introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], is identical with House Joint Resolution 460, which I introduced and the interstate compact set forth in the resolution reported herewith is identical with that contained in House Joint Resolution 407, approved August 27, 1935, in Public Resolution No. 64 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, which I also introduced.

From letter dated July 8, 1937, from Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior to the Honorable Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull (which letter is a part of H. Doc. 307, the message from the President of the United States recommending the passage of this legislation), is the following paragraph:

"The interstate compact to conserve oil and gas was executed in Dallas, Tex., on February 16, 1935, and ratified subsequently by the legislatures of the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado, and Texas. The formation of such a compact was encouraged by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Subcommittee of the House of Representatives which investigated the petroleum industry in 1934 and prepared the bill, H. R. 9053, which was reported favorably by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in August 1935. In addition to providing for the approval of the compact, the bill, H. R. 9053, contained other provisions which were regarded by the committee as essential to the declaration of a permanent policy of the Government dealing with the petroleum industry. Only that portion of the bill which consented to the compact was enacted by the Seventy-fourth Congress in Public Resolution No. 64, approved August 27, 1935."

It is correct, as Secretary Ickes stated that the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House, over which subcommittee I presided as chairman in 1934, investigating under a House resolution the petroleum industry, gave considerable encouragement to the oil-producing States to the formation of an interstate compact rather than have their problems regimented in Washington as was being attempted at that time. While our efforts were not by any means controlling in bringing the States together in the final execution of the compact in Dallas, Tex., on February 16, 1935, the members of our committee felt that the prominence given in our hearings to the possibility of a compact and the benefits to be derived thereon, furnished the necessary encouragement to the States affected.

It is further true that H. R. 9053 was reported during the Seventy-fourth Congress upon the recommendation of our subcommittee, which bill provided for the approval of the compact and contained other provisions regarded by us as advisable permanent national policy at that time. It is the belief of the writer of this report that other provisions of that bill will eventually become law.

I am frank to say with the efficiency of the Bureau of Mines and the Petroleum Administrative Board, both under the Department of the Interior, dealing primarily for the past 2 years with shipments of oil in interstate commerce in violation of State law, there is not the same need for a separate agency as I advocated in the past, to administer the provisions of such an act as was contemplated in H. R. 9053.

There is no occasion for a long report on this resolution because the report of the Seventy-fourth Congress is available and the letter from the President of the United States, the State Department and the Interior Department, as embodied in House Document 306 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, endorsing the renewal of the compact presents at considerable length reasons therefor.

Article 1, section 10, of the Constitution of the United States provides in part as follows:

"No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty on tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power * * *."

The aforegoing constitutional provision contemplated just such concerted action on the part of the States as we find embodied in the compact set forth in this resolution.

Nothing we can think of is more important at the present time than the conservation of our oil resources. All States possessing these great resources should be and, I believe, are anxious to do so and the great consuming portion of the country is equally concerned. Oil is not unlimited, as many do not realize, and the time when substitutes or greater improvements of recovery or refining process will be of major importance is not so very far distant.

A single State, however, is not willing to impose upon its people legal restrictions in the recovery of this resource from their land—which recovery can be restricted, as the courts have well defined, provided such statutes are for the purpose of preventing waste thereof—unless neighboring and other oil-producing States are willing to do likewise. The Federal Government has too great an interest not only in its own activities but in those of the consuming States and the problems of industry and individuals, not to lend encouragement to the efforts on the part of the great producing States of the country to solve their problems through concerted action of this character.

We are asked in this resolution to give consent to such a request which is in the form of a compact dated February 16, 1935, expiring September 1, 1937, unless it is extended for a 2-year period to September 1, 1939, as requested by the States set forth therein.

It should be said that all that is capable of being accomplished under the compact of 1935, which we now recommend be extended, has not been accomplished, in fact not so much as we had hoped for, but the interstate commission provided for therein does supply the means for frequent contact on this all-important subject between the States most concerned therewith. It is our hope that at the end of this new period, that is, by September 1, 1939, that more uniformity in State statutes will be found and more accomplishments will be reported by the several groups functioning under the compact commission set-up.

A TRIBUTE TO HON. JAMES COUZENS

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, it is my desire today to pay a brief tribute to a distinguished citizen of Michigan who for 13 years served his State and his Nation in the United States Senate, and served them well. I refer to the Honorable JAMES COUZENS, now deceased.

JIM COUZENS was a fine type of honest, courageous, high-minded legislator, but it is not of that phase of his life and activities I desire to speak today.

Senator COUZENS was an outstanding financial genius, who helped to build one of the most magnificent and important industries in this Nation. But it is not of that phase of his life and character that I desire to speak today.

History will write as an epitaph to Senator JAMES COUZENS this fact: "He was the friend and benefactor of poor, crippled children." A more noble and beautiful tribute could not be paid to the memory of any man.

Out of his store of wealth Senator COUZENS, in April 1929, created a trust fund of $10,000,000. That trust fund was to be expended over a period of 25 years. In November 1934 Senator COUZENS supplemented his $10,000,000 gift to crippled children by another sum of $2,100,000, making the total of his contribution $12,100,000.

Not only did Senator COUZENS donate this vast sum of money to the purpose of promoting the health, welfare, happiness, and development of the children of Michigan, and of those elsewhere in the world, but the Senator himself acted as chairman of the board which administered the funds. He therefore gave not only of his money but of his time, strength, and his genius in order that his money might achieve the greatest good for the greatest number of poor crippled children whom he so desired to help.

Another distinguished Member of the Congress from my State, the Honorable ALBERT J. ENGEL, has, in a beautiful tribute delivered on this floor to the memory of Senator COUZENS, placed in the RECORD many facts, figures, and details concerning Senator COUZENS' philanthropy. I therefore will not consume the time of this House to repeat those facts, figures, and details.

I think Senator COUZENS himself gave the finest and most succinct statement of the purpose which motivated him when he wrote, in part, as follows:

> A nation which survives in this struggling world must be made up of citizens strong in body, seasoned in spirit, and supple in mind. Capacity to meet competition strongly with intelligence and zest determines the destinies of peoples as well as of individuals. If this is true, then it is equally true that the welfare of the Republic 30 years hence depends upon how well we adults of the present foster, upbuild, and train the myriads of children who throng our homes. These frail little folks who romp and weep and laugh about our knees today will be the masters of America in that time to come.
> The good parent consecrates himself to this task. Every father and every mother worthy of the name has a tender and undying love for his children. Each of them works valiantly to open for his children better opportunities than he possessed himself—opportunities for good health, for better-trained minds, and for well-adjusted personalities. But the job is bigger than the resources of the average parent. The obligation leaps beyond the confines of the home and offers a constant challenge to government and to wealth to join hands with parents in enlarging opportunities for childhood.
> To my mind, the necessity of meeting this challenge fairly and squarely is simple and clear. The importance of child rearing overshadows all the more spectacular problems that receive attention in those tumultuous times. The Children's Fund of Michigan was founded 7 years ago with exactly this purpose, to open wider the gates of opportunity to Michigan's children.

It has been said, and I think truly, that more than a million children have already been helped by the philanthropy of Senator COUZENS; and no one can estimate the vast amount of human happiness, human usefulness, good citizenship, and good service which will be achieved by this magnificent philanthropy established by JAMES COUZENS.

I think it is not too much to say that in all probability some of our finest executives in State and, perhaps, in National Government may come from the ranks of those who have been rescued from a life of misery, suffering, and futility by the operation of the money donated to this great humanitarian cause by the late distinguished Michigan Senator.

I think it is not too much to say that in all probability there may come from the ranks of these children who are being and who will be rescued from a life of suffering and frustration some of the most able and noted scientists, teachers, writers, and medical practitioners, perhaps, that the world has ever known.

As I have said, there is no way in which we can foresee or estimate what vast contributions to the good of humanity in the world will flow from the operation of this $12,000,000 humanitarian trust fund. In a world torn by strife, growing cynical in an era of gross materialism, worn by the fear and adversities of war, it is a beautiful thing to contemplate that this man, who has passed on into the great unknown, has left behind him an active agency which for years will continue to bring to countless children salvation from pain and suffering, deformity, and futility; children who otherwise would be a burden to civilization instead of an asset.

It is a beautiful thing to contemplate the marvelous legacy which JIM COUZENS left to his State and to his Nation and to the world, not a legacy of mere dollars but a legacy of rescued, released, and healthy children to grow up into useful citizens, to live lives filled with human service, and to have in their conscience the benediction of a memory—legendary, perhaps, for many of them—of a man who so loved his fellow men that he gave generously of himself and his worldy possessions in order that they might have life and happiness more abundantly.

In closing let me again repeat the most beautiful tribute I can pay to the memory of the man who was my friend and my colleague in Congress by saying, "He was the friend and benefactor of poor, crippled children."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address of Hon. Harry H. Woodring, Secretary of War, delivered at the State convention of the American Legion, at Durham, N. C., on the evening of July 26, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

FEE OF JURORS IN FEDERAL COURTS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8007) to restore the per-diem fee of $4 for service of jurors in Federal courts.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Has this bill the approval of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. HOBBS. The bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Judiciary and this request is made under instruction of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall not object, because I am in favor of the bill, but I ask the gentleman from Alabama to make a brief statement of what the bill will accomplish.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, under the Economy Act of 1933, the per-diem allowance to jurors serving the Federal courts was reduced from $4 a day to $3 a day. This is the only remaining injustice of the kind under that act. All other unjust reductions of that emergency period have been corrected. It is manifest to anyone who will consider it for even a moment that $3 a day is not sufficient to pay the hotel bill and the maintenance of a juror away from home in a city, where he is summoned by his government to attend court and do jury duty. The request for this legislation has come from all corners of the Union to the Judiciary Committee and has the unanimous approval of that committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly. I yield with pleasure to my distinguished colleague of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minority of the committee, I might say that we gave careful consideration to this matter, and the bill should certainly be enacted. As suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, Judge HOBBS, the legislation is needed. It is equitable, it is not extravagant, and it ought to be passed. We approve it heartily.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Assuredly.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask if this is the usual per-diem allowance for accommodations of jurors in other courts? It seems to me that even the present $4 per day is extremely low. Are not other jurors allowed a higher per diem than this?

Mr. HOBBS. In some instances there are provisions making a higher per-diem allowance.

Mr. TREADWAY. And do we not have a regular per-diem allowance greater than that, say, $7 per day, for Government employees?

Mr. HOBBS. In some instances, but mostly it is $5 a day.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why should not this be $5 per day?

Mr. HOBBS. Mainly because it was felt not wise to go back beyond what was the allowance prior to this reduction.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, conditions have very materially changed since that reduction was made. What might have been a fair rate in a hotel at that time I know is higher today. I happen to know that from personal experience, from paying bills and asking other people to pay bills in hotels in which I have an interest. I would approve, in spite of the matter of economy, of making this $5 per day. I heard the gentleman from Alabama discussing the matter and assumed, of course, that $5 is the going price.

Mr. HOBBS. No. We thought best at this time simply to repeal the provision of law which continues the reduction in effect.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield my judgment, of course, to his wisdom.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. MICHENER. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the real difficulty is that we are making a general law for all of the United States. There are some places in the United States where this allowance might suffice, and other places where it is inadequate. The committee is pleased to pass this bill and get back what we had. I hope we will come in later with some kind of an arrangement to take care of those in the larger cities where a juror cannot possibly pay expenses on the present allowance.

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall be very glad to cooperate with the gentleman in raising the allowance at least in cities where the $4 rate is obviously inadequate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the twenty-third paragraph under the heading Medical and hospital service in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1938, approved June 16, 1937, which continues for the fiscal year 1938 the reduction of jurors' fees from $4 to $3, is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BEQUEST OF JAMES REUEL SMITH

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 446, to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of certain bequests of James Reuel Smith, late of the city of Yonkers, State of New York, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means are in thorough accord with the request of the chairman of the committee in passing this joint resolution. It is very seldom that the Government is in a position to secure a gift of money or other property. I think we should accept this promptly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the chairman tell the rest of us what the bill calls for?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to accept certain properties bequeathed by one James Reuel Smith, of Yonkers, N. Y. The bequest consists of his library and other property. By direction under his will, his library was to be distributed among the various lighthouses for the Lighthouse Service of the United States. The will provided further that his estate or other property should be divided into 100 equal shares, 20 shares of which were to go to the Government of the United States. It provided, furthermore, that the 20 percent of his other property bequeathed to the United States should be used for the redemption of the 1918 issue of Liberty bonds. In other words, just a bequest of a philanthropic person to the Government of the United States. It costs the Treasury nothing, but bequeaths this property to the United States. It is thought there will be about $80,000 that will come to the Treasury for redemption of the Liberty bonds of the 1918 issue.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not further true that those interested in securing these funds feel that action by Congress is necessary, even though they might have the money legally turned over to them, on account of certain heirs of the estate having contested the matter?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is true. There has been some question raised like that, and in order to clarify the matter and be sure that no misunderstanding can arise, it is thought this legislation should be passed.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. It is a fine thing that somebody is willing to give something to the Federal Treasury. I think the Ways and Means Committee certainly ought to accept any money that anyone wants to hand to them. When you look at the Federal Treasury statement and see that you are in the red $36,657,685,233, you know that you must have a lot of people in this country make wills leaving money to this Government, or something is going to happen.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I hope nothing serious.

Mr. RICH. I want to make this request of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. It is so seldom that we get an opportunity to talk to him. We like to talk to him. We know there is nobody more interested in this one particular thing, and that is, how are you going to raise the money? I would like to ask the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee this question: Are you going to have any action at this session of Congress on the iniquitous bill that was passed last year compelling the manufacturers of this country to pay out all their dividends so that they have nothing in case of a rainy day? As was said by the assistant to the chairman during the last session, he did not want this bill passed and apply to banks and insurance companies, because he was afraid it would wreck them. You are going to wreck the manufacturers of this country if you do not do something. What action is the chairman going to take at this session?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The chairman does not control such matters. He hopes that the matter will be given proper consideration in due time. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman will do that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States the library and books bequeathed to the United States by the last will and testament of James Reuel Smith and to deliver to the Secretary of Commerce, or such officer as he shall designate, said library and books for distribution among and for the use of the various lighthouse stations of the United States Lighthouse Service.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive on behalf of the United States, for the purpose set forth in the last will and testament of James Reuel Smith, all moneys and other property bequeathed to the United States under the residuary clause of such will, and to deposit said moneys into the Treasury to the credit of a public-debt account entitled "Redemption of Liberty bonds issued in the year 1918 from bequest of James Reuel Smith." The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to sell any real or personal property which may be received under the residuary clause of said will, the proceeds of such sales to be deposited in such public-debt account. Such account shall be available, until expended, for the redemption of Liberty bonds issued in the year 1918, and for no other purpose, and all payments made in the redemption of such bonds shall be made from such account, to the extent it is available, before any such payments are made out of other funds in the Treasury.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 289, Rept. No. 1395) on the bill (H. R. 5417) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes:

House Resolution 289

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5417, a bill to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

EXPENSES OF FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

The SPEAKER. The Chair had agreed to recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman from Iowa asks if it will be agreeable that he may address the House for 2 minutes first.

Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for that purpose?

Mr. HEALEY. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] recited some figures regarding the transportation expenses of the Farm Credit Administration. It amazed me that any Republican would try to make political capital out of the Farm Credit Administration. Republican administrations as well as Democratic administrations have records in making farm loans.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a very short table giving by years the number of borrowers in the last 3 Republican years, together with the amount of money they borrowed, and the number of borrowers and the amount of money they borrowed under the past 4 Democratic years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

REPUBLICAN YEARS

	Borrowers	Amount loaned
1930	12,000	$47,971,000
1931	10,000	42,015,300
1932	7,000	27,569,800

DEMOCRATIC YEARS

1933	82,000	$222,446,223
1934	496,000	1,283,503,456
1935	149,000	445,067,549
1936	65,000	186,427,995

Mr. BIERMANN. I call attention to the fact that in 1932, which was the last full Republican year of control of farm-lending agencies, when the farmers needed credit more than they ever did before in the history of our country, under Republican domination the Federal land banks of the United States lent money to only 7,000 farmers in this country, a total of $27,000,000. In 1933 the Democratic administration made provision not only for more liberal and effective Federal land-bank loans, but for commissioner's loans to those in dire distress, and under the first full year of Democratic control, 1934, we loaned to 496,000 borrowers a total of $1,283,503,456. In other words, we loaned to more than 70 times as many borrowers, and we loaned more than 47 times as much money as under the last full Republican year of 1932.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from Governor Myers of the Farm Credit Administration setting out an analysis and break-down of these transportation costs to which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 23, 1937.

Hon. FRED BIERMANN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BIERMANN: In compliance with your oral request, there is submitted an analysis of Farm Credit Administration travel expenses for the fiscal years 1936 and 1937, as follows:

	Commercial transportation	Mileage allowance	Subsistence	Total
Fiscal year 1936:
Examination Division	$6,988.59	$36,700.88	$242,045.44	$285,734.91
Emergency Crop Loan Division	19,673.39	605,413.09	389,005.79	1,014,092.27
Other Farm Credit Administration Divisions	84,407.42	59,322.96	209,771.22	353,501.60
Total	111,069.40	701,436.93	840,822.45	1,653,328.78
Fiscal year 1937:
Examination Division	5,163.87	26,949.31	174,952.40	207,065.58
Emergency Crop Loan Division	15,897.03	505,599.58	311,082.33	832,578.94
Other Farm Credit Administration Divisions	56,660.15	54,630.60	178,877.77	[1] 290,168.52 [1] 125,000.00

[1] Estimated unpaid obligations for travel as of June 30, 1937, applicable to 1937 fiscal expenses.

Your attention is directed to the break-down that has been made between the expense incurred by the Examination Division, Emergency Crop Loan Division, and other Farm Credit Administration divisions. In the case of the Examination Division, the amount of $285,734.91 for 1936 was incurred in connection with the examination of the approximately 7,700 institutions under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration; however, the entire cost of examination, including travel expense, is recovered by assessment from the institutions examined, and therefore is not an expense upon the Treasury of the United States.

The item of $1,014,092.27, representing travel expense of the Emergency Crop Loan Division, 1936, covers the expense of field supervisors and representatives engaged in the making, servicing, and collecting of emergency crop-production and harvesting loans. In connection with the 1937–38 emergency crop loans, up to June 30, 1937, there were made 234,267 loans, totaling $28,868,180, an average of $123.24 per loan. As of June 30, 1937, there were outstanding 1,494,000 crop loans, totaling $189,000,000, an average of $126.50 per loan. You will observe that if the total traveling expense of this Division were assigned to servicing outstanding loans, and no travel were incurred whatsoever in the making of loans, that the cost of travel per loan serviced would amount to less than 68 cents per loan per year.

The item of $353,501.60, designated "Other Farm Credit Administration Divisions", 1936, represents the travel cost of all other employees of the Washington office engaged in the work of supervising approximately 7,700 institutions under the Farm Credit Administration. The aggregate capital of these institutions as of June 30, 1937, amounted to $943,144,885, and loans outstanding totaled $3,205,000,000.

The foregoing comments apply generally to the figures reported in the table for the fiscal year 1937.

If there is any other information which you desire, please do not hesitate to make further request.

Very truly yours,

W. I. MYERS, Governor.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, will any further legislative business be taken up this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. As far as the Chair knows, there will be no further business called up today.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

WAGE AND HOUR BILL

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time in order to address the membership of the House on a problem, which, in my judgment, transcends in its significance any of the many important problems which have come to us demanding a solution. I refer to the fact that although industry generally in all sections of our country has returned to a nearly normal stage of recovery, nevertheless we still have in our midst 8,000,000 employable men and women who as yet see no hope or promise of employment in private industry.

Today in our Nation, with industry virtually back at the high peak of 1929, there are over 8,000,000 persons unemployed. Eight million persons able to work, 8,000,000 persons anxious to work, 8,000,000 persons eager and pleading to work. Last June there was added to this number some 400,000 of the youth of our Nation, from colleges and other institutions of learning, eagerly idealistic, anxious to take a productive place in our economic order. For many of them all we can offer is the cold reality that for them there is no work, no productive place in our society, that unless something is done, for them there may never be any work.

What are we going to do about this problem? What have we done about it? They and the rest of the Nation are eagerly anxious to know our plans.

I realize, of course, that bodies are tired and tempers are drawn as a result of the long protracted session we have undergone. Heat has taken its toll and death has saddened our membership.

But it is apparent also that the forces of reaction—forces outside of Congress—have mobilized to take advantage of these conditions and, by postponement, defeat one of the primary purposes of this administration and one of the foremost reasons for our presence here.

All around us we hear the cry of these subtle forces urging Congress to go home. "Go home, Congress, you need a rest." "Go home; the country needs a rest." "Go home; reforms and legislation can wait a little longer."

But to the majority party there rests the grave responsibility of a promise made during the November campaign. At that time we told these people that we would do something about the vast problem of technological unemployment. We undertook a solemn obligation to take immediate and decisive action to eliminate the causes of this great blight. We pledged ourselves that "for all these things, we have just begun to fight." These words were spoken by our great President during a historic campaign—a campaign that resulted in the greatest majority our party has ever had in its whole history—carrying a great mandate from the American people—approbation for what had been done to set aright our economic order and for the clear and unequivocal pledge of what was to be done.

As a foremost objective for the solution of our gravest economic and social problem, the President of the United States has proposed to Congress that we enact at this session of Congress, before an adjournment, a wage and hour bill. The Black-Connery bill has been reported to the Senate and is on the calendar of that body awaiting early action. The House Committee on Labor has been working industriously in the perfection of this bill for presentation to this body for action.

This year we appropriated one billion and a half dollars for relief—a huge sum—collected from the taxpayers of America—in an attempt to meet the immediate, urgent, and pressing need of the unemployed of this Nation. And yet, despite this tremendous appropriation, it was necessary to drop 500,000 men and women from W. P. A. rolls. Five hundred thousand who did not need relief? Five hundred thousand who had jobs waiting them in private industry? Five hundred thousand who had others to alleviate their distress? Oh, no! Five hundred thousand who only recently had again passed the stringent W. P. A. test of need for a relief status—many of whom we have heard from, a great many of whom we are going to meet when we return. To us, gentlemen, this is a tangible problem because their eyes have been fixed upon us for relief and their acute distress will not let them forget that ours is the power to help. Five hundred thousand men and women who now face only privation and hunger.

This is not a sectional problem, gentlemen, not a problem of the North or the South. Unemployment and distress exist everywhere—North, South, East, and West.

This year we appropriated a billion and a half and find it is inadequate to care for the needs of even a fraction of those who need relief and employment. Even should we turn our faces from those in utter distress now, what shall we do next year? Appropriate another billion and a half—and the next year, still another billion and a half? And shall we go on thus, year after year, never understanding that it is cheaper to provide a realistic sound solution to our problems than to indefinitely drain our resources on an ineffectual palliative?

Or perhaps will it be suggested that we summarily turn these people out without relief. Turn them out to the blackness of despair and destitution. Is it proposed to create a permanent jobless dispossessed class—destined to wander like scavengers seeking to keep body and soul together on the refuse of others more fortunate? Or, if we propose to commit these millions to the charity of private institutions and local governments—will the cost to society be less? Will the billion and a half that is inadequate coming from the Federal Government go farther because doled out in haphazard fashion by private charities and local governments? Shall they be permanently divested of purchasing power and a useful place in our society? The cost in dollars and cents for relief would not only be prohibitive but it would be only a small fraction of the cost to our society and economic order.

The primary objectives of the Black-Connery wage and hour bill are to increase purchasing power and spread out work opportunities to those millions of employables who are now unable to find work.

The bill seeks, through the use of the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, to provide that in those industries engaged in interstate commerce there shall be a minimum wage set which in the enlightened opinion of today is sufficient to provide the basic necessities of our American standard of living. This legislation provides that the board may fix a minimum wage up to but not exceeding 40 cents an hour. If a man or woman works 40 hours a week and is fortunate enough to obtain 50 weeks of work out of the year, his total annual wage would be $800. Eight hundred dollars—in many cases—for a family of three or more. It seems almost incredible that in this Nation of advanced living standards, there should be any family in such a deplorable situation as to be forced to feed itself, clothe its nakedness, and shelter itself from nature's elements on so small an annual income. And yet Prof. Leon Henderson, eminent economist, testified before the Joint Committee on Labor that there are 3,000,000 persons in this country receiving less than 40 cents an hour whose station in life would be benefited by the passage of such a bill.

If we pass this legislation now, we shall make it possible for the wages of at least 3,000,000 persons to be increased to a standard which would permit only the barest of necessities. And this alone would create a tremendous increase in the purchasing power of the Nation—that purchasing power which is so vitally necessary to increase the productive capacity of industry and create consequent reemployment.

The enactment of legislation to set at least this minimum-wage standard is imperative for humanitarian, social, and economic reasons. I quote from an editorial printed in the Washington News of July 27—a newspaper whose editorial pages I admire because of its sound progressive views on social and economic legislation—and I ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate it as part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROMJUE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALY. I quote from the editorial:

> It involves attempted correction of one of the worst of our economic maladjustments—low-wage and long-hour competition with fair standards; competition that penalizes decency and exalts meanness; that opens the road for the chiseler and the sweatshop proprietor and the exploiter of child labor, and in turn ruins the one who would recognize that after all life calls for some humanitarian concept rather than mere money making at the expense of those who work for less than living pay.
>
> Furthermore, it brings to focus the fact that purchasing power must be steadily increased in a mass-production civilization possessed of such great natural resources as ours, and augmented by such labor-saving devices as to make production no major problem until such a time as consumption has cauught up.
> On the simple proposition that you can't sell unless you have a market; that you "can't run a department store in the Congo", that if you do have a market, you can sell and enlarge; that the multiplication of human wants supports an accompanying increase in the mass capacity to satisfy those wants—on that proposition stands our opportunity for continued and ever-expanding prosperity. And on that is founded the importance of the idea contained in the wage and hour bill.

Under the terms of the bill now being discussed in the Senate, provision is made for the regulation of hours by the board set up under the terms of the bill, authorizing and empowering the board to fix the hours of the maximum workweek for various industries engaged in interstate commerce, up to but not in excess of 40 hours.

The hour provisions are most vital because—through this medium it is hoped to spread out work opportunities and provide jobs for many of the idle 8,000,000 in our country today. Under present conditions, with modern technological improvements, it seems clear that the hope of absorbing these people in private industry is rapidly dwindling. We are now near complete recovery, and the signs do not hold out any promise of absorption of these unemployed. According to Mr. Henderson, there are over 6,000,000 persons who would be affected by this legislation, employed more than 40 hours a week. Curtailment of the hours of their employment is bound to create more productive opportunities for some of our unemployed. In that connection, I quote from the statement of Robert Johnson, president of Johnson & Johnson, a firm that maintains enterprises located in Georgia, Massachusetts, Illinois, and Pennsylvania—a man who has a large stake in the preservation of American industry. Appearing before the Joint Committee on Labor, Mr. Johnson said:

> I can imagine no more valuable service at this time than the work that you and your committee are doing. Liberal-minded business leaders throughout the country believe in the principle of shorter hours and higher wages, and while, some years ago, the number of such men was unfortunately too few, today their ranks are being augmented each week. They now see prosperity returning and yet do not see in the return of that prosperity the solution to our national unemployment problem and the raising of the standards of those who are now employed, but who work excessively long hours and receive less than a decent minimum wage.

I cite the above statement of Mr. Johnson as indicative of the ever-increasing conviction among industrial and business leaders that the 40-hour week is economically sound.

Another objective of the legislation is to eliminate the exploitation of children in industry. Through the medium of this legislation, I believe that we can effectively eliminate this antisocial practice forever. The need for the elimination of this deplorable evil is so universally recognized as to hardly require any argument.

These, gentlemen, are the major objectives of this bill: A minimum wage to eliminate sweatshop and starvation wages and build up purchasing power; maximum hours to remove oppressive conditions affecting the health and welfare of our people and spread out work opportunities to provide jobs and purchasing power; the elimination of child labor, an intolerable abuse which has too long been a blot on our national existence.

We hear very few who dare to quarrel with these objectives and question the necessity for and the soundness of enacting legislation for their accomplishment. But, in an effort to defeat by obstruction and indirection the achievement of this goal, they quarrel in minute perspective about the road we propose to take toward its fulfillment. They offer no solution of constructive methods to accomplish these worthy objectives. Just a few days ago you all received a lengthy brief from Amos R. Pinchot, in opposition to the enactment of this legislation. This brief is worthy of note because it is typical of the effort of the forces of reaction to obstruct and sidetrack all progress by the dissemination of specious arguments, groundless fears, and imaginary alarms. In his brief, this gentleman admits:

> Here, as in other countries, millions of people exist under deplorable conditions. Here, as elsewhere, capital, labor, and the consumer have been injured by the leadership of short-sighted and selfish men. Masses of people, including young people lately graduated from high schools and colleges, have been forced to live, and still are living, in undeserved poverty. And undeservedly they lack the opportunity to work and earn a decent living. And the government is supporting them by the million with funds raised mainly by consumption taxes on the poor.

And yet, the same gentleman characterizes efforts to alleviate the situation as an attempt to "throw the country into fascism in a fortnight and transform our economic life into a bureaucratic collectivism."

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I would rather not interrupt my statement, but I yield for a question.

Mr. McGRANERY. Is this Amos Pinchot the brother of the former Governor of Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEALEY. I so understand. To this statement I have quoted I can only reply that history has recorded that fascism, communism, and all other isms thrive most on widespread misery, want, and distress. If anyone were deliberately trying to pave the way for any one of these isms, he could find no better way than to perpetuate the existence of 8,000,000 restless unemployed, add to them annually thousands of young people fresh from high school and college, impatient, impulsive, ripe for subversive influence—face them with a prospect utterly barren of promise—cast them adrift on the sympathies of relatives, friends, neighbors, and those in whom the quality of mercy is not strained. If we are to create this "fourth estate"—landless, propertyless, jobless, hopeless—then is the ground well laid for the establishment in this Nation of an ism.

Democracies are established for the benefit of the governed. So long as they promote the general welfare and common good of the governed they will survive and flourish. Only so long—and no longer.

Of course no one denies that the field to be covered is a tremendous one. There are diverse and complex problems that flow from any attempt to devise means and methods of accomplishing this end. Provision must be made to insure justice, equity, and proper consideration for all who will come under the terms of this legislation. Provision must be made for seasonal occupations, emergencies, and proper regard for the public interest. For that reason it is difficult to lay down hard and fast rules, and, on the contrary, any bill must be written with sufficient flexibility to provide for the administration of justice and equity toward all and yet accomplish the high purposes and aims of such legislation. It is therefore necessary that, after laying down every guide for the application of fair and reasonable standards and every safeguard provided against any abuse of power, it should be provided in the bill that Congress delegate to a board some small measure of discretion in the administration of these fair labor standards. The course of this discretion must be charted within the narrow channels of guides and standards written into the bill by the Congress.

Under the provisions of the bill now being discussed in the Senate, this board will not have the great arbitrary power attributed to it by those forces now seeking desperately to prevent the passage of this legislation. Under the terms of the Senate bill, as far as wages are concerned, it can fix a minimum in any industry not to exceed 40 cents an hour. It may fix less if conditions warrant it, although, personally, I hope that no conditions will be found so deplorable as to warrant persons working for less than 40 cents an hour. [Applause.] But it cannot in any way interfere with or alter or diminish wages secured through the medium of collective bargaining or other lawful means. It has only a limited power to regulate wages; it can only set the floor below which no employer can go. It has not in any sense, the power to regulate wages generally. It may eliminate the employment of children under 16 years of age and those under 18 years of age in hazardous industries. It may prescribe a maximum 40-hour week—but it has no power to require that working hours shall not be less than 40 hours a week. In short, this will be a maximum-hour and minimum-wage board, clothed only with the power to act for the protection of those who need legislative protection—those underpaid, underprivileged workers who are unorganized and have not the power of collective bargaining to protect them from the exploitation of unscrupulous employers.

Gentlemen, we have had in operation for some 8 or 9 months now an act based upon a similar philosophy. I refer to the act regulating the letting of public contracts known as the Walsh-Healey Act.

That legislation resulted from an investigation conducted by a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, over which I had the honor to preside. The investigation and subsequent hearings were conducted by the committee to determine the extent of departure from N. R. A. code standards of concerns performing Government contracts.

Investigation revealed that within a few weeks after the demise of N. R. A., industry having Government contracts had lengthened hours and decreased pay. Particularly was this true in certain sweated industries which were taking advantage of substandard and antisocial practices in order to submit low bids on contracts of the Government.

The so-called Walsh-Healey bill, providing for a ban on child and convict labor, 8-hour day, 40-hour week, and decent prevailing minimum wages, was enacted by Congress during the last session to combat these conditions. The legislation was predicated on the philosophy that the Government should not be placed in the paradoxical position of urging the adoption of fair and just standards, on the one hand; and on the other, encouraging antisocial practices through the bounty of its contracts; and further, that the Government should set the example to industry by insisting on fair standards being maintained by its contractors. This legislation has been in effect about 10 months now, and for the first few months its administration was handicapped because of a lack of appropriations. Many industries that at first resented the idea of any governmental regulation endeavored to defeat its purposes by combining to refrain from submitting bids for Government contracts. The most dramatic of the strikes against the fundamental policy of the Government was the obstinate refusal of the steel industry to adopt a 40-hour week so that it might bid under the Walsh-Healey Act. This situation was carried to the extent of threatening to hold up the naval-armament program and caused a request from the Navy Department that an exemption be made for the steel industry. The Secretary of Labor, however, refused to grant this request, when Congress had set as a basic standard for industries desiring to supply the Government, the 8-hour day and 40-hour week.

The refusal of the Secretary of Labor to grant this request for exemption was doubtless an important factor in the decision of the steel industry to adopt the labor provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act. The direct effect of this reduction in weekly hours of some million steel employees from a 44-hour, and in some cases a 48-hour week, to a 40-hour week, with overtime payment of time and a half for all hours in excess of 40, cannot even be approximately estimated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. However, I quote from a clipping which followed this action by a certain steel industry, an Associated Press dispatch from Pittsburgh, printed in the Star-Tribune, Providence, R. I., April 10, 1937. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include this editorial in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. I read:

PITTSBURGH, April 10.—A wave of buying swept steel towns in western Pennsylvania today as the mills distributed the first of the bigger pay rolls under the industry's new wage scale.

In the Pittsburgh area the Jones & Laughlin Corporation led off yesterday with fatter pay envelopes; and "Big Steel" followed today at the Homestead plant of the Carnegie Illinois Steel Corporation.

In the Shenango Valley, to the north, industrial workers drew their first $1,000,000 pay since 1929. Six big companies paid workers there this week end.

The Jones & Laughlin Corporation employs 25,000 men. More than 50,000 workers in the industry shared in the $100,000,000 a year increase granted a month ago.

One worker estimated the individual increase ranged from $10 to $15 a week. The workweek was reduced from 48 to 40 hours, and the men were paid time and a half for overtime.

Cash registers in the south side of Pittsburgh, where the Jones & Laughlin plant is located, clicked busily as workers crowded into stores.

Housefurnishings and clothing attracted the most buyers, but one woman jubilantly spent part of her husband's pay increase in a beauty shop. "This", she said, as she sat in the enameled chair, "is the first permanent wave I've had in a year. I'm putting some of the extra dough into keeping my looks."

Other industries, such as copper and oil and many smaller industries, first were inclined to strike against bidding under the Walsh-Healey terms for Government contracts; but after the example set by steel they soon came into line, and at the present time the Government is finding no difficulty in making purchases under the labor conditions set by this act. Thus the example set by the Government of decent and fair labor standards has already carried into industry generally and has added many thousands of dollars to the purchasing power of the workers. Over 3,767 contracts amounting to $203,613,317 have been awarded in 10 months, subject to the Walsh-Healey Act. These contracts have been performed in more than 2,199 different establishments situated in all parts of the country.

At the present time, industry and Government contractors for furnishing supplies to the Government are not finding fault with compliance with the terms of this act, and I know that many of them are, in fact, happy that there is such an act on the statute books to protect them against the chiselers, sweatshops, and unfair competition.

I venture to say that every argument that will be pressed in opposition to this legislation was advanced by the opponents of the Walsh-Healey Act in striving to defeat it. The United States Chamber of Commerce and the other reactionary manufacturer's associations were just as ardent in their opposition to that legislation as they are now anxious to bring about the defeat of this legislation.

Charges were made that the Walsh-Healey bill was sectional in nature and designed to take away industry from certain sections of the country. Let me set out a brief partial list of the States receiving Government contracts under this legislation: New York, California, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Missouri, Montana, Connecticut, Minnesota, Mississippi, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Arkansas, Washington, Texas, Colorado, Tennessee, Ohio, Utah, Wisconsin, Indiana, Iowa, Philippine Islands, Kentucky, New Mexico, Oregon, South Carolina, Virginia, Louisiana, Indiana, New Jersey, Arizona, Delaware, Oklahoma, Kansas, Florida, Georgia. Gentlemen, does this sound like a sectional proposition? Does not this prove conclusively that there is a need in every State of this Union for higher labor standards? Here we have employers from virtually every State in the Union finding it possible to conform to provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act which are as high—and in many cases higher—than the upper limit of the powers conferred on the Board by this legislation. And gentlemen, I call to your attention that even many of the employers who vigorously opposed the Walsh-Healey Act at the outset are now enthusiastically in favor of it.

Much has been said about differentials between high and low wage areas and subtle attempts are being made by enemies of this legislation to unjustifiedly arouse sectional antagonism. Just remember that this legislation is not designed to equalize wages. It is not even a wage-fixing proposition. Insofar as wages are concerned, under the terms of the Senate bill, the board is only authorized to set a lower limit to labor standards below which employers cannot go and, under the terms of the Senate bill, if the board were to exercise its powers to the fullest extent possible, it could provide only that the minimum wage paid by any employer for a 40-hour week should be $16. If any of these employees are fortunate enough to receive 50 out of 52 weeks' work a year, they will receive an annual income of $800. I do not believe there is anyone who will contend that, whether it be North, South, East, or West, $800 will do any more than provide for a family the barest necessities of existence. Statistics show that the necessities of life are virtually as costly in low-wage areas as in high-wage areas. The difference is almost minute and indeterminable. And I am sure that no one will maintain that the pangs of hunger and the privation of improper clothing and shelter are more vitally felt in high-wage areas than in low-wage areas. I do not believe there is any Member of this House who desires to perpetuate standards lower than this. And I do not believe that the majority of the American employers, wherever situated, are at variance with the principle of eliminating oppressive wage and hour conditions. It is only a minority of chiselers, sweatshop operators, and labor exploiters that are fighting desperately to preserve a vested interest in the spoliation and exploitation of human misery.

I do not entirely agree with the bill that is now before the Senate. I feel that its method emphasizes the exception rather than the rule. It is my conviction that American industry generally is ready, willing, and able to assume a 40-hour week and, at the very least, a 40-cent per hour minimum wage. I believe that this legislation should definitely set out a 40-hour week and a definite minimum wage as the floor below which no one would be asked to perform labor, leaving the field, as the Senate bill does now, above these levels clear and unrestricted for collective bargaining between employer and employee.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HEALEY. I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. SHORT. Would not the able gentleman from Massachusetts favor an amendment providing that labor in certain industries, for instance, fisheries and canneries which deal with perishable products, could work longer hours?

Mr. HEALEY. I stated earlier in my remarks that this was a very difficult problem, that many complexities would arise in trying to adopt fixed hours and wages, and that there should be sufficient flexibility in any law to allow justice to be done.

Mr. SHORT. I trust that the Committee on Labor of the House will include an amendment to take care of hardship cases.

Mr. HEALEY. Exceptions to the maximum hour and minimum wage should be made only on the showing of cogent and substantial reasons. Experience under the administration of the Walsh-Healey Act adequately demonstrates that the principle of the 40-hour week and decent minimum wage is practical and it has been found that industries where these terms prove to be too onerous are the extremely infrequent exception. I feel that this justifies the passage of legislation which will set a decent minimum wage for a 40-hour week with flexible provisions so that no hardship will result in bona-fide cases where an exception is required.

Gentlemen, before closing my remarks, I wish to pay tribute to that great statesman of the South, Senator HUGO L. BLACK, coauthor of this legislation. He has worked relentlessly in his committee, sparing neither himself nor his committee in his great efforts to bring out a fair and just bill. I believe American industry, American labor, and particularly workers in the low-wage areas of our Nation, owe to him and to the members of the Joint Committee on Labor a great debt of gratitude.

I wish also to pay tribute to one whose voice has been stilled, but whose ideals will live in this legislation. Always an ardent champion of the needs of the underprivileged, he was an early pioneer in the great movement for wage-and-hour legislation and, years ago, he charted the course which we have at last realized we must follow. Were he with us here now, I know the voice of our late dearly beloved colleague, Congressman William P. Connery, Jr., would be raised above mine in advocacy of wage and hour legislation. This legislation must come and it will constitute a vibrant living memorial to the memory of Billy Connery. He has won the peace of the truly great. But were it possible for any mortal man to pass through the great veil, Billy Connery would be with us again, fighting the great fight for the cause of the underprivileged, fighting as only he could fight, be the odds against him great or small, for this measure that means so much to the American worker and to American industry. His was never the ear to heed the alarmist cries of the forces of reaction. His was never the fear to fight the cause of those in need. He would not falter on the very threshold of the achievement of this great objective. And we must not falter.

Gentlemen, there are 8,000,000 unemployed today, yearning, pleading, begging for work. For all these Americans—able, willing, anxious to work—there is little hope, little promise unless we take action. For many of them there is not even relief because of the drastic cuts in relief appropriations. They have waited, yearned, hoped, and repeatedly given us their mandate to push on with this legislation. Can we bid them still wait in anxious hope? Can we keep them still waiting, going deeper and deeper into debt, growing more and more desperate, suffering heartbreak and disillusionment, when it is within our power to remedy this situation now?

During the last campaign we espoused a solemn obligation to take action to eliminate substandard living conditions and remedy the problem of unemployment. Our President, the leader of the majority party, whose standard we all carried in November, in a historic Nation-wide address, said, "And for all these things, we have just begun to fight." The fight is here and now—the victory can be won. Let us carry on and pass suitable wage and hour legislation before we adjourn. [Applause.]

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Can exceptions be made in these hardship cases? Is there provision that would set a maximum or limit for the number of hours a week?

Mr. HEALEY. Under the terms of the bill the board is authorized to set a maximum, but not less than 40 hours a week. They cannot set a 39- or a 38-hour week, but they could set a 40- or 42- or 44-hour week under the terms of the Senate bill.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. I mean in the exceptions that were referred to. Could a maximum of, say, 60 hours a week be set and also the requirement of time and a half for overtime?

Mr. HEALEY. I assume the board, after hearing a case and taking all of the circumstances into consideration, would set for that particular industry wage provisions as well as the maximum hours, within the scope of their power to do so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] took the floor of the House with a view to emphasizing the existence of monopoly in the radio-broadcasting field, the dangers inherent in that monopoly, and certain scandalous conditions believed to exist in that field hand in hand with monopoly. His remarks appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 19.

The gentleman from Texas emphasized among other things the monopoly enjoyed by the three big broadcasting companies in America, the practice which has grown up of undesirable trafficking in licenses, and the possibility of unloading stock at unjustified values on the public.

In the course of his remarks he made the following statement, which I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is well within the bounds of reason to say that unless this body accepts the unchallenged statements of the Chairman of the Communications Commission and enacts legislation, if such is needed, which will, in reality, protect the American people from stock-selling rackets and the radio monopoly, then every Member of this House, as well as this administration, is equally guilty if we later find that an unsuspecting public has been defrauded and looted by these stock racketeers through our negligence or through the willingness of some to listen to the soft voice of those who represent these monopolists and racketeers.

At another point he made this further statement, which I will quote:

> Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I just want to say this. We have this appalling situation before us: Resolutions to investigate this great communications field have been pending before this House since early in the session, and no action has been taken by the Rules Committee. I can think of nothing that is of more importance pending before the Congress than such an investigation to clear up the entire communications field, to the end that we see what it is that is so all-powerful that it is continuing to control and mold public opinion in this country to suit their own selfish interests, and I hope we will soon have some action by the Rules Committee to give this House an opportunity to vote upon this important question.

Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Texas renders a real service to the people of this country when he urges the adoption of such a resolution. I congratulate him on his endeavor to fearlessly expose the situation as he sees it in this field at the present time. Personally I am happy to see one who always speaks so strongly for the administration joining in the appeal for a thoroughgoing investigation into the field of radio broadcasting.

I have personally been interested in a proper investigation for a considerable period of time. About 18 months ago I recommended an investigation on the floor of the House in the light of testimony by the Federal Communications Commission before the Appropriations Committee. About 6 months ago I renewed that recommendation in the light of further testimony by the Commission and evidence obtained from other sources. My remarks at this session of Congress appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 1 and February 3.

Subsequently I appeared before the Rules Committee of the House in support of a resolution of investigation, which had been introduced in the House in January, I believe, by our late and beloved colleague from Massachusetts, Billy Connery. The evidence available at the time seemed to me compelling. The evidence available at this time seems to me to be even more so. The response to such public statements as I have made in this connection, a response which has come from every section of the country, convinces me that the existing situation merits the most serious consideration of every Member of the House.

The Connery resolution has been pending before the Rules Committee now for a number of months. I know the Members of the committee have given it most careful consideration. Personally I can see no reason whatsoever why such resolution should not be favorably reported.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, with the words of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] in mind, that sufficient sentiment may develop in this House on both sides of the aisle to insure the favorable report and adoption of the resolution before we adjourn, in the interest of and for the protection of all the American people.

Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the problem of radio control, we are dealing with a broadcast band which is in effect a natural resource. We are dealing with a limited number of frequencies or channels which must be allocated and regulated so as to assure the maximum return to all the people to whom the channels belong. We are dealing also with an industry whose very existence is dependent upon the issue of Federal licenses, licenses for which the industry does not pay a single cent, licenses on the basis of which the industry commands an annual income estimated for 1937 at between one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and thirty-five millions of dollars.

Congress has attempted to regulate broadcasting first through the Federal Radio Act of 1927 and then through the Federal Communications Act of 1934. The two acts are substantially the same in terms insofar as the regulation of radio is concerned.

No one can read the two acts referred to without realizing that Congress had in mind certain definite objectives.

Among those objectives were the elimination of private ownership in the channels of interstate and foreign radio transmission, the elimination of undesirable trafficking in Federal licenses, the elimination of monopoly or the evils of monopoly. If there be any doubt in this connection, I suggest a careful reading of sections 301 to 314 of the Federal Communications Act of 1934 and the corresponding sections of the Federal Radio Act of 1937.

In section 301, for example, it is specifically stated that—

It is the purpose of this act, among other things, to maintain the control of the United States over all the channels of interstate and foreign radio transmission and to provide for the use of such channels, but not the ownership thereof, by persons for limited periods of time, under licenses granted by Federal authority, and no such license shall be construed to create any right, beyond the terms, conditions, and periods of the license.

In section 304 it is required that an applicant shall sign—

A waiver of any claim to the use of any particular frequency or of the ether as against the regulatory power of the United States because of the previous use of the same, whether by license or otherwise.

In section 309 it is provided that a station license—

Shall not vest in the licensee any right to operate the station nor any right in the use of the frequencies designated in the license beyond the term thereof, nor in any other manner than authorized therein.

Sections 307 to 310 make it clear that no license shall be granted for a longer term than 3 years, that no license shall be granted unless the—

Public interest, convenience, or necessity shall be served thereby.

And that no license shall be—

Transferred, assigned, or in any manner, either voluntarily or involuntarily, disposed of unless the Commission shall, after securing full information, decide that said transfer is in the public interest and shall give its consent in writing.

Sections 311 to 314 emphasize the determination of Congress to eliminate monopoly or the evils of monopoly, specifying, among other things, the conditions under which a station license may be revoked by the Commission.

These and other provisions in the two acts make clear the intent of Congress to achieve, among others, the three objectives referred to.

Nevertheless it appears from the evidence available today that we have failed to achieve any one of them. It appears that we are confronted by a virtual monopoly in the hands of the three big broadcasting companies of the Nation—Columbia, Mutual, and National. It appears that we have failed to eliminate private ownership or its equivalent in radio channels. It appears that we have failed to eliminate undesirable trafficking in radio licenses, with all the possibilities with which we have been familiar in the past in other fields, for the capitalization of earnings and profits to the detriment of the American people. The question is squarely raised whether additional legislation is not essential. A thoroughgoing investigation seems to be vital, with a view to the proper determination of this question.

I shall not take the time of the House to discuss in detail the evidence of monopoly which has been made available from authoritative sources.

From the testimony in the Federal Communications Commission before the Appropriations Committee, from public statements by present or former members of the Federal Communications Commission and the Federal Radio Commission, from publications of standing in the broadcasting field, from other sources, there appears to be abundant evidence of virtual monopoly.

All the 40 so-called clear channels are owned, operated, or affiliated with the three big broadcasting chains. Ninety-six percent of the broadcasting stations with full time or substantial power are said to be owned or in some way tied in with the three big chains. Of 2,500,000 watts of full-time night power allocated to the industry, less than 60,000 watts, or 3 percent, is said to be available to stations which are not affiliated with the "big three." No independent full-time station is licensed to operate at night with a power of more than 1,000 watts, in contrast to some 200 stations affiliated with the "big three", many of which have 50,000 watts, one of which has 500,000 watts. In several States, such as North Carolina, Rhode Island, and Utah, it is said that there is no independent station operated at night. In other States, I am informed, including Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Virginia, and Washington, less than 1 percent of the power authorized for use at night is available to independent stations. This and other evidence indicates, in some measure at least, the extent of the monopoly of the "big three."

Nor shall I take the time of the House to discuss in detail the evidence available indicating that to date we have failed to eliminate private ownership or its equivalent in radio channels, that we have failed to eliminate undesirable trafficking in radio licenses. I call the attention of the Members of the House in this connection to the tables inserted in my remarks in the House on February 1 and February 3 of this year, to the tables appearing in the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill for 1938, on pages 370, 376, and 1038, and to the testimony of the Federal Communications Commission in this connection, particularly that commencing on page 367 of the hearings. Instance after instance appears of the transfer of licensed broadcasting stations for a consideration far in excess of the replacement cost of the station transferred. Other instances appear of a transfer in the form of a lease for periods in excess of the original license limited by law for a maximum of 3 years. All these transfers are under Federal control.

One of the striking cases of this character is offered in the transfer of Station KNX, Los Angeles, to the Columbia Broadcasting System. The replacement value of the station amounted to about $217,000. After the deduction of accounts receivable, cash, and good will, the value of the physical property amounted, I am told, to be about $63,000. The consideration paid for the assignment was $1,250,000, or about 20 times the value of the physical property. Among the leases referred to is a lease with a replacement value of less than $500,000 for an annual rental of $219,000 for a period of 7 years, a lease for a period of 10 years with an option for renewal of 10 years and still another lease for a period of 99 years. The lessor in certain instances appears to obtain not only a fixed rental but a substantial percentage of the profits realized by the lessee.

In my remarks before the House on February 1 as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I made the following statement:

I submit that the testimony given to your committee by the Communications Commission indicates that today we are in sight of a monopoly of the air by the big broadcasting companies of the country, with all the possibilities for capitalizing that monopoly into earnings and profits to the detriment of the American people with which we are all familiar in other fields.

May I refer again to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] in this connection? In the course of those remarks he indicates that the Columbia Broadcasting System, with an actual cash investment of less than $1,600,000, has realized in cash dividends since December 26, 1931, almost $8,000,000, and is about to list on the New York Stock Exchange for possible sale to the public, after compliance with the requirements of the Securities and Exchange Commission, shares of stock having a total present valuation of about $58,000,000. I assume no responsibility for these figures. It is difficult to believe that they are correct. If they are anywhere near correct, however, it would seem to afford a striking example of the capitalization of a Government license issued as a gratuity and at all times under Federal control.

I have before me, Mr. Speaker, an examiner's report to the Federal Communications Commission, signed by P. W. Seward and dated December 29, 1936, referring to the application to the Commission by radio station WOAI for a transfer of the control of the station to the Columbia Broadcasting System. The present value of the station is given as approximately $141,000; the consideration to be paid at approximately $825,000. The report recommends denial of the application.

Without taking the time or space required to insert the entire report in the RECORD, I will insert at this point in my remarks a number of quotations from the examiner's consideration of the issues and the law, because of their bearing on the general question under consideration:

In the early days of its existence the Federal Radio Commission recognized the evils that would be attendant upon the promiscuous transfer of control of broadcast stations by their licensees.

In the case of Pote (Station WLOE) v. Federal Radio Commission (67 Fed. (2d) 509, at p. 510), the Court, after having quoted section 12 of the Radio Act, which is almost identical with section 310 (b) of the Communications Act, said:

"The importance of this decision was stressed when before Congress as a means of preventing the barter and sale of licenses whereby a single interest might without constraint acquire many stations by purchase or otherwise."

Broadly speaking, it seems to be the contention of counsel that this Commission is not concerned and has no authority to consider the amount for which a radio-broadcast station is to be sold, and that applicant may assign a value to the license and frequency under the guise of goodwill, going value, or expectancy of renewal of license, subject to the standard of public interest, convenience, and necessity.

A complete answer to this contention is found in the act.

In considering the matter it must be remembered that after enjoying the privileges of a Government gratuity for 12 years, after reaping immense profits and establishing a fortune therefrom, he now requests the Government to approve the sale of the gratuity at an enormous figure of about $800,000 above the book value, thereby proposing further a capitalization of the gratuity and charge on the future use of the frequency involved.

The difference of the radio business from other businesses is that the broadcast business is conducted under license from the Government, at present on the basis of a 6-month period in practice, and the maximum period of 3 years under the law. Without such license there is no business to sell and even the tangible assets have only a second-hand and, to some extent, only junk value. * * * Applicant may divest himself of the two elements of ownership in a license to operate a radio broadcast station which he is permitted by law to enjoy—the possession and the right of possession—but when he attempts to sell something which he values at nearly $700,000 he is exercising domination over the third element of ownership—the right of property—which he does not possess.

To permit transferor to attach "going value" to the radio facilities in this case would be to permit him to escape the just exercise of the regulatory power vested in this Commission by section 301 of the act, which sets up an absolute bar to the sale of radio facilities.

Since the licensee is prohibited by statute from owning a license, call letter, frequency, or channel, a conclusive presumption arises that he will not be permitted to assign any value to or to sell any goodwill the station may possess.

To permit a licensee to place a value on the license or frequency under the guise of "goodwill", or any other term, would be to permit it to assert a vested interest therein, contrary to the plain and emphatic language of the statute and would amount to the capitalization of the Government gratuity.

While a radio broadcast station is declared by the act not to be a common carrier, it might well be considered as a public utility, and there is a marked similarity between the two. Each serves the public, each must furnish acceptable service, each operates at the sufferance of government by authority of license, certificate of public convenience and necessity, or franchise, and they are similar in other respects. The one outstanding difference between a radio broadcast station as a public utility and a common carrier is that the rates charged by the common carrier for its services are regulated by law. They are not permitted to earn more than a reasonable return on their investment. They are not permitted to place a value of "goodwill" under any circumstances and are not permitted to capitalize "going value" as a separate item. The broadcast station may charge for its services all the traffic will bear.

When public utilities are not permitted under any circumstances to place a value on "goodwill" and cannot set up going value as a separate item in a rate base, it would appear that equity would prohibit a radio broadcast station from denominating as "goodwill" or "going value" its license, frequency, and channel for the purpose of sale even in the absence of specific statutory inhibition.

The right of any person operating a business predicated on a license issued by the Government to attach any value for the purpose of the sale, to goodwill, or going-concern value by reason of holding such license is challenged as amounting to a domination over such license equal to an assertion of ownership and to the sale of a Government gratuity, which is not in the public interest, and, in this case, is in violation of the Communications Act of 1934.

All of the acts of Congress and the decisions of the Court negative the idea that a licensee of a radio broadcast station should ever be permitted to place a value on the license, frequency, or channel or be permitted to traffic in radio facilities or to assert or exercise "ownership" thereof.

The fact that the modus procedendi for the transfer of radio license or the transfer of the stock of a licensee corporation is not set forth in the Communications Act indicates only that Congress left the details of such matters to the Commission.

It appears most certain that if the Congress had intended to permit the barter, sale, and trafficking in radio-broadcast license, frequencies, or channels it would have fixed a standard for the guidance of this Commission in arriving at a proper value.

The language in section 301 of the act is not general or ambiguous; it is clear and emphatic, and denies the right of anyone to acquire a right of property in radio license, frequencies, or channels.

To permit a corporation engaged in broadcasting to purchase the control of a licensee corporation, which has been authorized to use a given frequency, at a price which is based upon the use of said frequency for a period of time in excess of the then extent of said license would carry with it the implied promise of the Commission that the license for the use of said frequency is to be continued. This is the same as giving a license for an unlimited time and amounts to the creation of ownership of the frequency by the holders of a license and transferee and is unlawful.

The contention of the transferor that this Commission is without authority to deny this application and that a grant thereof would be in the public interest is predicated on a fallacy and his position is untenable. Private profit is not the measure of public interest nor is it the criterion for the interpretation of statutes. To follow the plain provisions of the act which presents the expressed legislative intent of Congress as set out in section 301, shown above, is the only way to safeguard the public interest.

After a careful consideration of the facts and pertinent sections of the act, it is concluded that a grant of this application would be in violation of section 301, as it would amount to the recognition of an assertion of ownership and sale of radio facilities; that it would be in violation of section 310 (b), as it is considered that such grant would not be in the public interest and that the grant would not serve public interest, convenience, or necessity.

Mr. Speaker, the essential evidence is not complete but it is sufficiently complete to indicate that Congress has not succeeded in providing such regulation for radio broadcasting as is vital in the interest of the American people as a whole. Unless some action is taken, there is every indication that we may witness again the scandals in this field which we have witnessed in other fields in the past.

A thoroughgoing and impartial investigation into the entire situation should serve among other things to establish the extent, effects, and dangers of monopoly in this great field for publicity and propaganda. It should serve to determine the extent to which the elimination of private ownership and trafficking in licenses has been accomplished. It should serve to indicate what further steps should be taken to limit profiteering and to protect the investor, the advertiser, and the consumer. It should serve to throw light on the matter of proper program control. It should serve to determine the earnings of the industry, whether or not rates now charged are reasonable, and what contribution, if any, the industry may be fairly asked to make to the Federal Treasury.

A comprehensive study of the entire situation seems to me imperative in the national interest.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio speech which I made in Washington last night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a certain address made by the Secretary of Labor for the District of Columbia before the Professional Women's Club.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts from editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

STABILIZATION OF FARM PRICES

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, some of the metropolitan dailies are insisting that Congress adjourn. There seems to be a studied unanimity of opinion on the subject, and the papers which are least in sympathy with the President and the unfinished legislative program are most vociferous in their insistence that it is time for Congress to quit and go home. They have grown suddenly solicitous of the health and comfort of Members of the House. They tell us that Congress has worked very hard, that Washington is uncomfortable, and their health is in great peril, and that their duty to themselves and their constituents requires that they take a much needed and well-deserved vacation.

Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I do not think there has ever been a more pleasant summer in Washington, so far as the weather is concerned, than we are having this summer. And I do not believe Congress has ever done less actual work in any session during the summer months than we have done the last several months we have been in session. Furthermore, the health and comfort of Congressmen is a matter of no concern whatever to the average newspaper.

The real reason, of course, why they are so eager for Congress to adjourn is that the interests which they represent are wholly out of sympathy with the President, the administration, the leadership of the Congress, and the legislative program still undisposed of. They are especially out of sympathy with one item in that program I would like to discuss briefly just at this time. It is the most essential, the most indispensable item in the entire list, the one for which there is greatest need, and the one to the enactment of which we are more completely committed than any other, the enactment of legislation to stabilize farm prices.

The farmer faces a serious situation. We have grown the largest wheat crop, the largest corn crop, and the largest cotton crop since 1931. Vast surpluses are being produced which, if thrown on a glutted market, will demoralize prices and bankrupt not only the producer but all business dependent on farm patronage. After 3 years of crop failures, when the farmer at last has something to sell, he is going to be robbed of the fruits of 3 years of toil and sacrifice because Congress refuses the President's request for legislation to stabilize farm prices. No corn is left. The bottoms of the cribs have been scraped bare. No new corn will be on the market before October. Cash corn has been selling in my neighborhood as high as $1.50 a bushel. And yet the speculators on the board of trade are already hammering down the price of the growing crop, and when cash corn was $1.46 a bushel at the elevator December corn was quoted in the corn pit at 72 cents and is still dropping. Corn, cotton, and wheat are all on the toboggan while everything the farmer must buy is rising as rapidly as farm products are falling. And Congress, instead of considering a farm bill, is busy passing laws to help labor and industry and increase the price of their products to the farmer.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am very much interested in farm legislation and have voted for practically every farm bill. However, we have been here 7 months and have known of this situation, yet at this very minute there is not a farm bill here for consideration. How long would the gentleman wait under such circumstances?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. May I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] that there are four or five farm bills which have been presented to the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am talking about the so-called farm program about which we first heard not more than 2 weeks ago. I am talking about some comprehensive farm bill to cover this program, which is not before us at this moment. I have heard a lot of talk around here about "complete this program, pass this legislation, stay here until we do this and that", and I have heard some enthusiastic young Democrats take the floor, but I have never seen them do anything about it except talk about it.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I may say to the gentleman from New York that these farm bills may not be as comprehensive as the gentleman thinks they ought to be, but they have been sent to the Committee on Agriculture. For some reason or other the committee has not reported them. A petition has been on file for 60 days with reference to one of these bills, but the conservative element of this Congress has been kicking and bucking against any kind of a "sign-up" program. This is the reason we have not done anything for the farmer. The same thing happened 2 years ago, and it is happening again today. I agree with what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] states and with the position he takes.

The farmer has had no legislation in his behalf, and he has no security today except that which comes to him through the benefits under the Soil Conservation Act. If you let this go on, havoc is going to be wrought in the Democratic Party.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not believe this condition should go on. I believe the farmer should be taken care of. However, what I am emphasizing is that there is no excuse for his not having been taken care of during the last 7 months.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, may I take this opportunity of absolving the committee from any responsibility for the failure to pass a farm program. In the first place, the farm organizations have not agreed upon a program. In the second place, any program which has been introduced during this session with the approval of the administration and which has any semblance of being an administration bill covering a general farm program would not be applicable for this year, anyway. Therefore, such a program, if enacted into law, would not have helped the situation to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is referring. The so-called Farm Bureau bill, as well as the "ever-normal granary" bill, sponsored and supported by the Secretary of Agriculture, do not apply to this year's crops. The latter bill was not introduced in Congress until May 17. Therefore, the blame for the failure to pass this legislation should not be placed upon the Committee on Agriculture.

There are bills, however, of a general character which would give relief to agriculture, such as the measure introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], and the bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER]. These bills have not been given any encouragement by the administration and have not had a ghost of a chance of being enacted.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I did not intend to place any blame on the committee, of which the distinguished gentleman is a member. I am talking about the entire situation. If you want something done, do not wait until the eleventh hour. Whoever is responsible could have started in January——

Mr. BOILEAU. The Committee on Agriculture has worked as hard as any committee in this House. We have reported out bills that we have not been able to get a rule on——

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. What bill, for instance?

Mr. BOILEAU. The sugar bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Let me forever brand that canard that has been going around here. The Rules Committee has never yet been asked for a rule on the sugar bill, and I hope this is published to the world.

Mr. BOILEAU. The committee has worked hard on the bill which the committee reported out. I do not blame the gentleman from New York at all, but I say that the bill has not been brought up, and so far as I have seen, it is not on any of the so-called "must" lists issued by the administration or by any administration spokesman in the last few weeks.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. We have heard a lot of criminations and recriminations. The leaders of the Democratic Party controlling the situation here have engaged in this argument. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri, who is one of the leaders, the acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and who should know, if anybody in this House knows, where the hitch is. Will the gentleman tell us why we have been here since January and the bills to which he refers have not received consideration by the men who must give consent and approbation before we can hope to consider the bills in the House? Will the gentleman tell us that?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the colloquy reveals a very gratifying situation. Every Member who has spoken in the last few minutes has expressed himself as heartily favoring agricultural legislation. They all concede that the farm situation is critical and that some steps ought to be taken by the Congress at this session to meet the situation. In view of this unanimity I trust the time is ripe to take a little of the time we have been devoting so lavishly to labor and industrial legislation and insure the farmer a fair wage for his labor and an honest price for his products.

In this connection permit me to readvert to the suggestion of my distinguished friend from Wisconsin to the effect that none of the legislation so far proposed could help this year's crop.

Mr. BOILEAU. No; I did not say that. I referred to legislation introduced with administration support. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] has a splendid measure that would help this year's crop, and so has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER]—the cost-production bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I agree with the gentleman in his warm commendation of the legislation proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], but to keep the RECORD straight let me call his attention to the provision in the bill to which he refers providing for loans on crops which will be available on cotton, corn, and all other crops now growing and to be harvested between now and the next session of Congress.

This is exactly what we need this fall. We are producing a surplus of both corn and cotton. The corn crop this fall is now estimated to approximate 2,600,000,000 bushels, and already in response to this estimate and the manipulations of the gamblers operating on the exchanges, the price of corn is dropping like a bucket in the well.

The yield this year is just about double last year's crop. But at the rate at which corn prices are falling——

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will permit me to proceed. I shall be glad to yield later.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In due time. Permit me to complete this statement. At the rate at which corn prices are falling, farmers will get for this year's crop of 2,600,000,000 bushels of corn less than they got for the 1,300,000 bushels they had last year.

If the loan provision in the bill to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers should become effective, we could maintain the price of corn to the farmer this fall, just as we did in 1934. And the same is true of the price of cotton. And the entire Nation would benefit because every dollar the farmer gets under present stringent conditions goes into immediate circulation.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. As soon as I have completed this very brief statement.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, I will wait.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the union wage scale is today the highest in the history of the country, with no prospect anywhere of a reduction. However meritorious pending labor legislation may be, there is no special emergency. A delay of a few weeks would not be material; nor is there any particular occasion for instantaneous action on pending legislation in behalf of industry. Prices of industrial commodities are at a peak and rapidly rising.

On the contrary, unless we get a farm bill through at this session the farmers of the country will stand helplessly by watching the price of the first real crop they have had in 3 years drop, day by day, while every item entering into their cost of living and cost of production is rising.

In view of this situation—the relatively favorable position of labor, the comparatively satisfactory conditions in industry, and the desperate need of agriculture—a need which every speaker here this afternoon has conceded, and which the President has emphasized—which of the three should have first consideration by the Congress?

And yet it is announced that Congress will dispose of legislation fixing minimum wages and maximum hours for union labor and legislation fixing prices for industry, both of which place an added and growing burden on the farmer, while his own wages and prices are dropping, and then adjourn for a "much-needed rest."

Mr. Speaker, I am strong for labor. I favor a high wage for any man who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow. But how can the farmer, who is the ultimate consumer, pay high wages unless he gets an honest wage for his own labor and a fair price for his own product? This Congress is pledged to agricultural parity, but instead of bringing agriculture up to a plane of economic equality with labor and industry the discrepancy between farm and factory prices and between farm and union wages is widening daily; and it is now proposed that for the rest of the session we accelerate that growing discrepancy by passing laws to raise wages and reduce hours of labor and laws to raise prices of industrial products, while the farmer, left to shift for himself, is drifting inevitably back to 15-cent corn and 5-cent cotton.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope the gentleman will get time to answer my question. The gentleman is diagnosing the case. We do not need a diagnosis. That stage has passed. What I want to know is just who is to blame for the delay? Whom is the gentleman criticizing? He is castigating somebody, because the House has not considered the legislation which he thinks should be considered. Whom does he blame? Whom is he castigating? Whom should we go after?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am castigating the same agencies which exploited the farmer during the memorable decade between 1922 and 1932; the same influences which held high revel at the expense of the farmer during the administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover; the same interests which found the farmer at the high tide of prosperity and left him at the end of three Republican administrations in the most deplorable conditions in the history of American agriculture.

Mr. MICHENER. In this House? I am talking about legislation passed by this House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is not a new problem in the House. It came in shortly after the gentleman came to Congress.

Mr. MICHENER. Does not the New Deal apply to the farmer.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The New Deal saved agriculture. The gentleman's party sold the farmer down the river and corn went down to 12 cents; wheat, 30 cents; cotton, 5 cents; hogs, $2.50; and all other farm products in proportion. The New Deal brought corn back up to $1.25; wheat, $1.30; hogs, $12; cotton, 15 cents; and was rapidly bringing all agricultural prices up to parity.

Now that the Supreme Court, with which the gentleman from Michigan apparently concurs—for I never heard him express any difference of opinion—has invalidated the A. A. A., the law giving the farmer agricultural equality, the gentleman offers no remedy. If the gentleman from Michigan has a remedy, we would be glad to consider it.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I am trying to get at. The gentleman from Missouri is a farm leader. He certainly must have a remedy or he would not be protesting as he is this afternoon. I want to know who is to blame for not bringing the gentleman's program in and giving it consideration. There are bills before the Agricultural Committee. The gentleman says that the Agricultural Committee is not to blame. The bills are there.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman is a member of the House, and the Agricultural Committee to which he refers will be glad to consider any measure the gentleman offers.

Mr. MICHENER. Why does the gentleman not go to the White House and get permission to take up the measures the gentleman advocates?

If the gentleman will get permission from the White House, perhaps you can give it consideration in this body.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. President Roosevelt has repeatedly asked Congress to consider the measure. His attitude toward farm legislation is in striking contrast with that of the three Presidents who preceded him. I suggest that the gentleman go back and read the vituperative message of President Coolidge vetoing the farm bill that would have prevented the depression and then read the letters and messages President Roosevelt has sent to this Congress urging prompt action to stabilize farm prices before they drop below the cost of production. Does the gentleman stand with Roosevelt or prefer to go back to Coolidge?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has insisted that we stay here until we do something for the farmer. I ask the gentleman if he will importune the leaders of the House to find out what we are going to do along this line. I would ask the gentleman when he extends his remarks to put into the RECORD just what he recommends that we do to get his proposals before the House. There is nothing before the House. There is only one way to get it here, and that is through the leadership of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be understood as having criticized the members of the Committee on Agriculture. I really believe they have done their best under the circumstances. I will tell you frankly what I think the trouble is. I think the trouble is with the rule that we have in this House, which requires 218 Members to sign a petition when the committee does not agree with your views on a bill. Now, that is plain talk, but that is what it is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. That is the trouble that we have had heretofore in this House since I have been here.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, we on this side did not make the rules.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Oh, I know, but I think we inherited it from you. [Laughter.] But my idea is this: Two years ago you hitched the Democratic horse outside, and he stayed outside. We were going to take it up and we never did take it up. We never did lead the horse around to the stable to eat. He is still there on the outside. Now, we have come to the end of the first half of this Congress, and we are notified that the farmer has to wait on the outside until next year. Maybe if we pass the wage and hour bill, maybe if we pass the housing bill, maybe if we do other things in Congress, then next January you may consider the farmer. But I will tell you, I have kind of cut my eye-teeth. As far as I am concerned, having lived in Oklahoma for 40 years, Washington to me is a kind of a summer resort. [Laughter.] I am willing to stay here until the night of the 2d of January if you people will just get together and do something to make farm life in America more secure. The way it is now, the only security on God's earth that the American farmer has is that which comes from grants under the Soil Conservation Act. If you do not give him that he has got nothing, and you can take it away from him any time you get ready to do it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 290).

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 290

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House, as follows:

Elections No. 1, Mr. A. LEONARD ALLEN, of Louisiana.

Elections No. 2, Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT, of Kentucky, and Mr. A. J. ELLIOTT, of California.

Elections No. 3, Mr. JACK NICHOLS, of Oklahoma.

The resolution was agreed to.

FARM AND SUGAR LEGISLATION

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not intend to indulge in this general discussion this afternoon, because everybody knows my views with reference to the farm program and that I am definitely committed to a permanent program for the relief of agriculture and for crop control. Whether that can come in the next few days or whether it will have to go over for a little while, I do not know. Only one thing is certain: The bill that the farm organizations, the Committee on Agriculture, and other interested people have been working on would not affect this year's crop anyhow.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In making the statement that we cannot affect this year's crop, has not the gentleman overlooked the fact that we can stabilize the price of corn, for instance, with loans, as we did in 1932–33? Overnight President Roosevelt advanced the price of corn by offering loans on corn cribbed on the farm. We have from now until October to affect this year's crop in the same way, not to mention other methods available for stabilizing prices of this year's crops.

Mr. RAYBURN. In reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] I may say that this is not all my problem. If I were the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House rolled into one, I could probably get some action.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But the gentleman will concede that we could pass legislation which would take care of this year's crops.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; if we could get it out of a committee and get all of the interested farm organizations to agree upon legislation. I understand that day before yesterday several members of the Committee on Agriculture met with the heads of three farm organizations only to find those three organizations not in accord on any agricultural program even at this late date in the session.

As to the matter of the sugar bill, I always take my responsibility, Mr. Speaker, and I want to say, following up what the gentleman from New York said, that the Rules Committee may be entirely absolved from any dereliction in reporting a rule for the consideration of the sugar bill. If it is to be laid at anybody's doorstep, I am willing to take it myself. For 3 weeks I have been doing all that I could to get people together on a sugar bill, because I feel very earnestly that the sugar question should be solved; that legislation should be passed at this session of Congress. I think that our sugar producers, both foreign and domestic, ought to know where they stand.

I understand that a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture of the House and a subcommittee from the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate are conferring with the President of the United States today to see if some accord cannot be reached. If legislation can be agreed upon so there will be no trouble, I shall certainly be the first, and I know the Speaker will be one of the first, to ask the chairman of the Rules Committee and his committee to report a rule for its consideration. I feel certain that there will be no trouble about that.

I simply thought it was only fair to the Committee on Rules that I make this statement. If anyone is to assume responsibility for there being no rule on the sugar bill, it should fall upon me. It has been only in an attempt to iron out these difficulties and to get these people together so that we could get a real effective sugar bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman will recall that in my remarks I did not refer to the sugar bill until I was asked what bill had not been granted a rule by the Committee on Rules. Then I said the sugar bill, that being the only one that came to my mind at the time.

I want to make it very clear that I was not criticizing either the majority leader or the chairman of the Committee on Rules, for it has been a very difficult task to get the various interests together.

I know they have been having conferences, even after the House committee approved the bill. I hope, however, that soon they will iron out their differences and report a bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have the same hope. I did not receive this from the gentleman from Wisconsin but from other sources this talk has been going on, and I thought it would be well to explain the situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. May I inquire of the gentleman why one branch of the industry, the sugar producer, should be singled out to be taken care of when all of the rest of the farmers in the country are to be left to the mercy of price manipulation and all protection for other crops is to be abandoned, and especially in view of the fact that whenever you put into effect sugar quotas you shut out the sugar of Cuba, you close the Cuban market to American lard and other American farm products, which means discriminating in favor of sugar and against corn and pork and other American farm products consumed in Cuba? Farmers raising sugar beets and corn are in good circumstances. Unlike the growers of wheat, corn, hogs, tobacco, and cotton, they do not have to worry about surpluses and weakened foreign demand. They can continue normal acreage and present prices. To encourage them to expand acreage is to close the Cuban market to vast quantities of other farm products. I am willing to go along and provide preferential conditions for producers of cane and beets, providing compensatory protection can be provided producers of other farm products against collapse in prices. But I cannot see why one crop and one section of the country should be insured prosperity while other farm crops and other sections of the country are abandoned.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think there is in the bill which will be reported any provision that will shut out Cuba. My thought is that the bill will be very liberal as far as Cuba is concerned.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The bill, as the gentleman understands, will limit the amount of sugar that may be imported into the United States from Cuba. The only way they have of buying our products, of which they consume large quantities, is by selling sugar in this country. Whenever you prevent them from exporting sugar to the United States you prevent us from exporting the products of both field and factory to Cuba.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2416. An act relating to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama.

3063. By Mr. O'MALLEY: Joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to pass House bill 6092, providing for reduction of interest rates of Home Owners' Loan Corporation mortgages and extending the amortization periods thereon to 25 years; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1937

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 22, 1937)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, July 29, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I must, in order to secure the presence of a quorum, ask that we have a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent in the performance of duty as members of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

I further announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are unavoidably detained from the Senate, and that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is detained at a meeting of the Joint Committee on Taxation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], having been appointed a member of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France, is absent on that duty.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR TIMBER TRESPASS ON UNITED STATES LANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide a measure of damages for trespass involving timber and other forest products upon lands of the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lawrence, Methuen, and Peabody, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish the Federal Reserve System as at present constituted, and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by Local No. 2 of the International Federation of Technical Engineers and Local No. 9, Bricklayers' Union, both of Brooklyn, N. Y., endorsing the so-called Schwellenbach resolution, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) favoring employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Seventeenth Annual Convention of the American Legion of Bronx County, N. Y., favoring the prompt enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Gavagan antilynching bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Neponsit Branch of the American League Against War and Fascism, of Neponsit, Rockaway Beach, N. Y., protesting against increased appropriations for the Army and Navy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BROWN of Michigan, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2476) for the relief of R. F. Lassly, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 998) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1810) for the relief of Carl E. Padgett, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 999) thereon.

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2138. A bill for the relief of Nelson W. Apple (Rept. No. 1000); and

S. 2139. A bill for the relief of Camille Carmignani (Rept. No. 1001).

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 886) authorizing the redemption by the United States Treasury of certain documentary revenue stamps now held by L. J. Powers, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1002) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2904) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1003) thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1802) to amend section 40 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1004) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2871) for the protection of certain enlisted men of the Army, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1005) thereon.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2794) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes relating to the purchase of metal for minor coins of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1006) thereon.

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2888) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1937, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1007) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2592) to repeal section 178 of the Criminal Code entitled "Issuing Notes Less Than $1", reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1008) thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2675) to amend certain sections of the Federal Credit Union Act, approved June 26, 1934 (Public, No. 467, 73d Cong.), reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1009) thereon.

Mr. RADCLIFFE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2761) authorizing the State of Maryland, by and through its State roads commission or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate certain bridges across streams, rivers, and navigable waters which are wholly or partly within the State, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1010) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 2873) to authorize the erection of a suitable memorial to Maj. Gen. William L. Sibert within the Canal Zone; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2874) requiring the deposit in a safe place ashore of the names and addresses of passengers sailing on vessels plying the inland or coastal waters of the United States; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BULOW:

A bill (S. 2875) to provide for the retirement of certain employees of the United States Government, for the payment of annuities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 2876) for the relief of Mark H. Doty; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 189) granting the consent of Congress to a compact between the States of New York and New Jersey providing for the creation of the Palisades Interstate Park Commission as a joint corporate municipal instrumentality of said States with appropriate rights, powers, duties, and immunities, for the transfer to said commission of certain functions, jurisdiction, rights, powers, and duties, together with the properties of the bodies politic now existing in each State known as Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, and for the continuance of the Palisades Interstate Park; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BORAH and Mr. McADOO each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ALICE H. KEEGAN

Mr. GLASS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 162), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Alice H. Keegan, widow of Henry F. Keegan, late an employee of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, during the debate 2 days ago upon my proposed amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, a letter from President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, was introduced into the RECORD and was read at the desk. Mr. Green subsequently addressed the same letter to me personally, and I have responded. Inasmuch as the original letter was printed in the RECORD, I ask that my reply be printed in the body of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JULY 30, 1937.

Mr. WILLIAM GREEN,
President, the American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GREEN: I am indebted to you for sending me a copy of your statement criticizing the amendments which I have proposed to the National Labor Relations Act. I was previously advised of its contents, however, when your statement was read on the floor of the Senate. I hasten to reply that your vehement criticism, in most of its terms, is based on a complete misapprehension of the purport of my proposed amendments, or else the amendments themselves are most ineptly phrased. I deny that they are a bold attempt—or any other kind of an attempt—to restrict the freedom of self-organization of workers or to nullify the effectiveness of democratic self-government of unions, as charged by you. Furthermore, I respectfully submit that this bitter indictment is in no degree borne out by your own bill of particulars. Bearing upon this point, I take the liberty of discussing your statement by paragraphs.

Your only complaint against the first unfair labor practice which I have proposed to define by law is that it is identical in purpose with a similar proposal previously sought by the National Association of Manufacturers. That may be a conclusive criticism, but I do not think so. After all, these manufacturers are of some use. Without them, there would be no one with whom you could collectively bargain. But I can tell you that I have never consulted with them upon this subject. My amendment was born exclusively of my own sense of American equity and my own conception of the inherent power and strength and dignity of the American organized-labor movement—a movement which, in my humble opinion, does not need to use threats, intimidation, coercion, or physical violence in inducing or compelling membership in a union. In any event, such things are intolerable—no matter whence they arise—in a country of liberty under law; and, if I am not mistaken, you have frequently uttered similar sentiments, and that is the sum total of this particular proposal.

Your only complaint against making it an unfair labor practice to interfere with constitutional rights or to damage or destroy property is that this is a matter for the jurisdiction of the courts. Your complaint similarly is confined respecting the proposal to make it an unfair labor practice to strike for the purpose of inducing or forcing any person to violate a contract or violate the law. The jurisdiction of the courts remains unimpaired, if their orders can be enforced. I fail to understand why it is offensive to proscribe these acts, when proved to the satisfaction of the National Labor Relations Board, as unfair labor practices simply because they also are thus already proscribed in law. You appear to recommend the use of court injunctions in these matters, but I have always thought court injunctions were particularly objectionable to labor. It seems to me far preferable, from the traditional labor standpoint, to deal with such matters under the Labor Act itself. At any rate, your statement certainly charges no infringement of labor's rights at this point in your discussion.

You dismiss three other proposed unfair labor practices with the sweeping but unsupported condemnation that they provide for an extent of regulation of unions by the Government that falls little short of the example set by Fascist Germany. One of these would prohibit compulsory assessment of union members for political purposes. That is the exact antithesis of Fascist Germany because it strives for the individual political liberty of the individual worker. A second would prohibit aliens as officers or agents of unions. This has no bearing on racial or religious restraints; it solely requires citizenship as a qualification, and your analogy falls to the ground. A third originally required a vote by a majority of employees to authorize a strike—the utter essence of worker democracy. But I respectfully call your attention to the fact that this third provision was withdrawn because it might have been read as the beginning of a movement to outlaw the right to strike. I happen to be one of those who, though wishing there might never be a strike, believes the right to strike is vital to labor's independence; and I shall never consciously invade it, unless labor ultimately leaves the sovereignty of government no other final alternative.

To my amazement, you next complain of the requirement for written contracts embodying the terms of a collective bargaining agreement reached under the terms of the Wagner Act. You appear to find in this some legal compulsion to do an unwilling act. I do not know what you mean—because all collective bargaining under this act must be voluntary, and this provision simply requires the voluntary agreement to be set down in writing. I simply take the position that there should be a real contract or there should be none at all. Then you appear to find in this provision—by a process of reasoning which I cannot comprehend—some sinister device by which a ruthless employer could compel his employees to sign agreements negotiated with dummy company unions. Yet there can be no dummy company unions or any other kind of company unions under the Wagner Act, and this proposed provision applies only to collective-bargaining contracts written under the other terms of the Wagner Act. Even Senator Wagner himself indicated on the floor of the Senate that he found value in this particular provision against which you direct your major attack.

Next you object to permitting the National Labor Relations Board to hold elections—to determine collective-bargaining representation—at the request of the employer because you seem to feel that this would permit the employer to interfere with the workers' rights of self-organization. If the Board holds an impartial election as required by the Wagner Act, I fail to understand how the workers' independence is infringed. He votes as a free agent. If we believe in majority rule, surely it makes no difference who happens to have originally besought the Board to determine what a majority wants. In my humble judgment, the frequent failure to invoke this election machinery is often responsible for the failure of the Wagner Act itself to function in the peaceful establishment of collective bargaining. Without elections, the act falls to the ground in this aspect. Therefore I do not understand why it is deemed unfriendly to this process when one seeks to facilitate and mutualize the right to ask for elections. This is the extent of your detailed complaint against the amendments I have proposed. I respectfully submit that it does not sustain any charge that these amendments jeopardize the future freedom and democracy of the membership of the American Federation of Labor. I applaud your final declaration in favor of the principle of voluntarism in every relationship of life. Holding such a view, you will forgive me for failure to understand why a devotee of voluntarism should complain, for example, that my proposed ban on threats, intimidation, coercion, and physical violence defeats his objectives. I should say that I was devotedly seeking to promote voluntarism.

May I call your attention to a further section in my proposal which you do not discuss? Perhaps it was added too late to have reached your attention. It requires all collective-bargaining election ballots to contain the names of all labor organizations qualified to carry on collective bargaining. If I am not mistaken, this is so directly and specifically to your advantage that it should create at least some small presumption in favor of my anxiety to serve rather than to destroy your legitimate rights.

You do not complain specifically against provisions for clothing the National Labor Relations Board with disciplinary authority to enforce the integrity of collective-bargaining contracts. I hope I am justified in assuming, therefore, that this phase does not invite your objections. Certainly that would be a sound attitude, because one of the A. F. of L.'s great assets has been its reputation for maintaining the sanctity of contracts. In my opinion, statutory collective bargaining cannot long survive in the absence of at least limited contractual dependability; and I shall continue to maintain that the wisest friend of statutory collective bargaining is the one who seeks equitably to promote this objective.

I make no pretense that my proposed amendments are conclusive in form or text. On the contrary, I stated when I submitted them that they may go too far in some instances and not far enough in others. But I respectfully persist in the basic idea that this proposed philosophy of action is sound; that it is in no sense hostile to the best welfare of legitimate organized labor; that it is, on the contrary, calculated to protect the sound progress which organized labor has made under the Wagner Act; and that it points the way to sympathetic corrections of demonstrated weaknesses which, if unchecked and unchanged, may unfortunately invite radical reprisals which neither one of us would welcome.

I wish I might make you believe that it is in this spirit that I have opened up this vital subject in American industrial relationships. Such is the fact. I would not consciously be guilty of any such attacks upon self-organization of workers as you impute to my proposals; and I dare to hope that, upon more intimate study, you will find that their purport deserves no such identification. I accept without reservation the new American concept of statutory collective bargaining. It is in this spirit that I am seeking candidly to face its need for statutory improvements in the light of American experience. Only in such a spirit, with rational consideration by all concerned, for the rights of all concerned, can these new relationships be safely and wisely conserved and developed and labor's gains stabilized and protected.

I shall welcome an opportunity to discuss these matters with you personally. Now that I have been assured of a complete survey of my proposals, and all others like them, by the appropriate Senate committee, and with the cooperation of Senator WAGNER himself, I beg leave to express the hope and the desire that your great organization will join in this constructive effort to promote democratic ideals and institutions (to quote the final phrase in your letter).

Since your original statement, to which I am responding, was presented on the floor of the Senate and read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I am sure you will not object if the same course is pursued in connection with this rejoinder.

With sentiments of great respect and with warm personal regards, I beg to remain,

Cordially and faithfully,

A. H. VANDENBERG.

CHINESE-JAPANESE CONFLICT—STATEMENT BY SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the statement by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, upon the very important pending situation in China, which was issued yesterday to the public, I feel to be of such importance to the Senate that I tender it for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and ask unanimous consent to have it printed at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR KEY PITTMAN, CHAIRMAN, FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE, FOR THE PUBLIC, ON THE STATUS OF THE JAPAN-CHINA CONFLICT

The President and the Secretary of State are impatiently and unreasonably urged to state what action will be taken by the President, under the Neutrality Act, toward China and Japan.

In so serious a matter, whilst our Government is making every effort to bring about a cessation of the unfortunate situation and to protect the lives of our citizens in China through diplomatic conversations, the impropriety and the danger to the best interest of our country of public discussions by the President and the Secretary of State are obvious.

The Neutrality Act in its purpose is frequently misconstrued. It is not a treaty. It is not enacted for the benefit or harm of any other country. It is not for the purpose of punishing any country. It is enacted solely for the purpose of the protection of our own peace and the lives of our citizens.

The act grants to the President the exclusive jurisdiction, in his sound judgment, to determine when a state of war exists as between two or more countries. This discretion was granted to him because governments today rarely declare war. It is very difficult to determine that a state of war exists. Every armed conflict between the armed forces of governments does not necessarily constitute a state of war. The short conflict between the German Government and the Spanish Government, which was not continued, did not constitute a state of war, as a state of war should be determined under the discretion granted the President in the Neutrality Act.

It must also be remembered that the authority delegated to the President in the Neutrality Act is only one of many powers granted him under the Constitution and under other acts of Congress imposing upon him the responsibility for the protection of our peace and the lives of our citizens.

He is now intensely endeavoring to protect the lives of our citizens in the zone of conflict in China. So far, he has succeeded. So far, he has maintained the friendship, confidence, and cooperation of both conflicting forces. The President is using every power that he possesses to bring about a cessation of such hostilities. Undoubtedly the same efforts are being made by other great governments, and, if not in cooperation, at least along harmonious lines.

These peaceful and humane efforts should not be endangered or disrupted by any hasty action upon the part of any government. Such an act might destroy all efforts now being made and endanger the lives of our citizens in China who are in a critical situation.

If today the President should declare a state of war to exist between China and Japan, it would be his duty to place in effect as to both such governments all of the provisions of the Neutrality Act. If then an armistice is declared tomorrow or any subsequent date shortly thereafter, his decision that a state of war exists would be erroneous under the interpretation intended in our Neutrality Act. Certainly the second the Neutrality Act is put in force and effect the influence of the President in bringing about a cessation of hostilities in China would be greatly depreciated and his great power for the protection of our citizens impaired. If either government declares war, his discretion ends. Such a declaration, however, must be made by a government.

If such conflict continues to spread and apparently beyond the hope of peaceful adjustment, then the President will be called upon to act.

FORGOTTEN ASPECTS OF JUDICIAL REFORM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BROWN OF MICHIGAN

[Mr. GILLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject Some Forgotten Aspects of Judicial Reform, delivered by Senator BROWN of Michigan on July 29, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

WATCHING WASHINGTON—ARTICLE BY SENATOR REYNOLDS

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Watching Washington", written by him and published in the magazine The State, of Raleigh, N. C., which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY AT SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' REUNION, SALEM, ILL.

[Mr. DIETERICH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Reunion, Salem, Ill., July 28, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR LA FOLLETTE BEFORE HARVARD BUSINESS SCHOOL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

[Mr. SCHWELLENBACH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on national problems delivered by Hon. Philip F. La Follette, Governor of Wisconsin, before the Harvard School of Business Alumni Association, Cambridge, Mass., June 18, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

DECISIONS OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE—ARTICLE FROM THE NEW REPUBLIC

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from The New Republic of July 21 and July 28, 1937, entitled "How Liberal is Justice Hughes?" which appears in the Appendix.]

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we had some kind of understanding there would be no vote until 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair read that statement in the RECORD, but as there should be something before the Senate, he stated the pending question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] stated that he would necessarily be detained this morning in the consideration of important public business before a joint committee. At that time it was agreed there should be no vote taken between the hours of 11 and 12 this morning.

Further than that, I wish to address myself to the Chair by asking a question in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry. Is the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] a complete substitute for the committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut has not been formally offered. The Chair will state once more that the question before the Senate is the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the committee itself to the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I misunderstood the Chair. I thought the Chair said the question now before the Senate was the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the amendment in the form of a substitute for the original bill reported by the committee, as amended.

Mr. McNARY. That is a very different proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Oregon, the understanding we had yesterday was very simple. On account of the absence of the members of two committees on important business it was agreed there should be no roll call on any amendment until after 12 o'clock. That did not preclude the consideration of amendments or their disposition by a viva-voce vote, if that be possible.

Mr. McNARY. I do not quite agree with that. Often an amendment is disposed of by viva-voce vote. I think as to amendments where there is no opposition, amendments which are mild and are clarifying in form, it would be proper to consider them.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was no disposition to take advantage of anyone or to pass on important amendments during the absence of Senators, but always there are amendments relatively more or less important—"mild" amendments, to use the term of the Senator from Oregon—and those may be considered without violation of the agreement.

Mr. McNARY. I quite agree as to mild amendments, but with reference to those of a substantial nature which might require a roll call, I do not want to have any such considered at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] desires to offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to have consideration of my amendment which would exclude certain individuals, firms, associations, and corporations from some of the provisions of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator offering the amendment now?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I offer the amendment now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed, on page 64, after line 3, to insert the following:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to any individual, firm, association, or corporation employing 10 or fewer than 10 persons.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, we have in my State, as there are in other States, a large number of portable sawmills and other small enterprises employing less than 10 men. There are flour mills and grist mills, the products of which sometimes go into interstate commerce. There are also small canneries employing 10 or fewer men, and in order that they may be excluded from the provisions of the bill I have offered the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator tell me why an employer of nine men should be relieved from the exactions applied to an employer of 11 men?

Mr. REYNOLDS. There are some mills which really cannot compete, for instance, with a larger flour mill, and I think the smaller employers should be excluded from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What the Senator is saying is that the bill should not pass.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I do not say that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may we have the amendment read again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The legislative clerk again read the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. Yesterday the Senate adopted an amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] exempting establishments engaged in the packing or packaging of fish and other perishable products, and applicable also to canneries that work on a seasonal basis. Does not the Senator think that amendment really sufficiently takes care of all establishments which are engaged in seasonal operations which, while in the amendment not specified, are supposed to operate not more than 6 months in the year?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon would not cover the individuals, firms, associations, and corporations I have in mind. For instance, I have in mind some small roller mills in North Carolina engaged in interstate commerce. They sell to large distributing houses. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon would not cover such small roller mills operating 12 months in the year. It would not cover the smaller sawmills in my State and others which are to be found in the adjoining States of South Carolina, Georgia, and Virginia.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the bill as originally introduced in this body contained a provision which would have authorized the board to exempt from the operation of the law employers having a fewer number than "——", as it was stated in the bill. In other words, as I understand, the bill as originally introduced to some extent applied the exemption provisions of the laws which have been enacted with reference to social security and compensation in the various States and follows various other legislative precedents.

The number was purposely left blank for two reasons. In the first place, I was by no means sure that there should be such an exemption. In the second place, it was my belief that if there should be such an exemption, the number should be fully considered by the committee and by the Senate. A great many of the laws which have been enacted have exempted agencies employing fewer than eight people. In some of the States under the compensation laws there have been exemptions for those employing fewer than three people or five people. I wish to present the matter fairly and squarely to the Senate in order that they may understand the two viewpoints.

Many have taken the position that the difficulties of enforcement of the law in cases of employers of the very small number of employees made it wise that such exemptions should be granted. Others have taken the position that the law should apply to all employers, whether they employ 1 or 20 or 5,000 persons.

A strong protest was raised by various business agencies against any exemption. One of the chief protests was made by the lumbermen's association; and I desire to say parenthetically that the objections from my State coming from the lumbermen have been from the big lumbermen. They instituted the protests. They started the fight. Their paid representatives stimulated the activity.

The committee sought evidence on all matters connected with the bill. We invited every person in the United States who had anything to say about the matter to come before the committee. We adjourned for an entire week in order to give opportunity for others to come before the committee.

Upon consideration of this particular phase of the subject, the committee took the position that there should be no exemption. The committee took the position that the law should apply to all alike. That is the report of the committee. That is the position taken by the committee. No consideration has been given by the committee to the number of employees who should be in the service of an employer if an exemption should be granted. We found that there was as wide a divergence in the views with reference to the number who might be employed in case an exemption should be granted as there was between the views of those who thought an exemption should be granted and those who thought an exemption should not be granted. Therefore, the committee reported the bill with the exemption completely stricken out. That is the way the bill appeared before the Senate.

So far as I am personally concerned, when I originally introduced the bill it was my purpose that that particular question might be considered and might be given the mature thought both of the committee and of the Senate. The committee has given its consideration to the subject and has voted not to permit such exemptions.

With that statement I am willing to submit the question to the Senate for a vote, so far as I am concerned. That does not mean, however, that others should not discuss it. It is a very interesting question, and I do present the views of the committee with reference to this particular subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of what the chairman of the committee has said, my personal view is that, unless there is some exemption of those who employ a very small number of persons, it will be practically impossible to administer this measure; but it is a frightful discrimination. My view of the bill would lead me to vote for any provision that would limit the jurisdiction of this board; but this presents the question of discrimination.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator tell me whether the committee has at its disposal any data indicating the sum total of employment which is exempted under any of these various limitations?

Mr. BORAH. Such figures have been prepared, and I think they were read into the RECORD yesterday.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator from Alabama answer the question?

Mr. BLACK. I did not understand the question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is any information available as to the total number of employees throughout the country who would be exempted under such an amendment?

Mr. BLACK. I have some information on the subject, but I have not it here with me. I can send for it and obtain it, I think, without much delay.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, according to the figures which were put in the RECORD yesterday, more than 57,000 establishments would be affected, and more than 150,000 or 175,000 employees.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Pope
Andrews	Copeland	Lee	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Reynolds
Austin	Dieterich	Lodge	Schwartz
Bailey	Donahey	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Ellender	Lonergan	Sheppard
Berry	Frazier	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bilbo	George	McAdoo	Smathers
Black	Gerry	McCarran	Smith
Bone	Gillette	McGill	Steiwer
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Green	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	Maloney	Townsend
Brown, N. H.	Hale	Minton	Truman

Byrnes	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Overton	Wheeler
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper	White
Clark	King	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have a few remarks, only, to make on the pending amendment.

The difficulty with most legislators is that they either never knew or have forgotten the conditions which exist far back in the communities in their respective States. The N. R. A. was impossible of administration because it touched, and the law attempted to regulate, too many people—too many of the small fellows. I wish to make what I say concrete in order to show how we inadvisedly, and probably unthoughtedly, enact legislation which creates much dissatisfaction among the people.

Take the case of a blacksmith shop in a local community. The blacksmith sharpens the coulters of the plows of the people, shoes the horses and mules for his community. Perhaps he has two or three local men working for him. They live at home. They are not engaged in competition with anyone in the world. Yet when a law is enacted similar to the bill before us, applying to his business, he has to do one of two things. He must either quit, to the inconvenience of the entire community, or he must double his prices. If he had been shoeing mules for a dollar he will have to make it $2. So that everyone in the community begins to object, and the blacksmith quits business.

Take the case of a small flour mill. There is one in my section, down near the Tennessee line in Kentucky. It is a community concern. It is operated by an individual who sells his flour over the line in Tennessee and around him in Kentucky. He serves, perhaps, two or three counties.

He has six or seven people employed. They are boys who live in the community, and who go home at night. Perhaps they cease work when they desire to. This man is not as big in his business as is the large mill operator. Quantity reduces the cost of production, of course, so if this man is placed on a parity with all others, and if he is required to pay what some board of men think is fair, he must quit. There are hundreds of small-business men throughout my State in exactly that condition. When that man quits the tendency to form a monopoly is greatly increased, and in just a little while the small fellows have to go out of business, and the big flour mills have all the business.

The same thing is true of the lumber business. There are portable sawmills, which move from one community to another, and the operator saws up a quantity of timber into lumber or cross ties. The man who owns the sawmill employs local labor and pays them all they demand. They are not experts. The sawmill man himself is not an expert. He may cut a few hundred cross ties a day or a few thousand feet of lumber. If we do not exempt his employees, we put him out of business, and the larger sawmill men thereby get all the business. Such a law would rid them of competition. So, when the farmer wants to buy lumber for his barn or someone wants lumber even to build a chicken coop, he cannot get it from the local man, he must buy it from the large manufacturer of lumber, with the result that his price is increased two or three times. For these reasons I most heartily favor the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The difficulty I have in this matter is in fixing the number.

Mr. LOGAN. That is a difficulty which I myself have. It may be that 10 is too large a number. I doubt it. I think perhaps the more enterprises we exempt in the beginning the better off we will be. When we undertake to reform the world by a piece of legislation, and it simply will not be reformed, if it gets down to the people and touches the lives of too many of them.

This is an experiment. I do not know whether it will work or not. I doubt whether there is a man or a group of men anywhere in the United States or in the world who are wise enough to administer this proposed legislation, although theoretically, perhaps, it is a good thing. It could be used to create a monopoly if it were poorly administered, because it would drive out first those at the bottom, then those a little higher up, then a little higher up, until we may find that we have been legislating for monopoly when we believed we were legislating for the laboring man.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me inquire of the Senator from Kentucky whether it was his observation that the N. R. A., which was designed to accomplish a purpose somewhat similar to that behind the pending legislation, had the effect of aiding the big and powerful concerns to the detriment of many of the smaller ones?

Mr. LOGAN. I think that was the fact, as a result of lack of proper administration, because we did not look with favor upon the small men in the respective communities, and the N. R. A. was largely destroyed because of the opposition which was developed in the small communities in the respective States, since people who do not understand the regulations often resent them, and while the purpose of the proposed legislation is good; in fact, I think it might prove to be of great advantage, for eventually something has to be done along this line; in my judgment, we ought to make an exemption where the employees are few in number.

It may be that 10 is too large a number. Most of the compensation laws exempt three, some five; but there ought to be an exemption, and unless some one suggests a different number, I shall vote most earnestly, and believing that I am serving the people of this Nation to the best of my ability, for the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Alabama for just a moment.

Mr. BLACK. I am listening to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. On page 85, under the heading "Penalties", I find this language in section 23:

> Any person who willfully performs or aids or abets in the performance of any act declared to be unlawful by any provision of this act or who willfully fails or omits to perform any act, duty, or obligation required by this act to be performed by him shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both.

What are the provisions of the bill? The bill provides that a board shall be given the authority to make regulations fixing wages and hours of work, and the bill itself does not specify the hours of work or fix wages definitely. Suppose the board makes a regulation not specifically contained in the law, and someone violates the regulation; would the violator then come under the penalty fixed in the statute?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention, in the first place, to the fact that the committee inserted at the end of paragraph (a) concerning penalties a provision which, I think, might well be called to the attention of the Senate at this time. It provides:

> No person shall be imprisoned under this subsection except for an offense committed after the conviction of such person for a prior violation of this subsection.

We have inserted that provision in order that there might be no imprisonment for the first offense.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator from Idaho will listen to this colloquy, because I should like to have his judgment on the matter. I have just read on page 85, under the heading "Penalties", that—

> Any person who willfully performs or aids or abets in the performance of any act declared to be unlawful by any provision of this act—

And so forth, shall be liable to fine and imprisonment. The bill itself does not fix minimum standards. The bill itself does not fix hours of work. That is left to a board. If a man violates a regulation of the board, as I see it, he would not be violating a provision of the act and, therefore, the penalty would not apply. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. BLACK. My judgment is that the penalty would apply to the commission of any act which is declared to be unlawful, and it is declared to be unlawful to violate a regulation or order which is made by the board after a hearing as provided by the board.

Mr. TYDINGS. Insofar as I know, the clause to which I have referred does not read "who violates this act or any of the regulations made in pursuance of this act." It simply provides that if a man violates the act he shall be guilty and shall pay a fine or suffer imprisonment. What does the bill provide? Does it fix a minimum standard? It does not. Does it fix maximum hours of labor? It does not. Therefore, how could one violate the act when the act itself is silent on its two major objectives, and that is left to be determined by some commission? So, in the absence of the words "or regulation made in pursuance of this act", there would be no violation of the act itself, because the act would be silent on minimum wages and silent on the number of hours.

In the event that the words "or regulation made in pursuance of this act" were inserted, we would then be on the other horn of the dilemma. It would mean that Congress had turned over the making of criminal laws to a board, or commission, which might seriously affect the legality of the legislation, the question being whether we could delegate the authority to make penal statutes to a board or commission established here in Washington.

To be exact, there is nothing in this bill which fixes minimum wages. There is nothing in this bill which fixes maximum hours. Let us suppose the board says that 40 hours a week are the maximum hours, and that 40 cents an hour is the minimum wage. Then the board has made the law; but, even so, there is nothing in the penal statutes to cause a man who violates the regulation to be found guilty of a crime violating a regulation of the board. If he does not violate the act itself, then in my humble judgment, as the bill is now drawn, he would not be liable to any penalty, because certainly criminal laws are written and interpreted restrictively, and the policy of the courts is to write into a criminal statute no penalties or conditions which are not plainly carried or specifically set forth on the face of the statute. Criminal penalties for violation of a statute cannot be written into it by indirection or by implication. I think all lawyers will agree that criminal statutes must be construed strictly as they are written; and I do not know of any court in the United States which has ever claimed that something can be written into a criminal statute that is not in it—something that it was intended to have in it, but something that is not actually in it.

As to the penalty clause of the bill, it appears to me that the only violation that could be punished would be the violation of a provision of the bill itself; and if a person should violate a regulation, no penalty is contained in the penal sections of the bill to cover such a violation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the first provision might be amenable to the construction placed upon it by the Senator from Maryland; but under the second provision I think the violator would likely be punishable for employing anyone at a wage other than that fixed by the board, for it says:

Or who willfully fails or omits to perform any act, duty, or obligation required by this act to be performed.

The bill imposes upon the board the doing of certain things and gives the board authority to establish certain rates, and thereby requires those acts to be performed. If the board should fix a certain wage, and an employer should employ persons at a different wage, I think he would come under the second provision.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the Senator referring to subsection (b)?

Mr. BORAH. No; the second provision of subsection (a), on page 85, which says:

Or who willfully fails or omits to perform any act, duty, or obligation required by this act to be performed.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the bill itself, as I interpret it, does not require any obligation to be performed. What the bill should say, if it means what I think the Senator has suggested, is:

Or any regulation or act required within the limitations of this act to be ordered to be performed by the board.

Mr. BORAH. When the board fixes a minimum wage under the authority of the bill, the parties are under obligation to live up to that minimum wage, and that is authorized by the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from Idaho feel that it would be good law to allow the board to say what the wage shall be, and, if there is a violation of the provision governing the wage fixed by the board—not fixed by the bill itself—that the person who transgresses the regulation may be tried and convicted, as the measure is written?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think we should ever give a board in Washington authority to establish rules and regulations the violation of which constitutes a crime. I agree with that general proposition; but I do not think this bill has that effect. The bill requires certain things to be done by the board; and when the board establishes a wage, for instance, and fixes the hours, those things are established under authority of law. The board is then acting under authority of law. It creates an obligation, and that obligation must be performed by the express terms of the bill itself.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I understand the argument of the Senator from Idaho; but, as I read the bill——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to call attention to the section I referred to a moment ago, on page 65?

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not see that.

Mr. BLACK. It says:

It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to employ any employee in violation of any term or provision of an order of the board made under this section.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true; but suppose it is unlawful, then what will be the penalty? No penalty at all is contained in that provision. The penalty is contained on page 85. It says:

Any person who willfully performs or aids or abets in the performance of any act——

Mr. BLACK. "Declared to be unlawful."

Mr. TYDINGS (continuing):

declared to be unlawful by any provision of this act.

Mr. BLACK. I have just read the Senator the provision of the bill which expressly declares it to be unlawful.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not find in the bill, with all due respect, a provision which fixes minimum wages or maximum hours. There is not any such provision in the bill; and, in my judgment, poor lawyer that I am, I respectfully submit that the courts will construe criminal statutes as they are written, and they will not write into them crimes which are not plainly evident on the face of the statute.

As the bill is now written, there is not a line in it which fixes minimum wages or maximum hours. That is left up to the board. The penalty applies only for violation of the measure and not for violation of the regulations of the board.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the Congress authorizes the board to fix the wages or the hours, is not that something done under the bill? And if thereafter someone violates that provision, does that not bring him within the penal clauses of the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. In my judgment, no. I think the courts will hold—and I believe my prophecy will be vindicated—that if any man violates any of the provisions of the bill and is haled before the court for violation of it, and it is found that the supposed criminal statute for which he is brought before the bar of justice is made by a board sitting in Washington, no matter how much authority we may put in the hands of that board, the court will hold that he cannot be punished.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; therein is where the Senator errs. The board does not provide what is a criminal act. It does a certain executive or ministerial act in fixing hours and wages, but what is a criminal act is specified by Congress. Is not the Senator also familiar with the fact that the Supreme Court has repeatedly upheld convictions for violations of regulations made by some departments, but which were authorized by Congress in an act providing that the department might make regulations in pursuance of the act?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. They have upheld convictions for such violations.

Mr. TYDINGS. But that is not the way the provision reads. I say that if certain clarifying words are put into the provision, perhaps then those administering the act might go into court and have jurisdiction under the act.

But the bill does not say, in the penalty provisions, "or regulations made in pursuance to this act." It says, in substance, "for violation of this act." In the case to which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] referred, I think the law provided that violators of the act, or regulations made in pursuance of it, should, upon conviction, and so on, be subject to a penalty of so and so much. But in this bill we find the following wording:

Any person who willfully performs or aids or abets in the performance of any act declared to be unlawful by any provision of this act.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I read right after that what the bill does declare to be unlawful? Will the Senator yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I read from page 65. This is what the bill declares unlawful, and it is the same as though we added these words at the point on page 85 from which the Senator has read:

It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to employ any employee in violation of any term or provision of an order of the board made under this section.

Mr. TYDINGS. What section is that?

Mr. BLACK. The section in reference to substandard labor conditions connected with minimum wages and maximum hours.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to continue to argue the point. I still say that when we use the words "of this act" and do not add the words "regulations in pursuance of this act", we foreclose the possibility of conviction for violations of the regulations, as the Senator has indicated. Further than that, I think it is a pretty poor policy for Congress to allow criminal statutes to be written by a board of five members who are not known by the Congress, when the bill itself is absolutely indefinite and silent on what are minimum wages and maximum hours. The Senator from Alabama himself said the other day, as I recall, that we could have any kind of hours under this bill; that there was no specific provision about that.

Mr. BLACK. I should fully agree with the Senator if Congress were to enact a law which provided that the board should be permitted to do anything it pleased, and make any regulation it wanted to make, and that after the board made an order or a regulation, a person who violated the order or regulation should be sent to the penitentiary. However, we have attempted—perhaps not successfully, but we have worked diligently to that end—to come within the general provisions of law which authorize Congress to appoint administrative agencies to ascertain certain facts.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may interrupt the Senator, I will say that I agree thoroughly with him, and where it is needed I am for the policy of permitting administrative boards within certain limitations to perform certain acts; but I am talking about passing criminal statutes in connection with the enforcement of which the power is wide open, where the Senator himself concedes that the hours may be whatever the board chooses to fix.

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not concede that. I think the Senator has misunderstood the statement I made, or at least if I made such a statement I did not intend to make it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I probably misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. The Supreme Court of the United States and the supreme court of every State in the Nation, so far as I have investigated—and I have not investigated all of them——

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me go back to the provision about which the Senator is talking in connection with which he speaks of putting a top and bottom limitation on the administrative authority of a board. I ask the Senator what is the top in hours in this bill?

Mr. BLACK. Let me proceed, and then I will come to that phase of the matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should much prefer that the Senator would now enlighten me wherein I am wrong.

Mr. BLACK. That is what I started to try to do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is there a top in hours in this provision?

Mr. BLACK. I shall have to reply first by clarifying what I believe to be the Senator's misconception.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator that the Congress has the authority, within certain limitations and in certain connections, to delegate its power to a board. That is not the point of my argument. The point is that the bill confines the violations only to the provisions of the act, and not to the regulations made by the board in pursuance of the provisions of the act. I am asking the Senator now what is the top in hours fixed in the bill, which is the top to which the board may go.

Mr. BLACK. No definite figures, as figures, are placed in the bill either with reference to the lowest wages or with reference to the highest hours; but it is not always necessary that we have actual figures. We may mark the limitations and boundaries by other language.

Mr. TYDINGS. What are the boundaries as to hours in the bill?

Mr. BLACK. The boundaries as to hours are fixed by the standards which are to be ascertained by the board after hearing. That provision is found in the second part of section 4.

Mr. TYDINGS. On what page?

Mr. BLACK. I do not recall the page, but I will find it in a moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think what the Senator is looking for is on page 59.

Mr. BLACK. It is on pages 60 and 61. First, let me say that the board is not given jurisdiction to go below 40 hours.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the bottom?

Mr. BLACK. With reference to that phase of the board's jurisdiction, that is the bottom.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator that there is a bottom to the hour provision.

Mr. BLACK. There is a bottom which is written in figures. There is a top to the standard beyond which the board could not go without violating the act. It could not, for instance, fix hours of work per week above the hours of work per week "for work of like or comparable character" which have been fixed "by collective labor agreements negotiated between employers and employees by representatives of their own choosing", and it could not go above "the hours of employment for work of like or comparable character maintained by employers who voluntarily maintain a maximum workweek in the occupation to be subject to the order establishing such maximum workweek."

Of course, the committee could have attempted to fix in figures an arbitrary hour and said, "We will not permit the board to go above this hour", but the committee reached the conclusion—and I myself am fully persuaded it was a wise conclusion—rather than attempt to fix the standard of hours in figures, when week hours vary throughout the Nation and throughout the diversified industries, it would be better to fix a standard which itself marks the limitation. In other words, if progressive employers, we will say, or those who recognize the best standards of labor, in the steel business, for instance, have found that 8 hours are the proper number of hours per day and 40 per week; then the board would not be justified in going beyond that in fixing the maximum hours if 8 hours per day were universally recognized or recognized in the particular region where the work was being done as a proper standard. It would no more be authorized to go above that 40 hours than if it had been written into the law. So what I am trying to make clear is that, while we did not write in figures the maximum hours per week and we did not write in figures the minimum below 40 hours per week, we did attempt to fix standards beyond which the board could not go without violating the proposed law any more than it could if we had written those figures themselves in the measure.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has answered my question, and the answer, boiled down, is that there is a definite bottom to the proposed act and an elastic top to it, depending on conditions.

Mr. BLACK. There is an elastic top, depending upon the conditions set out, beyond which in a given industry the board could not go.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I say.

Mr. BLACK. The elasticity being not with reference to the work in a particular industry in a given region, but the elasticity being provided by reason of the difference in wages in different industries and the difference in hours.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, there is elasticity as to the top, but the bottom is firm.

Mr. BLACK. As I have tried to differentiate the provisions, I do not think that that is a clear statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. What is the top, then, if it is definite?

Mr. BLACK. Let us take any business the Senator wishes. For instance, there are in his State, I understand, large manufacturers of hats.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; we have very few manufacturers of hats in Maryland.

Mr. BLACK. Well, small establishments. I will take any other business; I simply mention the hats by way of illustration. I do not know what are the recognized working hours in that industry or what agreements have been made by those who bargain collectively or what are the general hours adopted by those employers who attempt to carry on their business in a manner fair both to themselves and to the workers; but let us assume it to be 46 hours a week. That being true, the board would have just as firm a limitation under this proposed act on 46 hours per week as they would if the figures had been written into the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I see the Senator's point; but I still come back to my statement that in the bill the bottom is firm while the top is not firm; it is elastic, because a workweek of 46 hours in a concern today may be 45 hours next week, and even after an agreement is entered into by collective bargaining or otherwise, such agreement may be null and void. So I still maintain that there is no definite top as to hours fixed by the bill. I am not criticizing that. I am merely trying to get the facts.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that the Senator is not criticizing but is simply discussing the bill, as is very proper, and it is very enlightening to have discussion, in my judgment.

The committee reached the conclusion in connection with the Senator's suggestion that if we attempted to stipulate some specific number of hours above that which was fixed at the bottom to bring about a drastic overnight change would work a very great injustice to some industries that have been working hours that are entirely too long. It might work very severe injury upon them to require them to bring immediately the workweek down to a number of hours that might be fixed in the proposed act.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I take issue with the Senator there. The purpose of this bill is to bring about eventually a 40-hour week if it can be done—and no one is quarreling about that—but the point is that where there is now a 45-hour week or a 46-hour week, Congress itself does not want to take definite action. It wants to hand the problem over to a board. If a man is working 12 hours a day, it is wrong; he has no business working 12 hours a day 7 days a week, for example, which is 84 hours a week. What we are doing here is not recognizing that fact, but simply "passing the buck" over to a board. If that is wrong—and everybody says it is wrong—why not tackle it frontally and provide a standard which we think is right?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may continue for a moment, in order to give the Senator my viewpoint, let me say no considerable number of employees are working 12 hours a day 7 days a week, though there was a time in the steel manufacturing business when a 12-hour day prevailed. I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator, before I proceed with the other point, that there is a great misconception about the workweek in the United States. Because the 40-hour workweek has been talked about so much, people believe that we have a 40-hour week. We have not a 40-hour week. My information is that not one-third of the employees or workers of this Nation have a 40-hour week. On the contrary, it is absolutely surprising to find the number of employees who work 12 hours per day. I may say to the Senator that I think there is a very strong argument in favor of a flat workweek.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator will concede—and I should like to get his answer—that there are many men in this body who would be inclined to support the objectives of this bill who are reluctant to turn its administration over to a commission, even though there is good argument why that should be done.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator is correct in his statement that frequently a terrible fear is aroused about commissions which sometimes is not justified, while at other times it may be. But let us consider this——

Mr. TYDINGS. I know the Senator himself does not want to favor any more commissions than the sheer force of necessity may demand.

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that it has been my philosophy of legislation since I have attempted to make any study of it and had anything to do with it that, so far as it can be done to accomplish the purpose, without injury to any large body of the public, it is always better to specify clearly in the law itself the regulation which is to be prescribed, and it is only when conditions develop that require recognition of a diversity of duties and responsibilities that I favor transferring authority even to determine that a contingency has developed which makes it necessary for a board to act.

Let us take the situation the Senator mentioned. We agree that we want to get away from the 12-hour day. I fully agree with the Senator on that point, as he knows. I have thought that there were times in the history of our country when it would be far wiser to have a definite workweek fixed by legislation. When 15,000,000 people are entirely out of work, I have no doubt of that. Now, however, we find the situation to be that many are working 12 hours a day, and that some are working 13 hours and 14 hours a day, and we want to get away from it; but, in doing so, we do not wish to cause an injury which might be greater than the good that would be accomplished.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator to allow me to interrupt him, because I am coming to the point where I should like a little enlightenment. What industry in America would be injured if we had an 8-hour-a-day week?

Mr. BLACK. A great many have claimed they would be injured.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator give four or five examples?

Mr. BLACK. One which has made the claim with the most argument, frankly, is the lumber business. A great many statements have been placed in the RECORD about the lumber business. They are undoubtedly working their employees at many places 12 hours a day.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why?

Mr. BLACK. I cannot state why, except they claim it is necessary in order to carry on their business. I do not believe the majority of those employers desire to work their men 12 hours a day. They have the same instincts, the same humanitarian desires as people engaged in other business, but the ruthless, ever-pressing forces of competition crush in upon them.

Mr. TYDINGS. If we make it 8 hours a day universally, would not we remove those crushing forces of competition?

Mr. BLACK. I have made that argument on the floor of the Senate with reference to regular daily hours. I agree with the Senator to the extent that we can and should fix a workday that is fair to production, to the employers, and to the workers. But if we were to attempt to change in 1 day the working practices and reduce the daily hours in all large industries——

Mr. TYDINGS. Have it take effect 6 months hence. Give them 6 months in which to get ready. In other words, if we want an 8-hour day, why in the name of common sense do we not say so? Why leave it to a board to play fast and loose with hours?

Mr. BLACK. One of the objections raised to the bill by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was that we had said just that thing. If the Senator from Maryland will read his speech, he will find that one of his arguments is that we said the objective was just that thing, and it is. The suggestion was made to us by a businessman, who made a very clear and forceful argument, that the committee should write into the bill itself a provision that the change should advance so far in 3 months, so far in 6 months, so far in 9 months, and so far in 12 months. There is much logic behind that suggestion.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to have that sort of a provision considered.

Mr. BLACK. With the facilities for study of the industries in the time that would be given for the board to ascertain the facts, if we are going to make such a gradual approach to the desired objective, it is my judgment it can be done more advantageously by an agency which is entrusted solely with that duty rather than by our attempting to fit it to the terms of a written statute which could not be changed without action by Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator knows that many of the nations of the world have such laws. I think in most of the countries of Europe there are limitations, with certain exemptions to cover unusual cases, governing the hours of work in industry.

Since the debate started I have not heard a single reason advanced to show why, if the Congress itself wants to have an 8-hour day, it cannot provide an 8-hour day, approaching the objective to an 8-hour day by easy stages. The board can do that. What can the board do that Congress itself cannot do to make all competition equal down to the 8-hour day? Why give that power to a board?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to give the Senator the arguments made in the committee. The committee gave the bill diligent, careful, and painstaking consideration, particularly the point which the Senator is now discussing.

The board could obtain no more evidence than the Congress could if the Congress had nothing else to do, but, unfortunately, we find from time to time somebody saying that Congress is tired and ought to go home. It is said that the health of Senators is being affected; that their health might be bad and their disposition might be affected.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator that in the statistical abstract of the United States, as I recall, it is stated that there are approximately 35,000,000 men employed. They are employed over a country 3,000 miles long and about 2,000 miles wide in some places. If the five men who are to comprise the board can make a survey of the various conditions in the country better than can 96 Senators and 435 Members of the House, who come from all parts of the country and who know the conditions in their own districts, then they are five men who ought to set up a supergovernment and manage the affairs of all the countries of the world, including the United States.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator asked a question, and I should be glad to complete the answer. I had just stated to the Senator that the Congress has other business to perform. Each Senator is on many committees. It is not always easy to get Senators to attend a committee meeting, even when it is desired to take up an important measure such as this one.

What is required in the approach to this question? If it is approached with the idea of first obtaining as many facts as can be gotten in order to pass upon a particular industry and the problems which it meets, of course, such a study would be made not by the five men alone. Of course, the five men could not obtain all the facts. The Senator knows that, and so does everyone else. The Senator knows that the five men would have agencies through which they would have to ascertain the facts, and those agencies would have more time, perhaps would have nothing else to do, and they would not be troubled about their health and about going back home when the summertime comes, and they would not constantly be pushed and told that they are in bad health and in danger of their lives. They would have more time to investigate.

It is not any reflection upon Congress, nor is it any charge that Congress cannot do something the board can do.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said the committee had long and extended hearings, and I am sure they had.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I realize how difficult it is to write a bill of this kind; but the only objection, of any widespread nature, to making the hours definite, that the Senator recalls, came from the lumber business.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no. The objection came also from other sources. A gentleman from Virginia who has been in the furniture business some 20 or 25 years appeared before the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. What was his objection?

Mr. BLACK. That it should not be done immediately; that it should be arranged in some way, either in the bill or otherwise, to be done gradually.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am pointing out to the Senator that I do not want to do it tomorrow morning. If we are going to do this thing, I would cushion the reduction of maximum hours over periods of 3 months until eventually we should reach the objective.

So far on the floor of the Senate I have not heard one valid reason why that procedure should not be adopted. Indeed, from the Senator's remarks, I am constrained to believe that he himself looks with a great deal of favor upon that alternative way of handling the matter. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the Senator, as I said in the beginning, that strong arguments can be made in favor of that method; but the idea has been sought to be spread around that anything we propose that a governmental agency shall do must, therefore, be performed by a group of people who are biased, who are corrupt, who have no intelligence, who will take advantage of the opportunity, with no sufficient reason for declining to follow a course which common sense suggests.

The overwhelming majority of the committee—as a matter of fact, I do not believe there was a single voice, though there may have been one or two, to the contrary on the committee—reached the conclusion that common sense requires that this be done in this way. We want to attain the objective.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator as to the objective; but the only objection voiced came from the lumber people and a single furniture man in Virginia.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no; the Senator should not say that. I cannot state to the Senator every objection that came to us on that ground. I may say that of the hundreds and hundreds of communications I received, and of the many witnesses who testified, I should say that over 90 percent expressed preference for a method which would give to some agency power to approach the subject in this way.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is a good answer; but let me say to the Senator that these persons have not yet given any reasons, except they do not want this action to happen overnight; that the element of competition must always be present; that one agency cannot reduce its hours unless other agencies similarly situated reduce theirs.

What would be the harm in establishing an objective which would affect everybody in the country in the same way, and approaching it gradually in a 3-month period? If this action is to be taken by the board, if that is our objective, I cannot see why we should not go to it deliberately; and so far, I repeat, I have heard that there have been objections to this process, but I have heard no reasons for the commission approach rather than the statute approach.

Mr. BLACK. I may say that I have tried to give the Senator some reasons. I am sure I did not succeed in doing it. They are reasons which did appeal to the members of the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. What are they?

Mr. BLACK. The reasons I have stated; and, if the Senator will let me, I will now restate what they are.

Mr. TYDINGS. When the Senator answers me this time, will he try to include in his answer, if he can, what any one of the different complainants had to say as to why his particular business could not be operated on an 8-hour-day basis a year from now, if he should be given a year's notice?

Mr. BLACK. Answering the latter part of the question first, I may say that there are some businesses that claim that they never could operate profitably on an 8-hour-day basis.

Mr. TYDINGS. What are they?

Mr. BLACK. They claim that they could not compete with others that use machines and have better natural resources and other advantages.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to comment on that statement? What is the use of trying to set up an 8-hour day and saying that those who do not conform to it may be fined if we are going to let some man work his employees 10 hours a day?

Mr. BLACK. I am not saying that. I was answering the first question the Senator asked, which had nothing whatever to do with the other part of his question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I asked the Senator for a reason.

Mr. BLACK. I have no reason. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] yesterday attacked the bill on directly the opposite ground from that on which the Senator from Maryland is now attacking it. The Senator from Georgia pointed out that the objective was to have the board determine these matters, and said that was one of the reasons why he was against the bill. So we find the bill attacked by one Senator on the ground that it empowers the board to decide the questions involved, and then we find it attacked by another Senator on the ground that they are not decided by the bill itself.

These are the arguments that were made in the committee and to the committee:

We have many industries. Some of them have different labor practices than others. We have many regions in this land of ours. Labor practices differ in different regions of the country. It was, and will be, impossible for any group of Senators or Representatives, or for any other governmental agency, to make a careful, detailed study of the different industries unless they give a large amount of time to it. They must have many persons to work with them. A Senate committee or a House committee may obtain a view of industry as a whole; but it is impossible for a Senate committee to devote all its time, for instance, to the lumber business and find the detailed facts with reference to that business in order to know whether or not it could approach this objective within 3 months or 6 months or 12 months.

Therefore it requires a study and a collection of facts by someone, somewhere, to show the effect of the bill upon that industry, assuming the hypothesis that it is better to approach the subject with reference to the different industries, and in recognition of their diversity of hours and wages at this time. If we assume the other hypothesis, which the Senator says may be assumed, that we could put all industries on the basis of a flat 40-hour week now, then there would be no reason for a board, and the proper thing to do would be to offer an amendment providing for a 40-hour week, and let that be adopted.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama that every Senator here knows that the purpose of the bill is to bring every industry in America, exclusive of agriculture and some others that have been exempted, into a 40-hour week. That is the goal, the objective to which the proponents of the bill have addressed themselves. If it is not feasible to vote at this good hour on the question of a 40-hour week, and yet if we want to adopt the 40-hour week by law, we can make provision that it shall take effect 6 months from now, with such industries exempted as ought to be exempted because of any peculiar reasons or conditions.

I maintain that not a single bit of reason has been given for supporting the proposition that a commission or a board ought to do this instead of the Congress doing it. In the last analysis the commission is going to find that there are certain industries that do not want to do what the commission is going to require them to do; and that bridge will have to be crossed at some time or other. There may be concerns that will have to be exempted from the provisions of a 40-hour week. All right; let us exempt them; but the fact remains that if we want a 40-hour week, there is no reason for letting a commission bring it about when Congress is elected by the people to come here and do that sort of thing.

I have never yet heard one single, solitary reason for such a course of action. I have heard that there are complaints. I have heard that certain persons say they want more time. I have heard that certain persons say there are peculiarities of their business; but those things are only in the form of complaints. They are not in the form of logic or reason or common sense or fact to support their contention that a commission ought to do this thing in a year, rather than have Congress do it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I take the liberty of asking the able Senator from Maryland for something of an answer to a question I put, looking to its application to my own home.

With my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], I represent a very large manufacturing section, in which every form of manufacturing is carried on. Let me ask my able friend this question: Suppose Congress should really pass a law specifically naming the exact number of hours that might be worked. When that act was passed it would be the law and would be the guide and the enforced direction to all officers of government. It would not permit exceptions, and it would not permit violations. I ask my able friend, what would he suggest as the force or agency that might provide for emergencies?

A fire may happen in the city of Baltimore or in the city of Chicago. Floods may arise in smaller communities. Conditions may arise, we will say, unhappily—to refer to war—that call for extra supplies in certain directions, and an opportunity of patronage of certain lines of work.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to answer his question?

Mr. LEWIS. No; be good enough to let me finish. Then it is desired to have more time, the concerns themselves seeking it, in order to do more work, with an increase of pay at the demand of the workers, or, if you please, through general changes of the regulations. Where would the Senator vest the opportunity of meeting such exigencies or emergencies after the act of Congress had been specifically passed and made imperative upon all?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is a good enough lawyer to know, without my giving him an extended answer, that an act of God or a public enemy would exempt anybody from the provisions of an 8-hour or any other kind of an hour law.

Mr. LEWIS. But a business emergency, affording opportunity of more profit, would not be an act of God.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator has any doubts about that matter, the exemption could be stated in the law—"except in case of an emergency threatening loss of life or property."

Mr. LEWIS. Where would the Senator put the discretion which might be exercised?

Mr. TYDINGS. In the courts, where it belongs. We now have exemptions from any number of our criminal statutes. Where would the Senator from Illinois put the authority—in a board that is not a court?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer that I am opposed to the whole system of boards. I opposed it at the beginning, but now that it has been adopted as a system of government, where else would the Senator from Maryland put it?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me answer the Senator specifically. In other words, he says the exemptions must be decided by somebody. He would have the power to decide them placed in a board that is not as yet established, composed of five men sitting here in Washington, rather than in the United States courts, which have been established for a long time, and are almost as old as the Republic, and are used to construing and passing on criminal statutes every day. I submit to him, which of the two agencies, by experience and tradition, is the better fitted to deal with the situation which the Senator pictures?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator that under the doctrine we speak of as equity there is no authority of law to go to any court and ask it to make an exception to a general law in behalf of individuals. Therefore it could not be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the law itself would provide that the 8-hour limitation should not apply in case of an act of God, or of a public enemy, or something beyond the control of the individual.

Mr. LEWIS. But where discretion must be exercised where would the Senator put the discretion?

Mr. TYDINGS. In the courts.

Mr. LEWIS. Then do I understand that the Senator advocates that we pass the bill, and if someone wishes to be exempt from its operations for the benefit of a particular locality, he is to make a petition to the court, go through the procedure of the tribunal, then through an appeal, and finally, at the end, when everybody is dead, worn out, or bankrupt, get some relief?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would not have any exemptions from the law; but take the instance the Senator pictures, namely, that of a flood: The Senator can just imagine the United States district court in Ohio sentencing a member of, we will say, the fire department of Cincinnati for working 16 hours a day because there was a great flood on, threatening the loss of lives and property along the Ohio River. I venture to say that that situation never would arise; that where there was a great fire or a great flood, no court would consider enforcing the law any more than it would consider that a soldier ought to be punished for murder because he shot down a man in a battle in a war in which his country was engaged. It is still murder to kill a man. The penal statutes have not been repealed; but if your country should be at war, and you should shoot down one of the enemy, nobody would think of trying you for murder in a case of a great national emergency.

Mr. LEWIS. I must assert that the able Senator does not meet the position. What would he do, in what way would he vest any discretion in matters of business or emergencies in the affairs of life which would call for the application of some exception, such as an exception in the amount of time or in the amount of wage, an increase in the amount of time, or an increase of opportunity for more work and more output, in order that benefit might result because of the new demand? Where would the Senator put that discretion?

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator give me an illustration of what he has in mind? Let us take a steel company. Will the Senator tell me what he has in mind with reference to the output of steel?

Mr. LEWIS. Promptly I put it more definitely to the Senator. I come back to his home.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

Mr. LEWIS. The building of ships at this time is required by the Senator's own people, and asked for, and therefore there is a demand around us. Suppose it is shown that the desire is to have more time in which they can build these additional ships. They have the orders for them, and can do the work at once, whereas if they wait a length of time, the opportunity passes by. Where would the Senator put the authority to determine the practicability of this demand?

Mr. TYDINGS. Those who take that view do not want an 8-hour day. We are not going to have an 8-hour day if we exempt everybody who wants to be exempted.

Mr. LEWIS. Not everybody. In an emergency, where would the Senator put the authority to determine the needs?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will take the Senator's illustration. Why should the ship company, which is engaged in the commercial business of building ships, ask for an exemption?

Mr. LEWIS. It would depend on whether building more ships at the price they can get at the time, by putting more men to work would justify the exemption.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut he provides for that very case. In his substitute he provides that the workweek be enlarged or diminished so as to absorb all the physically qualified people who may be out of work and who want to work. In other words, the philosophy of the substitute of the Senator from Connecticut is that he believes that whatever work there is ought to be shared by all those who are physically and skillfully qualified to perform the work.

If in the case of the shipyard, it is working 8 hours a day, it can put on two other shifts of 8 hours a day, and work 24 hours; but no man will be working more than 8 hours a day. My point is that I am not necessarily contending for an 8-hour day, or a 6-hour day, or a 10-hour day. My point is that there has not been one single argument, if Congress wants an 8-hour day, why it should not provide it by statute, rather than by the ruling of a commission.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, would my able friend suggest that in all emergencies which might arise, for business accommodation or profit, or the increase of the opportunity for extra employment, or hours, or numbers, exemptions should be written into the statute and provided for by the law, with the possible exceptions which might be thought necessary?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is my point. I do not mean to say that there should not be an exemption written into the law. What I am saying is that it is perfectly possible for Congress to write a statute, with proper exemptions, which will fix an 8-hour day, if Congress has made up its mind to fix an 8-hour day, rather than by a board or a commission.

Mr. LEWIS. Placing in the act of Congress the exemption of such an emergency as might arise, the Senator believes, would avoid the necessity of putting the discretion in any executive board?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is my contention.

Mr. LEWIS. I catch the Senator's point.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator that I am not contending at all that there may not have to be exceptions and exemptions made in the law. What I am contending is that we can write them here just as well as a board can write them; and, so far, there has been no evidence, no fact, no logic, no testimony, to show why, if we want an 8-hour day, there is any business of a normal nature which cannot conform to it, assuming we give them time enough to do it; and I am contending the way to do it is by statute and not by a board or commission, which may disrupt more business than it will assist.

Mr. LEWIS. Will my able friend answer me this question: Assuming his policy to be as he says, and that it should be carried out as he suggests, that in the act of Congress there should be exceptions of this emergency or that condition, which will allow a change, who shall decide? Who does he intimate will be the judge as to whether the conditions have arisen under the law as permitted?

Mr. TYDINGS. If it is a penal statute, the United States courts.

Mr. LEWIS. As to a statute without providing a penalty, but simply a business undertaking, how would we decide whether an emergency had arisen or not?

Mr. TYDINGS. It would provide a penalty, just as the pending bill provides a penalty. But the one to decide whether an exemption or exception came within the law would be the United States court, not a board or a commission.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator would send these matters to the courts for decision, upon whatever evidence there was to offer?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. So far neither the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill nor any other Senator in this body, I repeat, has offered one scintilla of evidence to show why Congress itself should not provide, with proper exemptions, an 8-hour day, if we are going to have an 8-hour day, rather than leave it to a board or a commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McADOO in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to get into a discussion or argument with the Senator, but I should like to ask him whether he means that he favors a rigid, statutory 8-hour day, applicable to all industries, and universally applicable to all territory in the United States?

Mr. TYDINGS. My answer is that I am going to support the Maloney amendment, which provides that whatever work there is in the country shall be divided, in theory, among those qualified in skill to perform it. In other words, if there are 6,000,000 out of employment, the workweek shall be one thing. On the other hand, if there were no big army of unemployed, it would, of course, lengthen the workweek so as to take care of the situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who is to administer the flexibility about which the Senator is now speaking?

Mr. TYDINGS. The only flexibility in the Maloney amendment is a finding of fact.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who finds that fact?

Mr. TYDINGS. The board finds it.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that we do not get away from a board.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; we do. The board has nothing to do with regulating any industry. The point is that the board is only a fact-finding institution. The amendment provides that when there are 6,000,000 people out of employment the workweek shall be thus and so, when there are 4,000,000 out of employment the workweek shall be less, and when there are 2,000,000 out of employment, the workweek shall be less.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the board finds the facts, who puts into effect any flexibility as the result of the facts?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is in the law itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. It cannot be automatic.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; it is automatic. The President issues a proclamation.

Mr. BARKLEY. The President issues a proclamation upon the receipt of a report from the board?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that in that case the President, in addition to the board, fixes the wage.

Mr. TYDINGS. He simply gives it publicity.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that it cannot be a rigid, statutory 8-hour day, or any other kind of day, applicable to the whole country, without the intervention of someone to make it workable?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that there is a board and the President.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. I concede that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask one further question.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator spoke of wages. I was not talking about wages. I am speaking about hours only.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was going to ask the Senator, when I rose, whether he intended to offer an amendment to the bill fixing a rigid 8-hour day applicable throughout the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I do not think I am qualified to offer such an amendment on the floor of the Senate. But if the committee—and I do not suggest this to delay—were to bring in a bill with proper exemptions, I think I should favor it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Inasmuch as the Maloney amendment is not now pending, I was wondering whether we could not get a vote on the one which is pending.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that half of my time has been utilized in answering questions which have been propounded.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been an interesting discussion.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to submit, in conclusion, and I do not desire to delay a vote, that so far as I have heard there has not been a single, solitary scintilla of evidence offered by any witness before the committee, or by any Senator on the floor, that denies that Congress can, if Congress desires, pass a law providing for an 8-hour day, with proper exemptions, without any board at all. So far there has not been one single bit of evidence to show why that cannot be done in 6 months or a year, as we may want to provide; and if it can be done that way, my statement is that Congress ought to do it and not leave it up to a board of five men.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate at great length, but the proposed legislation is of such great importance to the country, and I feel especially to my section, that I cannot withhold expression as to its merits or demerits. Others have spoken as to the work, patriotic in character, of the men who are on the Committee on Education and Labor, and I join in those expressions. They have performed very arduous and what in their opinion is good work, and I suppose that if we are to employ the methods which have been prescribed in this proposal this is about as good as could have been worked out.

I never fall out with my colleagues because they may have an opinion different from mine touching public questions. I know that there are in the hearts and minds of other men convictions and a philosophy of doing things different from mine. I have at times been accused of being a conservative. Well, suppose I accept that encomium.

I do not know what a conservative is. In my service in the House and Senate I have voted for much progressive legislation. Indeed, if this administration is progressive, I am a progressive. If this administration is conservative, then I am to be classed as a conservative.

I do not like to go as far as some others desire to go, because I think it may sometimes do injury to go so far. Perhaps I do not want to travel as fast as some others because I might get out of breath. I have often felt sympathetic with the old ox down in my country in July days, that had been worked all day in the sun, who sees over in the distance a little shade under the tree, and then you cannot hold that ox back; he wants to get under that shade. I sometimes think I have traveled so fast that I like to get under the shade and rest a little while. I think there are many questions that deserve a little more deliberation and consideration perhaps than other people think those questions deserve.

I am not finding fault with anyone who believes in the high merits of this legislation and in its wisdom. I think I can see in it possibilities of great danger, and that it may do more harm in some respects than good. I come from a section which is no better perhaps than other sections of the country. We have some bad employers. We have some good employers. We have some bad laborers, and we have some good laborers. I think we have a civilization and a citizenship that is just as high and just as good as any. I do not think our employers want to treat labor any worse than the employers in other sections, and, indeed, I know that in the great majority of cases the employers in the United States want to see their labor get along happily, obtain fair wages, and they want to go about as far—I am talking about the majority of employers—as the economic rules and good business management will permit.

So, Mr. President, I take a different position with reference to this proposal than is taken by some of my colleagues. It is said that this is an administration measure. I suspect that the President never read the measure in his life. Mme. Perkins may have read it—I do not know. I know if the measure is passed that madam is going to have a good deal of say in its administration. And, to be perfectly frank, because I would not want to withhold anything from my colleagues, that is one among many other reasons why I am not for this legislation. We must reflect and be governed somewhat by the light of experience. I do not care to vote for legislation which will affect the people of my State and the American people generally, that will permit or direct its execution to persons who have an antipathy against my section, who have an idea that our women wear no shoes, and who have various impressions about my people which are not true, and whose assertions, in fact, in those respects are unfounded.

Of course, there are some women down there who do not wear shoes. [Laughter.] There are some men down there who do not wear shoes. But our women are just as beautiful and just as well dressed, as the women in other sections of the country. Of course, if madam could make more visits down there and associate with our people, she, like other persons from other sections of the country who have come and associated with the citizens of my section, would perhaps come to love them, and, like many other persons who have visited there, would want to stay there, and would form a different opinion from what she now has.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I can well understand the feeling that the Senator from Mississippi has, and I want to reinforce what he has to say, because one does not have to go very far in the city of New York to find the most abject poverty that exists on the face of the earth, people whose clothes are ragged and who are miserably housed, although, as the Senator says, the women are handsome even so—and the women in the city of New York are as handsome as those in any part of the South.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no complaint to find with Senators and others who have reformed their own States, like my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. Since 1913, I believe he said, he had made conditions perfect up there. But there are some others who think that perhaps the conditions up there are not in every respect perfect.

Mr. President, this bill goes pretty far. It gives the Department of Labor the right to go into any manufacturing plant in this country and investigate every detail as to its records. It can appoint interested parties—for there is no proscription or restriction in this bill prohibiting the Department of Labor from appointing a competitor—and such investigators may go into the plants of this country to get certain data to carry out the purposes of this bill. I do not want to give that much power to anyone.

Mr. President, I remember the days of the N. R. A. The N. R. A. legislation came out of my committee. I championed it upon the floor of the Senate. For days and days we heard testimony as to its beneficial or injurious effects. From having heard that testimony, I know how difficult it is to obtain an exemption when an exemption is desired. The days of the N. R. A. will not be forgotten, especially by Senators who the other day were so anxious to take care of the thresher of wheat or oats, who did not want him to come under the provisions of this bill. To me the startling thing about this legislation is that the friends of the farmer, the representatives of the agricultural interests, want the thresher exempted, and he is exempted, and then they are afraid the bill might in the remotest degree touch the farmer, and they want him exempted, too.

If the provisions of the bill are so bad for agriculture, what is there about industry that we might look at as unfair and be prejudiced against? How is the man who threshes wheat or oats going to be exempt when we pass this legislation with all the machinery that goes with enforcement? He must come down here, make his application to get his permit, if the administration of the measure is conducted like the N. R. A., and I cannot imagine how it can be run in any other way to give exemptions to people.

Senators have gone through the labyrinth of these departments, in an effort to find what they were seeking. After the application for exemption is made, those in the departments will then take several days to consider it. They must hear the other side of the proposition, and then one individual in one of the bureaus says it is all right. He sends it up to some higher-up, and the applicant may spend quite a while here in Washington in that department trying to get his exemption, and perhaps he does not get his exemption after all.

In various sections of the country there are creameries. Do Senators who represent farmers who operate cooperative creameries in small towns which employ a few individuals think they are exempt? No; they are not exempt. But if they should be exempted—as the bill is traveling now, it looks like we are going to exempt pretty nearly everyone—those operating creameries will have to come here to Washington to get their permits to be exempted.

There have been many farm cooperatives organized. I congratulate the great Midwest for what has been done toward cooperation, in organizing cooperative elevators, cooperative packing plants, cooperative creameries, and what not. Do Senators think that the operators of such cooperative organizations are exempt under this bill? No. But if we should exempt them under the terms of the bill, they must after a while come here to get their permits of exemption.

Do Senators think that those farmers in the great Middle West who are raising hogs and belong to cooperative packing plants are exempt? No; they are not exempt. However, before we complete the bill, they may be exempted also. But they must travel here to Washington, through the labyrinth of this bureau, to get their permits for exemption.

Oh, yes; yesterday we included the cotton gin in my country as to hours but not as to wages. And the cottonseed-oil mills are included in this proposition. Perhaps they will be taken out after a while.

The farmers are affected in 10,000 different ways, and we need not be deceived about that. Why should we want the farmer to be exempted in every way and pay so little attention to industry?

I have voted with labor throughout my 26 years of service. I have respect for William Green. I had great respect for Samuel Gompers. I respect the American Federation of Labor. I do not know anything about the C. I. O. [Laughter.] I just do not understand it; that is all. I have not had time to do so. Perhaps I may understand it in time. I know, however, that in my State industry and labor have gotten along very well together. We have had few strikes in Mississippi and there have been few strikes in other parts of the South. Mills operating there, in many instances, are financed by home capital. They employ, in many instances, the sons and daughters of farmers in the vicinity. The boys and girls live on the farm and come into town to work in the factories. They have gotten along well; but recently we have become faddists; we have seen the rise of the so-called marathon dances. For a while women and girls wear their dresses short and then they start the fad of wearing them long. We are a great faddist people. A little while ago the country was swept almost from one end to the other by what were called "sit-down strikes." About such things some people speak up and others do not. They seem to become a threatened danger to us, and then they pass off in a little while. So movements come and go.

When the sit-down strike movement started emissaries of that movement were sent down to my State, for instance, to a little city there which is prosperous, Tupelo, Miss., for which the T. V. A. has done so much. Local capital organized some plants there, among them a garment factory, as I recall, which made garments out of cotton. A sit-down strike was started. I do not know for what reason. But the stockholders were called in meeting. They and the labor representatives could not get together. So the stockholders said, "We have been losing money for 6 or 7 years; we have operated the plant notwithstanding that fact in order to give employment to people and help the Government out, so that our employees would not have to be thrown upon the W. P. A. rolls." They had operated at a loss, but they saw they could not continue to do so, in view of the demands which were being made. So the stockholders unanimously agreed to liquidate the concern and go out of business. When, however, they filed the papers for liquidation in the court and the case was pending the Labor Relations Board's representative, with some representatives of the C. I. O., appeared objecting to the stockholders liquidating their own institutions. In this little city where 1,700 girls, as I recall, and for the most part girls from the country, who were brought in every day in busses, were employed, and who were perfectly happy and contented, under this new regime the emissaries of the C. I. O. came in and made certain demands on the heads of this institution, who were fine gentlemen and who wanted to be fair to their employees. So the employers called the employees together and asked, "How many of you are satisfied and how many of you want to quit?" Out of the 1,700, only 8 wanted to quit. Yet today that institution is tied up. I called on the Labor Relations Board and pleaded with them, telling them that I thought the Labor Relations Board was created for the purpose of trying to help in such a situation and bring about a solution of the differences. I did not get very far.

We have that background. My State is full of raw materials such as cotton and some lumber—though not much. Much has been said about lumber. That seems to be an industry which has been singled out. There are some good men engaged in the lumber industry and some bad ones in it; there are some employers that pay reasonable wages and some who do not. That is always true of every industry. But the great virgin forests of my State have been denuded, and the forests of Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina and Florida have also been denuded; they are gone. So the mills there have to work on timber that is not virgin pine. It is of a lower grade and less plentiful; the costs and economic conditions are against the operators there. So they probably cannot pay as high wages as can be paid by some of the more prosperous industries. I am not going to condemn a whole industry because there may be some bad people in it.

I know that the Secretary of Labor wants a universal wage—and I am not going to find fault with that, except for the purpose of the discussion of this bill. She cannot see the differentials. Yet in the operation of the National Recovery Act there were differentials all down the line affecting various sections of the country. I remember that in the lumber code a wage of 24½ cents an hour was provided in southern lumber regions, while a wage of 42½ cents an hour was provided in the great Pacific coast region. So there were differentials in that code; and there always have been differentials. Yet this bill would give to the board to be created a right to fix a standard minimum. There are beautiful words written into the measure as to the board taking various factors into consideration and imposing standards after carefully considering conditions and proceeding cautiously so as not to disrupt any industry. That is wonderful; I am glad those words are in the bill; they may operate as a restraint; but the power is to be reposed in a board with such important and far-reaching powers. I am not willing to delegate such power to any group of individuals.

I want reasonable wages; I want the employees to get just as much as they can—just as much as the industry will bear; but, on the other hand, I am not willing to destroy any business, large or small, by legislative mandate, and I know, if this bill shall be passed, some businesses will be destroyed.

Take a little business, in a certain section, which is trying to make ends meet. It might or might not be able to increase the wages of its employees according to the order of the board. It may have reached the saturation point so that it cannot borrow money and cannot continue operations if its expenses are increased. Of course, the bill says the board will have to take those things into consideration. Whether or not the board will do so I do not know. I thought provision ought to be made for the board to take into consideration many other factors.

What has happened here during the last 5 years? I think the record written by this administration has been wonderful. During the days of the depression we did everything possible to help business; we have done everything possible to help the laboring man and to help the farmer and the underprivileged, but there is no group of our citizens to whom we have extended our arms further to help than unemployed labor, the poorest people in the land. Have we not expended nearly $10,000,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States through the W. P. A. and P. W. A. and other agencies of the Government to give employment to people? Of course, we have. Yet this bill might do the very thing that we have sought not to do and which we have hoped would not be done.

The pending amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] provides that the terms of the bill shall not affect industries employing 10 persons or less. Very well. What will that bring about? It will bring about a situation just as did the N. R. A. between the larger units of industry and the smaller units.

Under the N. R. A. some said it would create a monopoly and others said the law could not be enforced against the small fellow. The indictments, however, that were brought at that time because of noncompliance with the codes were brought against the little fellow. It was also said that the law created a competition which was unfair. We had such a condition then, and industry wanted to get out from under it.

Consider the case of an industry that employs 12 persons. If the pending amendment to the committee amendment exempting industries employing 10 persons or less should be adopted, what would happen to the industry that is employing 12 persons? The operator of that industry would probably say, "We cannot employ more than 10, and so we will discharge 2." We do not know how many little industries of the country will do that. So the W. P. A. rolls will be added to, and next year Mr. Harry Hopkins will send to Congress a request for another billion and a half dollars to take care of the unemployed.

What else does this bill propose to do? It will, if enacted, affect harmfully industries that have little capital and that have to pay high interest rates and borrow money from banks in order to exist and give employment to people. I know of many in my section that have had to do it while passing through the distressing years of the depression. If they can possibly get the money in order to continue—and some of them will get it—if they employ the cheaper class of labor now, they will so mechanize their plants that the machinery will do the work of individual workers whom we are trying to help, and many will be thrown out of employment. The wheels of machinery will do the work and the list of the unemployed will be increased.

It is a wonderful thing to pay good wages; yes; but let us not, in order to pay such wages, strike down business that is on its last legs to get along and survive.

We have just passed the Social Security Act. What does it do? It lays a tax on the employers in order to help the unemployed and to provide old-age retirement benefits. Business can stand so much; it cannot stand any more; and, for one, I am not in favor of destroying any legitimate industry, large or small, and I am not going to vote for any measure which I think threatens the very economic life of my section, as well as other sections of the country.

Mark you, Mr. President, the agricultural interests may be exempted from this bill if it passes, although I doubt seriously whether it will pass.

Strange elements are at work in this country. They work among the farmers the same as they work upon the unsuspecting people of the land. They start a crusade for a program which they say will not include the farmers. The next fight will be to determine whether or not agriculture shall be included in the legislation. It takes time for this thing to work sometimes, but we have all seen how people move under the spell of powerful organizations and the pleasant-sounding arguments of those who appeal to the prejudice and passions of communities. If there ever was a time when those in high places should keep their feet on the ground, it is now, and they should not be following strange theorists into strange byways.

Yes, Mr. President, I think it is better that the bill should be divided and that we should deal only with hours of labor. I can understand, if we revise the hours of labor, that more people might be drawn into industry and given work; but I can understand at the same time that when we increase wages to that point beyond which business cannot go and exist, we close up business and throw people out of work. I wish the provisions of the bill could be cut in twain.

Mr. President, I have said perhaps more than I should have said. I wanted to discuss the increased cost of living made necessary by this legislation, but I shall not. I am opposed to the bill. If some Senator makes a motion to recommit it, I am going to vote for the motion. I think there are more possibilities in this bill for injury and danger to the economic structure of every part of this country than in any piece of proposed legislation that has come before the Congress.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 8007. An act to restore the per-diem fee of $4 for service of jurors in Federal courts; and

H. J. Res. 446. Joint resolution to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of certain bequests of James Reuel Smith, late of the city of Yonkers, State of New York.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2416) relating to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION

The following bill and joint resolution were each read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 8007. An act to restore the per-diem fee of $4 for service of jurors in Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. J. Res. 446. Joint resolution to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of certain bequests of James Reuel Smith, late of the city of Yonkers, State of New York; to the calendar.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I offer to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 51, line 2, after "3);", to insert the following:

or any employee of any common carrier by motor vehicle subject to the qualifications and maximum hours of service provisions of the Motor Carrier Act, 1935 (U. S. C., title 49, ch. 8) provided that the wage provisions of this act shall apply.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, strictly speaking, the amendment does not provide an exemption. It refers to the drivers of busses. The bill itself provides that its provisions shall not apply to any railway employees subject to the provisions of the Hours of Service Act.

Of course safety is the important consideration. Under the Interstate Commerce Act it is provided that it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate the qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees of common carriers. Following out that provision and with due regard to safety, the Commission has made a report fixing the hours of labor of bus drivers and employees. My amendment seeks only to include them, as well as railroad engineers and employees, under the terms of the bill. I may say that the amendment has been included in the similar bill now pending in the House.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it was the policy of the committee, in cases where regulation of hours and wages are given to other governmental agencies, to write the bill in such way as not to conflict with such regulation. That action was taken with reference to maritime workers. It was taken with reference to railroad workers insofar as they were governed by the Hours of Service Act.

The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] would apply the same principle to truck drivers insofar as hours of labor are concerned. It is my understanding that the hours have been regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission recently.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; it has been done during the present month.

Mr. BLACK. That has occurred since the hearings before the committee. The committee were of the opinion, when we orginally took up the bill for consideration, that it was exceedingly important that the long hours of truck drivers should be regulated in the interest of public safety. That had not been done by any other governmental agency at the time of the hearings. Consequently the amendment was not adopted by the committee.

Speaking for myself personally, it is my belief that it would certainly be unwise to have the hours of service regulated by two governmental agencies. I am further of the opinion that the Interstate Commerce Commission, since it has the power and has exercised it, should be the agency to be entrusted with this duty. We were very much disturbed about the matter of hours of labor required of employees of trucking companies and associations, particularly the long hours the drivers are compelled to work. Undoubtedly the Interstate Commerce Commission has adopted a regulation under that law. So far as the pending amendment is concerned, and so far as concerns the amendment which is to be submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] with reference to certain employees in the aviation service who are now under the Railroad Labor Act, it is my own belief that both of the amendments should be adopted.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I could not hear all the discussion. When I heard the amendment read the matter of truck drivers came to my mind. Am I to understand the Senator from Alabama to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission is now undertaking to regulate hours and wages of truck drivers?

Mr. BLACK. Not wages, but hours of labor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have reliable information that at least up to 10 days ago truck drivers in my State were being paid $9.60 a week for a 48-hour week. Is there any provision in the bill that can reach such a situation? Under the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission or under the provisions of the bill now before the Senate, can that situation be controlled? Those men are compelled to work for $9.60 per 48-hour week and feed and clothe themselves. That is a situation which to my mind is glaringly bad.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I do not by my amendment seek to fix wages. It relates merely to hours of labor. Under the Interstate Commerce Act the Interstate Commerce Commission is given authority to prescribe maximum hours and qualifications for service. My amendment seeks only to leave the fixing of hours, but not the fixing of wages, with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The bill would take care of the wage question.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I have the assurance of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], chairman of the committee, that the bill now before the Senate will take care of a wage situation such as I have described?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, as the bill is now written, employees of trucking companies are included in both the minimum-wage and maximum-hour provisions. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] would exempt them only from the maximum-hour provision. The question of minimum wages would still be governed by the provisions of the bill. The reason why the Senator from New Jersey is offering the amendment is that the law now imposes upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the responsibility and duty of regulating hours.

As I said, speaking for myself alone, I am of the opinion that it would be very unwise indeed to seek to entrust the same responsibility to two governmental agencies.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I agree with that.

Mr. BLACK. I further believe, inasmuch as the Interstate Commerce Commission regulates truck and railroad employees, and insofar as the law relates to certain aviation employees, the regulation of the hours of such employees should remain with the Interstate Commerce Commission under those laws. Therefore, I do not object to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If a trucking company employs 10 persons or less, will this bill apply to it as to wages?

Mr. BLACK. Not if the bill is finally passed with the amendment which was adopted. It would not include any business of any type with 10 employees or less.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then truck drivers would have no remedy if their employer employed 10 persons or less?

Mr. BLACK. The same thing would be true with reference to the employees of any business, because under the amendment which was adopted by the Senate the bill would not apply to any business which employs less than 10 persons.

Mr. MOORE. The interstate commerce law would apply as to hours.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As to hours but not as to wages?

Mr. MOORE. No, sir.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am interested in wages.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee, I suggest that my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] modify his amendment by adding, after the parenthesis on line 5, the words:

And any air transport employee subject to the provisions of title II of the Railway Labor Act approved April 10, 1936.

Mr. MOORE. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 51, line 14, after the word "operations", it is proposed to insert the following:

The term "person employed in agriculture", as used in this act, insofar as it shall refer to fresh fruits or vegetables, shall include persons employed within the area of production engaged in preparing, packing, or storing such fresh fruits or vegetables in their raw or natural state.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, on day before yesterday I discussed the situation upon which the amendment is based.

The amendment is very strictly drawn in an effort to limit the operations defined therein purely to those of an agricultural nature. I should like to say that, so far as I am concerned, I cannot agree with the position taken by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], indicating that there might be some danger about extending this measure to agriculture. So far as I am concerned, I think there should be a regulation of hours and wages for all workers in the country; but the bill does not attempt to do that. The bill attempts to exempt agricultural workers. The situation in which I am principally interested is a situation involving the apple industry; and it is one in which, unless an exemption of this kind is made, there will be a discrimination against the small producer and in favor of the larger producer.

In other words, in a small apple operation of 5 or 10 or 15 or 20 acres, it is not possible for the owner of the ranch to purchase and maintain on the ranch the necessary machinery which is required in the washing operation under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture. It is not possible for him to provide on his ranch the necessary storage space to store the apples until such time as it is possible to take them to market. It is not possible on the small ranch to supply the space for packing the apples. Therefore, it is necessary for such a farmer either to join other farmers in a cooperative, or to send his apples to a packing house, and have these operations, which are purely agricultural operations, performed elsewhere than at the situs of the ranch or the farm.

The purpose of this amendment is to give protection against that situation, and to make it possible for the small fruit and vegetable producer to operate upon the same basis as the large fruit and vegetable producer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, apple raisers are already exempt, are they not, under the term "agricultural workers"?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The amendment applies only to the packing, storing, and preparing of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not that exempt all of those engaged in that industry?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The amendment is very short, and I will read it:

The term "person employed in agriculture", as used in this act, insofar as it shall refer to fresh fruits or vegetables, shall include persons employed within the area of production engaged in preparing, packing, or storing such fresh fruits or vegetables in their raw or natural state.

Mr. CONNALLY. The effect of the amendment is to exempt all employees of apple-packing plants; is it not?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If they are engaged in the area of production, and so long as the apples are in their natural or raw state; yes, sir.

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. REYNOLDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield first to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, did the Senator include in his amendment the word "transportation"?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I did not include the word "transportation", because I do not believe that the transportation should be exempt; and I did not include "processing."

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will yield further for a moment, we have the same problem of the apple grower in my State. The small orchardist has seasonal work in the neighborhood in the picking, sorting, storage, and transportation of his apples. What I mean by "transportation"—perhaps it is not the right use of the term—is the carriage of apples in the ripe season to the nearby markets, which in my case is New York City, and the work of those who drive the trucks and rush the apples from the cooperative or private storage house to the city; so does not the Senator think that word, too, should be used?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator that as the amendment was originally prepared it had "transportation and marketing" in it. I have tried to limit the amendment to what I consider purely agricultural operations. Perhaps I am incorrect about it, but I do not feel that taking apples into market and selling them are parts of agricultural operations.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I live in Rockland County, N. Y., which is on the New Jersey line; and while the city of New York is the large market for the apples raised in Rockland County, a great many apples are disposed of in Newark, N. J. The truck of the farmer carries the fruit to the market in Newark, which is a standard market where merchants go to get material, and the farmer stays there on the market stand until he can dispose of his truckload of apples. That is what I have in mind, because, of course, the transaction of getting rid of the product may take late afternoon and all night. So as I originally introduced the amendment I had in it "transportation and marketing", and also the language the Senator used, which makes it clear that the transaction is in the neighborhood; that it is not a great, big transaction involving a trip across the continent.

Have I made clear the thought I have in mind to the point where the Senator will accept the words "transportation and marketing" and make them an addition to his amendment?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator from New York that I studied the amendment very carefully; and when we get beyond the point of preparing, packing, and storing—those operations which can be done on the farm by the large farmer as compared with the small one—I feel that we are going beyond the point of agricultural operations, and that the work really is not agricultural work.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator, and do so, of course, in all good spirit; but what I am saying is founded upon actual knowledge. The farmer may be a very small farmer. He may not produce more than one or two or three hundred barrels of apples, but in order to get them to market he has to put them on a truck—his own truck or a hired truck—and go the short distance, perhaps 20 miles, to the town where there is a central market where he may dispose of his product. That seems to me to be very obviously a part of the agricultural transaction, and yet I fear that I have not been able to convince the Senator from Washington to that effect.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Possibly I have convinced myself the other way so thoroughly that the Senator's statement has not served to change my mind about the matter.

Mr. COPELAND. As a matter of fact, is not the problem quite a different one in the great apple country of the West, where there are tremendous crops of apples which are taken in large quantities to the railroad station and shipped on to New York, where we buy and eat those apples; while, on the other hand, the small farmer in my section is not commercially engaged in the orchard business, as they are in the West, or as they are on the great plantation of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]? What the small farmer of my section does is a part of his farming transaction. He takes his apples to market and gets rid of them; and I want to help him as much as I can.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it not true, in keeping with what the Senator from New York has said, that in the State of the Senator who offered this amendment, the real truth is that the farmer takes the apples to a processing plant? I myself have seen this operation in the Senator's State, though the Senator knows about it much better than I do. The farmer takes the apple from the orchard to the processing plant. In other words, that is where the apple is really graded, and boxed, and prepared for shipment.

It seems to me that the Senator from New York is entirely correct in stating that up to the point where the apple is boxed and ready for shipment it is and remains a product of the farm, and is handled by the farmer. It seems to me the Senator is forgetting the real point of his amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. A moment ago, in explaining his amendment, the Senator from Washington made reference to orchards covering 15 or 20 acres. Am I to assume that the Senator had in mind the protection of the small producer?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The production of the small producer as compared with the larger producer. In other words, the small producer cannot afford to have the capital investment in the warehouse, the washing machinery, all of the necessary incidentals to this operation, while the larger producer can afford them, and he is exempt from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The small producer would hardly have more than 8 or 10 men employed in the gathering of a crop?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. He takes his apples to a warehouse, however, and there are more than 8 or 10 employed in the warehouse.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In that instance would not the Senator's amendment exclude from the provisions of the bill the larger cold-storage plants, where there are employed hundreds of men, and would not the amendment of the Senator from Washington really exempt from the provisions of the law the larger refrigerating plants throughout the entire country?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I limit my amendment to employees who are working upon products from the immediate area, products in their raw or natural state, in their preparation, packing, and storing. I do not think that in those operations there would be any large or enormous plants such as the Senator has in mind.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gathered from the terms of the amendment that it would actually remove from the provisions of the bill the larger cold-storage plants throughout the country. Of course, many of them we find in the cities of New York, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, and Seattle.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Those are not in the immediate production area.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But they would be included.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; they would not be included because they are not in the immediate production area.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask the Senator from North Carolina whether in all probability the point I have in mind is not provided for in the amendment he offered, which has just been adopted. His amendment, as I understand, applies the bill to those who employ 10 or more persons. Is that correct?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. As the Senator understands his amendment, does it mean that to a fruit farm such as I have described, unless there are in excess of 10 persons, the act would not apply?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Under my amendment any firm, individual, association, or corporation employing 10 or a less number of persons would not be subject to the provisions of the bill. That is why I made inquiry a moment ago as to whether or not the small producers of apples would not be reached by it. What I am particularly interested in ascertaining as to the amendment is whether or not it will be of material benefit to the small producer. I expect in a few moments to offer an amendment eliminating tobacco warehouses. There are 57 of them in North Carolina, and their work is seasonal. Eliminating them from the provisions of the proposed law would benefit the tobacco farmers of my State. So I am assuming that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington would actually be of benefit to the small fruit growers of his State. That is the intent, is it not?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is all I wanted to find out about it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to offer an amendment and have it read and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 60, line 20, to strike out the period at the end of the line and insert a comma and the following:

And provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph (c) shall not apply to employees employed in a plant located in dairy production areas in which milk, cream, or butterfat are received, processed, shipped, or manufactured.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. Would not the effect of his amendment be to exempt all industrial warehouses and packing plants in apple territory? There is no limit. The condition is that they are packing plants, and if they are, they are exempt.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If a packing plant is working upon fresh fruits or vegetables, in their raw or natural state, within the immediate production area, it would be exempt.

Mr. CONNALLY. My understanding is that the largest apple-packing plant in the world is located at Winchester, Va., right in the heart of a great apple-producing region. That would be exempt, would it not?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the work done in that plant is as described in the amendment, it would be exempt.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should a man engaged in packing apples be exempt, and a man packing lemons, or oranges, or grapefruit, not be exempt? What is there about apples that makes them entitled to exemption?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There is one very important thing about apples, so far as I am concerned, as compared with grapefruit, and that is that we grow apples in the State of Washington. [Laughter.]

The purpose of the amendment is not for the protection of the packing plant or for the protection of the owners of the packing plant. The cost is paid by the producer. These packing plants just pass the cost back to the man who produces the apples. The farmer pays the bill. The purpose of the amendment is to permit the small farmer, who cannot afford to have his own warehouse and cannot afford to have his own washing machine, to be placed upon a parity with the larger producers, who can afford to maintain their own warehouses and their own washing machines and their own equipment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose that any establishment dealing with apples as they come from the orchard is dealing with them in their raw state.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are many things which may be made from apples—for instance, applesauce, which I presume is not included within the regulations of the bill. But if we provide for the exemption of plants which are dealing with apples as a raw material, we include practically all plants which deal with apples, because they deal with them only as raw materials. Is that true?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I think the Senator is incorrect in that suggestion. The exemption applies when they deal with them in their raw or natural state. If they start making cider out of them, or start making apple sauce out of them, then they are processing and not dealing with them in their raw or natural state.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are dealing with the apple in its raw state.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Not after they put it through the first grinder. It then ceases to be in the raw or natural state.

Mr. BARKLEY. Somewhere between the apple and the cider this proposed law will take effect. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think there would be any difficulty as to a construction of that kind, because once it gets to the point which the Senator from Kentucky describes, then it becomes processing, and there is no inclusion of processing in the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Would the amendment apply to a cannery?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No.

Mr. BLACK. What would be the definition of the word "prepare"?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. "Prepare in the natural or raw state" is washing.

Mr. BLACK. It is limited, as the Senator understands, to the fruit as it actually comes from the tree?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator knows that the committee has tried to provide and is favorable to a complete exclusion of activities which are purely agricultural. We have tried to write the bill in such a way as to take care of that situation. What about the "area"? What would be the definition of "area"? Would it not be possible to define it more clearly to get the effect?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I gave considerable thought to that. I do not believe it is possible, and that is something which the board, which has been accused of receiving too much power, would have to decide. It would have to provide a definition of "immediate production area."

Mr. BLACK. The Senator believes that in order to obtain the effect of what the committee has tried to do in writing the bill, it is essential that this amendment be adopted insofar as this particular type of business is concerned?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I feel so, and it is for that reason that I am offering the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator whether he has conferred with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] as to this particular amendment?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I have not.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Florida has been very helpful in connection with the agricultural features of the bill and the agricultural functions, and I would very much appreciate it if the Senator from Washington would not ask for a vote, but would withdraw the amendment and discuss it with the Senator from Florida. I will say to the Senator that if it is satisfactory, and he believes it is in line with this definition, I shall not object to it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. At the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], I will temporarily withdraw the amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to tobacco warehouses, their employers or employees.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, North Carolina is the greatest producer of tobacco of any State in the Union. Of course, it is unnecessary for me to state that its grade of tobacco is considered the best of any in the world. In North Carolina we have approximately 57 tobacco warehouses. They are in actual operation only a few months out of each year. As a matter of fact, the farmer himself is the one who eventually pays the cost of operation of the warehouses; and I think these warehouses should be excluded from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that employment in tobacco warehouses is seasonal in character?

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, they are open for only several months of the year. I should say they are open not more than from 3 to 4 months of the year. In eastern North Carolina, of course, the market season is different than that in western North Carolina, where is grown the superior burley quality; but the warehouses as a rule are closed about 9 months of the year.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So the persons who are employed in these warehouses have only 3 or 4 months' employment during the year?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is all. Perhaps one or two men are employed throughout the year merely in the capacity of watchmen or repairmen; but, as a rule, the warehouses are in actual operation only during the selling season. In view of that fact I think they should be exempted from the provisions of the measure, because, after all, the small producer, the small farmer, is the one who actually pays the cost of operation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. How many persons are usually employed in such a warehouse?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That, of course, depends entirely upon the size of the warehouse. In North Carolina we have the largest tobacco warehouses in the world, but we also have quite a number of the smaller warehouses. They employ anywhere from 10 to 40 or 50 persons, according to the square-foot area and capacity of the warehouse. I recall that yesterday the Senate agreed to an amendment which gave protection to a number of agricultural enterprises. The amendment was offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. I am of the opinion that warehouses which employ from 40 to 50 persons during the time they operate should be excluded from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the employment is absolutely seasonal in character——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; it is seasonal in character.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. While I do not believe the bill should be emasculated by a long series of exemptions, yet, if there is to be an exemption for seasonal work in relation to fruits and vegetables, I cannot see that we are in a very good position to resist an amendment which is designed exclusively to provide an exception for a purely seasonal occupation in connection with the harvesting and marketing of tobacco.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky; and in yielding I wish to say that I have high hope that the Senator from Kentucky will be favorable to this amendment, because there are many tobacco warehouses in Kentucky which are in the same position as those in North Carolina.

Mr. BARKLEY. With respect to this amendment, I wish to say in a preliminary sense that I think the only rivalry existing between the States of North Carolina and Kentucky is in the production of tobacco. I think North Carolina produces more tobacco, but Kentucky produces better tobacco, so that we average up pretty well in the matter of tobacco.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I dislike to disagree with the Senator from Kentucky in that respect, but I must.

Mr. BARKLEY. With respect to this amendment, it is true that in the entire tobacco region—North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Kentucky, and every other State where tobacco is produced—many warehouses which are devoted only to the receipt of tobacco brought in by the farmers during what they call the tobacco season—which varies in different sections of the country, as the extent of the season also varies—operate only for a period of 3 or 4 months. Some of these warehouses are cooperative, and are owned by the farmers themselves. The farmers deliver their tobacco to the warehouses, and the tobacco is received by the organization of which the warehouses are a part for resale to the private tobacco market, largely dominated by some very large tobacco interests that have their situs in the Senator's State and elsewhere.

There are certain tobacco warehouses, however, that are not seasonal. I am afraid the language of the Senator's amendment would include them all. There are some tobacco warehouses to which the tobacco is delivered during the tobacco season, but during almost the whole year the warehouse operators engage in the process of prizing and stripping and stemming. I do not think the Senator means to exempt warehouses of that sort that engage in more or less year-round activity.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; that is not my intent, and I shall be very happy indeed to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky and provide whatever phraseology is necessary to be added to the amendment itself so that it will bring about the exemption of only those warehouses which are, as it might be said, engaged in seasonal work.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest to the Senator that at the end of his amendment there be added the words "where the employment is seasonal in character."

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be very glad to accept those words as part of my amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, is there not a clear definition of the functions of these warehouses in the names they bear? The Senator referred to a place where tobacco is prepared after it goes through the warehouse. Such places are called stemmeries; are they not?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. That work is not altogether done in stemmeries. In some States a considerable part of the work goes on in the warehouses, and the buildings are referred to generally by the public as warehouses.

I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will accept the language I have suggested?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I accept the language suggested by the Senator from Kentucky as part of my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. This situation applies to other States, as well as to the State of North Carolina.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, we have tobacco warehouses in Virginia, and I have never known one that has been engaged in the work of stripping and preparation of tobacco. That is done in the tobacco factories.

Mr. BARKLEY. Virginia produces a different type of tobacco from that produced in my State. In my State there are many of these establishments which are known as warehouses, and are referred to by the public as warehouses, in which the receipt of the tobacco is seasonal, but they continue the operation of prizing and preparation during a considerable part of the year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator from North Carolina has accepted the modification of his amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I accept that modification.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. I did not follow his amendment very closely. I think some modification has been made of his amendment. I wish to ask him whether cotton compresses and cotton warehouses are included in the amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The intent of the amendment which I offered is merely to exclude tobacco warehouses that are engaged in what may be called seasonal work, from 2 to 3 months in the year; and I accepted as part of my amendment language suggested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to make that intent more clear.

Mr. OVERTON. Is there any difference in the duration of operation between a cotton warehouse and a tobacco warehouse?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I made mention only of tobacco warehouses.

Mr. OVERTON. Are not cotton compresses and cotton warehouses engaged in as seasonal work as tobacco warehouses?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I suppose they are.

Mr. OVERTON. Would the Senator have any objection to including in his amendment cotton compresses and cotton warehouses?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I should have no objection, because in that instance also the little producer or farmer pays the bill, as I understand. I should have no objection to including in my amendment the language suggested by the Senator from Louisiana, because the work in the cotton warehouses and cotton compresses is purely seasonal.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] offered an amendment, which was agreed to by the Senate, which exempted cotton ginning from the workweek provisions of the bill. It does not exempt cotton ginning, however, from the wage provisions of the bill. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, it will exempt the warehousing of tobacco altogether from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is eliminated entirely from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. I think the Senator from North Carolina will agree with me—at least I hope he will—that his amendment should include cotton ginning and baling, compressing and warehousing.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to include them in the provisions of my amendment.

Mr. OVERTON. Then I ask the clerk to report from the desk the amendment as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, and the clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The amendment, as modified, reads as follows:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to tobacco warehouses, cotton compresses, cotton warehouses, cotton ginning and baling, their employers or employees, where the employment is seasonal in character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina accept the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, as modified.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the amendment will be promptly voted down. In my judgment, there is no reason for continuing to make exemptions with reference to every kind of processing that can be done. In the first place, the bill itself——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not entirely possible that all exemptions will be eliminated in conference?

Mr. BLACK. That may be entirely possible. I do not know what the House will do.

Mr. CONNALLY. The amendments which the Senate adopts will probably be deleted and eliminated in conference.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, this being a Senate bill, if it were agreed to by the House, the bill would not even be in conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kentucky is more optimistic than he usually is in that view. He says "if agreed to by the House"; but the House is already in disagreement with this bill. The committee of the House this morning, I understand, modified the bill so as to give the board power to fix wages as high as 70 cents an hour and hours as low as 35 a week. So that does not indicate that the House is thinking along the same lines as is the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I dislike very much to disagree with my good friend the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. This bill, however, in its present form provides proper exemptions under a proper statement of facts relating to seasonal activities. It is my belief that, if by name we exempt particular businesses, the dictionary should be searched and the knowledge of each Senator should be searched with reference to the particular activities within his own State—and I may say that some of these businesses have relation to the section of the country from which I come—and simply put them all in at once.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BONE. It becomes evident that if many more amendments of the character suggested are to be offered, it is going not only to come to a point where we might as well adopt a blanket amendment removing from the bill all seasonal employment, for if we eliminate some seasonal activities it would seem only reasonable that we should exempt from the provisions of the bill seasonal industries in all forms. I do not think that was the desire of the Senate or of the author of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. May I say to the Senator that, recognizing that there are some seasonal activities which raise different questions, we attempted to provide for them by the proper type of investigation by an agency that would investigate the question and would adopt regulations to suit the various types of seasonal activities. From my own personal knowledge, it is my belief that some of the things, as I said yesterday, which are included in this amendment are of such types that the provisions of the bill should not be applied to them with the same strictness with which they should be applied to other activities.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I understood the argument heretofore made by the very able and brilliant Senator from Alabama, who has charge of this bill, to be that it was the serious and bona-fide purpose and intent of the committee to exempt agriculture and those engaged in agriculture.

Therefore, under the provisions of the bill as it now stands, unquestionably purely agricultural operations would be exempted. Take the cotton farmer or planter who employs labor to plant his cotton. The labor so employed does not come under the provisions of this bill. The labor he employs in picking cotton does not come under the provisions of the bill. The labor he employs in hauling his seed cotton to the gin does not come under the provisions of the bill. But the cotton farmer, when he has his cotton ginned, has to pay for the ginning. It is a burden that is imposed upon the farmer. It is as much a burden as is the picking of the cotton and the planting of the cotton and the hoeing of the cotton. It is a step in the process of getting his agricultural product to market, and the ginning of the cotton is just as essential to getting the cotton to market as is the picking of the cotton in the field. Why, then, should those who are engaged in the ginning of cotton, the cost of which operation is imposed directly upon the farmer, come under the provisions of this bill? Why should they not be regarded as others who are engaged in labor connected with agriculture and the marketing of agricultural products?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I merely wish to make the observation that the Senator's argument would apply equally to tobacco farming.

Mr. OVERTON. I have no doubt that that is absolutely correct; and the same argument applies to the compressing and to the baling of cotton. It seems to me, if the Senator in charge of the bill desires to exempt those engaged in agricultural pursuits, that he should accede to this amendment. I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to speak, I was just about to say something about compresses. I do not understand that the compresses fit at all into the picture which has been drawn. I do not understand that it is necessary that compresses work long hours. They work throughout the year. They work when the cotton is brought to them. There is nothing perishable about the cotton. I can see no earthly reason why a cotton compress at a port should be exempted from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Senator if he would object to the adoption of an amendment exempting tobacco warehouses.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator I do not think that this is the proper way to provide exemptions for activities if they are entitled to be exempt. I think it is not right to take some types of business as to which the suggestion happens to be made here and ask for an amendment to exclude them, unless we are going to do away with the other provisions which give authority to the board to consider seasonal activities. Knowing the Senator's belief in the value of legislation of this kind, I know that he does not want a single exemption to be made legislatively or under the action of a board that would require long hours to be worked unnecessarily or wages to be paid that are below a standard of decency and the necessity of the person and which will fit the case. Bearing that in mind, may I say to the Senator that we have provided in the bill a system which would really determine those facts on a basis of knowledge of the industry gained from the introduction of evidence. The hearings would be public. It was stated yesterday by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that before the board the low-paid wage earners would not have a voice; that they would not be able to come to Washington. That is probably correct. It might also be stated that they are not here now; they are not here today. They have not been here during the past week.

Some of them can write letters and pay for postage stamps, but unfortunately they cannot employ anyone to write letters for them. Accordingly, it is necessary that we bear in mind this mute, inarticulate group if we are going to attempt to enact legislation to take care of the situation in the proper way.

We need to do that when we consider the statement with reference to the destruction of industry. Industry is important, but it is only important insofar as it relates to and serves human beings. Destruction of human beings after all ought to be entitled to an equal place with destruction of industry, big or little. I am speaking on the floor of the Senate not merely for the industries which some say might be jeopardized, but I want to try to say something for the human beings who have been jeopardized and who are today jeopardized by the working conditions under which they are compelled to live. They cannot appear before the Congress. It is true they cannot appear before the board in Washington.

I sincerely hope that those good friends of the measure such as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] who has offered this amendment, will recognize that we have taken care of the situation. I hope that the Senator from North Carolina, whose heart I know beats in sympathy with those whom the bill is trying to protect, will join with me and that he will withdraw his amendment and aid me in seeing that we do not further emasculate the bill or make it possible to do so.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have a memorial signed by certain gentlemen of my State who met with some of us day before yesterday to protest against the passage of the pending bill. I am acquainted with each and every one of them. They represent a cross section of the different occupations of my State. Without having it read, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the South Carolina Congressional Delegation:

The undersigned representatives of agriculture, commerce, and industries of South Carolina designated to appear before the South Carolina delegation in Congress present their objections to the Black-Connery bill:

1. So much legislation affecting business has either been enacted or projected that investment of capital has been discouraged. The effect of this can be easily imagined. The South needs capital; it has great resources awaiting development.

2. If this bill is intended to increase the purchasing power of an industrial group, it does so at the expense of all those who buy but do not enjoy the benefits of the bill.

The first effect of the operation of such a law would be to dislocate industry and increase unemployment. Those industries which cannot operate on the projected pay and time scale would be forced out of business, leaving their employees without work and compelling the Government to maintain a permanent W. P. A. or else break down the unemployment-insurance funds through too heavy and precipitate a strain.

3. So far as labor is concerned, this bill is entirely unnecessary, since by the Wagner Act the great arm of the Government guarantees and protects labor in negotiating with capital.

4. In common equity, all those who labor should enjoy the same consideration, whatever may be the field of work. If agriculture cannot operate on such a pay scale, it is equally true as regards other work.

5. All our experience has proved the ineptitude of bureaucratic authority over production and distribution. The Food Administration and the Fuel Administration and many other boards and commissions have proved that in a country of such vast extent as ours, with such a variety of interests, such social and economic peculiarities as found in some sections, one body, one commission, cannot administer the law in intimate detail.

This is a nation of small businesses. What makes the Nation is not a great number of Du Ponts but a vast number of small enterprises struggling to survive and to expand.

The Black-Connery bill will freeze the advantages to the vast aggregation of capital and exclude the little man.

This bill will make necessary further use of machinery, reducing the labor load and labor employment, closing down the underprivileged because of his poverty and deny him the right to survive in a small independent enterprise and commit him to perpetual industrial vassalage.

Labor will shift to those paying a higher wage, compelling all employers to meet the scale or shut down. This bill will rest most heavily on the farmers, because it will increase the price of all he buys, all the costs of processing aggregating a considerable increase in prices, paid by him, while all that he produces and sells is sold on a world market over which he has no control and in which he has no voice.

We regard all this tendency is government as opposed to the fundamental American doctrine of free bargaining and free choice.

The Nation needs nothing so much as a breathing spell so that adjustments may be made to operate according to laws we already have. We believe that without further restriction or legislative intimidation our business could and would absorb most of the unemployed capable of work and willing to work.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, while I am on my feet I want to submit some observations, some of them very pertinent.

I am the last one—I was about to say on this side of the Chamber, but I cannot say that now, but I am the last one of the so-called Democrats—and I am a real Democrat—who came into the Senate at the time I did. Only one Member of this body has served longer continuously than I, and he is the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Since the War between the States the section to which I belong, by force of conviction and horrible and unfortunate circumstances, has been solidly Democratic. During all that long period we never were able, except when the Republicans for some temporary reason split, to elect a President of the United States. Through all the years we were fondly hoping that the time would come when we could elect an administration upon the principles of democracy which some of us cherished and in which we believed, and though defeated year after year and time after time, the solid South was never dismayed.

There were factors entering into the conditions prevalent in my section that did not exist elsewhere, and we were hoping that some time there would come into existence a Democratic administration which would fully realize the difficulties under which the South has labored all through the years and yet maintained her political integrity and faith.

In 1933 we thought the time had come when the problems and burdens peculiar to the South would be recognized, and her economic and social conditions so recognized as to give her an opportunity to express herself once again in the councils of the Nation.

What are some of the facts? I feel so intense about this matter, Mr. President, that it is difficult for me to approach the subject with any degree of so-called conservatism. Time after time, for miserable political reasons, there has been injected into this body, naturally from the other side of the aisle, what is known as an antilynching bill. Every Senator, every man decent enough to be a Member of this body, knew that the section to which I belong was faced with a problem that would try the stoutest of hearts. We had the problem of slaves, imported from an unfortunate place—unfortunate in the terms of comparative civilization—who became one of the causes of the war between the States. In a moment of hate and passion, engendered by the bloodshed incident to that war, there were written two amendments to the Constitution which in the years to come will stand as a monument to the extreme to which passion and hate can go. By a stroke of the pen an attempt was made to do what it took us hundreds of years to bring about in the type of civilization which we exemplified. By a stroke of the pen the majority of those totally unfit for the purpose were injected into the blood stream of American politics. We protested, and, be it said to the everlasting honor of those on the other side who introduced it, they did not attempt really to enforce it.

Every Senator present knows that the antilynching bill is introduced for no other reason in the world than a desire to get the votes of a certain race in this country.

The element of recognition of what is called the injustice done is present, perhaps, to the extent of less than one-half of one percent. There is not a man in the South worthy of the name of citizen—and millions there are worthy of that name—who is not as much opposed to mob murder as are the sacrosancts who introduce the measure, in the abundance of their desire to see their State purged of this blot.

What they desire to see is ballots put in the box to send them back here, in order—even though it humiliates a proud section of the country—that they may return home and say, "See what I did for you."

Year after year, the law-abiding citizens of my section of the South have resisted the tide of mob rule, and gradually have decreased it with all the power of court and public opinion, until, thank God, it is gradually vanishing. We have not attempted to go into other sections and demand that the innocent shall pay for the victims of racketeering. We have said, "Come and sympathize with us, but leave the jurisdiction of the law to us, who ourselves are struggling with a tremendous problem."

I shall have more to say about that matter when that blistering commentary on American politics, managed by men who claim to be white people—that blistering commentary on the depths to which a desire for election can sink an individual—again comes before this body.

Again, I said I thought our section would be amply provided for along all proper lines. In the first convention that met in Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Democrats, the cards were already stacked so that the renomination of the present President was practically a foregone conclusion.

What did the delegates do at that convention? They repealed the two-thirds rule. Every man here from the South knows that the only guarantee the South had of a voice in nominating our standard bearer was the two-thirds rule. The only voice the solid South had in saying who should be our standard bearer was in the two-thirds rule, the guaranty of some rights to the minority. It was abolished; and now it is possible for a very few of the great cities and the populous States to unite and ignore the southern vote. We had as well not send delegates to the national convention if the two-thirds rule is no longer to obtain.

Antilynching, two-thirds rule, and, last of all, this unconscionable—I shall not attempt to use the proper adjective to designate, in my opinion, this bill! Any man on this floor who has sense enough to read the English language knows that the main object of this bill is, by human legislation, to overcome the splendid gifts of God to the South. There is not a man here but knows that that is the object of the bill. I talked to a Senator on the floor of this body and said, "In the name of the God of justice, you are not going to vote for this bill, are you?" He said, "Yes; I am." I said, "Why?" "Why," he said, " all our cotton mills have gone South, and we want to get them back."

The cotton mills left old England because it was more profitable to manufacture cotton in New England. Then, after the paralysis of the war, when a little capital began to trickle into my devoted section, even shrewd New Englanders thought, "Well, the raw material is right there. Splendid water power is right there. Why should not I move my mill to a place where I will eliminate freight on the raw material and freight on the finished product? They have good ports out of which to export the finished product. They have good railroads that will transport it to the interior."

God did it. I did not. He gave us a climate that did not require very much clothing, and did not require very much heat during the winter, and where something edible grows the 12 months around, where the windows can be opened and healthy breezes can ventilate the factories; so the textile mills came South. It did not require as much to support either employer or employee in my section as it did in the less fortunate climates of the Northeast.

This bill proposes, by a process of higher wages and added expense, to counteract the handicap of the Northeast. There is not a man here who can deny it—not one. This whole bill, whether intentionally or otherwise, is based upon the principle of checking the inevitable rise of the South from the lowly condition in which the War between the States left it. With more than 70 percent of the standing timber of the Nation, with a varied production the like of which the world cannot exceed, from the Tropics clear up to the splendid breezes of our mountains, we can grow almost anything; and I had hoped we had grown a crop of patriots who could not be seduced or bought. But I found out, Mr. President, that we had two kinds of patriots in this country and down in my section as well. There were p-a-t-r-i-o-t-s—they are down to a pretty thin stand; and there are p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-s. God knows, they are as thick as fleas. [Laughter.] The p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-s have got us going.

I want to read a section of this bill. To think that such a proposal should be made here, in the House of what we thought were our friends, under the banner of that old name which in the horrible days of reconstruction and the first decade subsequent to that horrible war was our "pillar of cloud by day and fire by night", we patiently waiting for the time to come, in the gracious mercy of the Creator, when He would give us a Democratic administration! I want to read you one section of this patriotic proposal, and let every man who has sense enough to be out of St. Elizabeths listen. [Laughter.]

Whenever the board—

The board—

shall determine that any substandard labor condition exists in the production of goods in one State and that such goods compete to a substantial extent in that State with other goods produced in another State and sold or transported in interstate commerce, in the production of which such substandard labor condition does not exist, the Board shall make an order requiring the elimination of such substandard labor condition and the maintenance of the appropriate fair labor standard in the production of goods which so compete.

In other words, if South Carolina's living conditions are so kindly that it takes only 50 cents a day, for illustration, to enable one to live comfortably and reasonably, and in the New England States it takes a dollar and a half a day to buy the necessary coal and have windows in the houses so constructed that people will not suffer, then the wage in South Carolina shall be raised to a dollar and a half.

Why, in the name of common sense, do not some of these people call in God, and tell Him that He must stop this thing of making one section more advantageous than another section for the production of a given article? Why do we not bring Him down here and tell Him that it is a miserable crime to give one man more brains than another man? [Laughter.] But we are indicating to Him how He ought to run the universe, that our natural advantages must be wiped out; in the name of what? In the name of the fear that I will not have an opportunity to fill this seat again.

Who will dispute that? Of course Senators may get up and deny it, but everybody believes that I am telling the truth 100 percent. [Laughter.] The whole miserable, philanthropic, and eleemosynary spirit that seems to be the psychology of this body is nothing but a vote-getting project. You know it, and I know it. Why not face it? You may be able to force this thing on the South, but a false principle wrought into real life will work itself out in disaster.

Though the mills of God grind slowly,
Yet they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience He stands waiting,
With exactness grinds He all.

If I did not believe that I would not believe in God.

I have cited some instances to show with what tender care the party to which we have given allegiance for so long is treating the devoted section to which I belong. I cannot conceive how any man from the South or any honest man from the North can vote to support this piece of legislation. It used to be the boast of some of my colleagues here that in their youth they had to eat the hard bread of poverty and destitution; but the hardships of their youth became the golden ships of their manhood and mature years; the hard grilling of necessity was the gracious mother of their future success.
